JOURNAL

Part 1

OURSELVES

The best is yet to be

The last of life for which the first was made"—Browning.

A quarter of a century is about to expire since the Indian Cases was started and we crave the permission of our readers to pause for a moment and reflect on the progress that we have made so far and what we have still to achieve.

Though the administration of justice in India is under the control of a number of High Courts independent of each other, the law that is administered is—except with regard to a few local statutes and special customs—the same, and the usefulness of an All India journal to the legal profession and the unifying influence such a journal is bound to have on the development of the laws of India as a whole cannot be over-estimated. Attempts were made from early times to establish such a journal but the magnitude of the enterprise was so great that most of them failed. The honour of being the founder of the first successful journal of this kind belongs to Sir (then Mr.) Shahabuddin Chaudhri, the founder of the Indian Cases. From the year 1909 when the Indian Cases was started, for a period of about fifteen years Sir Shahabuddin Chaudhri edited the journal himself. The acute legal intellect, the untiring industry and the keen business instinct of Sir Shahabuddin had a marked effect. The Indian Cases steadily progressed till it acquired an enviable reputation for financial stability and accuracy of reporting.

The success of the Indian Cases attracted the attention of other publishers and these halcyon days soon gave way to an era of competition with rivals. Our subscribers are sure to be proud of the dignified attitude which we have maintained during this period of struggle in spite of provocations of various kinds.

The strong foundation upon which the Indian Cases is built has finally proved itself too strong to be shaken and we are now entering on the third stage of our career undistracted by business competition and with opportunities to expand our activities and to concentrate our attention in improving the quality of Indian Cases still further. Indian case law has become so voluminous that lawyers cannot reap the full advantages of even the best reports without additional facilities for reference and study. To meet this situation the Fortnightly Digest was started last year. With its quarterly and annual consolidated issues the Fortnightly Digest will greatly facilitate the work of reference. The study of the reports is a more difficult task. But much of this difficulty will disappear if it is once realized that, as Mr. Justice McCardie has observed in the address on Case Law which he delivered some time back, the proper method of studying case law is 'to get at the heart of case law, to grasp with clearness the main outlines of its history and to lay hold of its main principles'. To afford facilities to the legal profession in this direction we are now introducing a journal section in which the development of the law in its judicial, legislative, administrative, and literary aspects will be critically reviewed.

We take this opportunity of thanking our subscribers for their valuable support and of wishing them prosperity and long life.

The Hon'ble Sir S. M. Sulaiman, Kt., LL. D., Barrister-at-Law,
Chief Justice,
High Court of Judicature, Allahabad.

The appointment of Sir S. M. Sulaiman as the Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court will be received with great satisfaction throughout India. Sir Sulaiman joined the Allahabad High Court Bar in 1912 and rose to such eminence at the bar within a period of 8 years that in 1920, at the age of 34, he was appointed to officiate as a Judge of the High Court. He acted again as a Judge in 1921 and 1922 and was made a permanent Judge in 1923. As a Judge of the High Court his learning and independence have evoked the admiration of the Bench and the Bar alike. Sir Sulaiman's academic career was as brilliant as his subsequent career at the Bar and the Bench. He passed the Matriculation Examination in the first division, standing high in the order of merit. In the Intermediate he stood second, and in the B. A. he topped the list and won the State Scholarship. He took the Mathematical Tripos and the Law Tripos at the Cambridge University in 1909 and became an LL. D. of the Dublin University in 1911. We welcome the appointment of Sir Sulaiman and look forward to a long era of efficient and independent administration of justice in the United Provinces under the guidance of the new Chief Justice.

Though the High Courts of India were established so long ago as 1865 and there have been many European Chief Justices, this is the second instance in which an Indian has been appointed as a permanent Chief Justice. We are having promises every day of equal partnership and self-government for India. Let us hope that the British Government will not hereafter allow racial considerations to outweigh the claims of seniority and merit in the matter of such appointments.

Notes on Current Topics.

Supreme Court for India

There was an interesting debate in the Legislative Assembly on the motion of Mr. B. R. Puri of Lahore urging early steps to establish a Supreme Court for India. So long as the same law is administered throughout India, a Supreme Court is, in our opinion, a necessity. Even Imperial Statutes are interpreted differently by the several High Courts and the abnormal growth of Indian case-law and the conflict that prevails now in India on several points of law and practice are due to a great extent to the want of a Central Supreme Court. The existence of such a Court is bound to have a very salutary influence on the development of the law in India as a whole. We entirely agree with the remarks made by Mr. B. R. Puri and Sir Hari Singh Gour on the necessity of a further right of appeal in criminal cases. Under the Indian Evidence Act several kinds of evidence such as confession of a co-accused which are rejected as inadmissible in the systems of law followed by all civilised nations including the British are admissible, and many an accused person is convicted on the flimsy evidence of an approver or a co-accused. It is difficult to appreciate the spirit or the meaning underlying the Law Member's objection that the resolution, if given effect to, would abolish the Privy Council and create a mock Privy Council in India. The functions of the Supreme Court would be much wider and quite different from those of the Judicial Committee, and we are glad to find that the resolution has been passed by the Legislative Assembly by a large majority in spite of the Law Member's opposition.

The Punjab Governor Shooting Case.

Judgment has recently been pronounced by the Lahore High Court in Ranbir Singh v. The Crown (136 I. O. 19) in which three young men who had been sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge of Lahore for conspiring to murder the Governor of the Punjab, have been acquitted by the High Court. Apart from its political significance, with which we are not concerned, the case is of much interest to the legal profession. The first thing that strikes us is the importance of the right of appeal in murder cases. The case further reveals the highly irregular manner in which confessions are recorded in India. Though the Magistrate who recorded the confession of the accused in this important case was a retired District and Sessions Judge, and the accused was a school boy, the confession was recorded by the magistrate at a police station during a winter night, without informing the accused that he was a Magistrate and without putting any questions to him to ascertain whether the confession was made voluntarily. Their Lordships have rightly condemned this method of recording confessions. On the question whether a Magistrate recording a confession should record the questions put by him in order to ascertain whether the confession was voluntary and the answers given by the accused, their Lordships say as follows: "Counsel would have us go further and accept the view expressed in I. L. R. 52 Oal. 67 to the effect that the questions put and answers elicited in making the preliminary enquiry must be recorded. This we have already declined to do in 133 I. O. 55 and we adhere to the view there expressed and repeat that, provided the Magistrate satisfies himself by putting questions and hearing answers that the prisoner before him is making a voluntary confession, it is unnecessary for him to record the questions and answers, and it is sufficient if he complies with the letter of the law." The view of the Judges of the Oudh Chief Court in Prag v. Emperor (I. L. R. 6 Luck. 335; 128 I. O. 215) affords a striking contrast. The learned Judges (Raza and Nanavatty, JJ.) say: "It is with regret, with stern regret, that we note that Babu Bhagwati Prasad Sinha, the Deputy Magistrate, who recorded these confessions, has completely disregarded the standing order of Government as to the method in which confessions ought to be recorded. Paragraphs 852, 853 and 853-A of the Manual of Government Orders, Vol. I, lay down definite rules in this matter for the guidance of all Magistrates throughout British India.....As pointed out by Government in Para. 853 A of the Manual of Government Orders quoted above, it is the Magistrate's duty to satisfy himself in every reasonable way that the confession is made voluntarily; and it is further the imperative duty of the Magistrate to record those questions and answers by means of which he has satisfied himself that the confession is, in fact, voluntary. It is only by recording those questions and answers prior to taking down the story of the accused that the Magistrate recording the confession furnishes data which enable the Court of Session and the High Court or the Chief Court to arrive at the same conclusion as that to which the recording Magistrate has come as regards the voluntary nature of the confession. Without supplying these data or materials it is impossible for the trial Court (i. e., the Court of Session) or for this Court to form any estimate as to the voluntary nature of these confessions. The Court of Session or this Court cannot merely accept the ipse dixit of the Deputy Magistrate recording the confession as to its being voluntary. The genuineness of the confession and the fact of its being voluntarily made are matters which are within the exclusive province of the Court of Session and of this Court and neither the Court of Session nor this Court can blindly accept the ready-made opinion of the recording Magistrate on these points without having before it materials from which it could arrive at an independent opinion on these crucial questions on which the fate of the accused hangs." (Italics are ours). These observations have been quoted verbatim and entirely approved in a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court by Mears, C. J., and Sen, J., in Emperor v. Sambhu decided on November 2, 1931 and reported in 135 I. O. 838. The better view is undoubtedly that laid down by the Calcutta High Court which has been followed and re-iterated with great emphasis by the Oudh Chief Court and the Allahabad High Court.

The Privy Council on protracted examination of witnesses.

In India, especially in the mofussil, examination of witnesses is more protracted than in England. When witnesses are examined on commission, owing to the absence of an authority having a power to rule out irrelevant questions, the length of the examination often assumes intolerable proportions. In Raj Kumar Sen Chowdhury v. Ram Sundar Shaha (136 I. O. 102) two instances of this abuse came to the notice of the Judicial Committee. In one of the cases the examination of a witness took up 226 pages of the record and contained 1250 questions. In the other, the cross-examination of a pardanashin lady lasted for a hundred days. Their Lordships condemn this practice in these strong terms: "In their Lordships' opinion it is imperative that an abuse of this kind which enormously increases the costs of litigation without any corresponding benefit to the parties, should be checked, and it would appear to be clearly within the powers of the High Courts to direct an enquiry with a view to disciplinary action in flagrant cases which come under their notice at the hearing of appeals."

Executor's title before taking out probate.

There was a divergence of opinion between the High Courts of Madras and Bombay on the one hand and the High Court of Calcutta on the other, on the question whether under the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, the estate of the deceased vests in his executor before probate is taken out. The conflict has now been set at rest by the Judicial Committee in K. Venkatasubbamma v. K. Ramayya (136 I. O. 111) decided on the 12th of January. Their Lordships have held in this case that the opinion of the Madras and the Bombay High Courts, namely, that the estate vests from the date of the testator's death even though probate has not been obtained is 'undoubtedly the right one'. Under the English law the title of an executor is derived from the will itself and not from the probate though it is the probate alone which authenticates his right and in their Lordships' view the Indian Legislature has not departed from this principle.

Contribution between joint tort-feasors.

Some aspects of the law relating to contribution between joint tort-feasors have recently been mooted in the High Courts of India. Lord Herschell refused to extend the doctrine laid down in Merryweather v. Nixan [(1799), 8 T. R. 186] to Scotland on the ground that it was not 'founded on any principle of justice or equity or even of public policy' and since the date of this decision the harshness of the doctrine has been tempered in England by limiting it to wilful and conscious wrong doing. In Yegnanarayana v. Jagannath Rao (135 I. O. 711) Madhavan Nair, J., discusses the question whether the rule in Merryweather v. Nixan as modified by the subsequent decisions and now followed in England should be followed in India, and answers the question in the affirmative. As his Lordship says, "Surely, the plea that there is no justice or reason behind the rule cannot be urged against the modified form of the rule in Merryweather v. Nixan." This view is supported by the decision of the Patna High Court in Mahabir Prasad v. Darbhangi Thakur (51 I. O. 697; 4 P. L. J. 486; 1919 Pat. 239) and it may now be taken as settled law in England as well as in India that if an act is manifestly unlawful or the doer of it knows it to be unlawful, he cannot maintain an action for contribution or indemnity against the liability which results therefrom. The second point that has been discussed is whether an express promise to indemnify for the commission of such act is enforceable. In England it has been held that such a promise is void and this view has been followed by Madhavan Nair, J. This is more or less a corollary of the first proposition. Another important aspect of the rule, namely, whether the fact that a judgment had been obtained against the wrong-doers makes any difference, has been discussed very recently in Parbhoo Dyal v. Dwaraka Prasad (135 I. O. 837). Mukerjee and Bennet, JJ., of the Allahabad High Court have expressly decided the question in the negative. Their Lordships say: "Speaking for ourselves, we do not see any distinction that can properly be drawn in principle between a case where a joint liability has been liquidated without a suit and where a joint liability has been established by a suit, and the judgment has been liquidated by one of the parties." But there is direct authority to the contrary in the dictum of Lord Watson in Palmer v. Wick (1894 A. C. 318) and in the decision of Mahmood, J., in Ram Prasad v. Arja Nand (1890 A. W. N. 161) and the law on this point must be regarded as still unsettled.

Appeal from decree based on award where validity of reference is challenged.

The recent decision of the Lahore High Court in Rala Ram-Walaiti Ram v. Bansilal Jagan Nath (136 I. C. 11) throws much light on the vexed question whether an appeal lies from a decree based on an award where the validity of the reference itself is impugned. In Durga Charan Deb Nath v. Gangadhar Deb Nath (130 I. C. 137) the Calcutta High Court held that an appeal lies where there is no valid reference and in a subsequent decision, Golnuri v. Abdusumad (130 I. C. 209), there was a difference of opinion between the Judges. In the Allahabad High Court the earlier view was that no appeal lies in such a case but the decision in Tej Singh v. Gasi Ram (102 I. C. 236) has thrown some doubt on the point. In the judgment of Shadi Lal, C. J., in Rala Ram-Walaiti Ram v. Bansilal-Jagan Nath the case law on the subject and the history of the Legislature are discussed in detail and his Lordship concludes as follows:—"The above survey of the case law leaves no doubt that the preponderance of judicial authority is clearly in favour of the view that no appeal lies from a decree made in accordance with an award, and that it is immaterial whether the validity of the award is challenged on the ground of the illegality of the procedure of the arbitrator or on account of the invalidity of the reference which constitutes the foundation of his authority. This view receives support from the history of the legislation on the subject and from the rule attaching finality to a decision based on an award made under the supervision of the Court." We hope that the Calcutta High Court will reconsider its decision in Durga Charan Deb Nath v. Gangadhar Deb Nath (130 I. C.

137) and refer the matter to a Full Bench when the question next arises for decision.

Appeal from order granting review.

In Das Keshav v. Kasabasappa (94 I. C. 591; 27 Bom. L. R. 1446; A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 121), it was held by the Bombay High Court that the general right of appeal given in O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), Civil Procedure Code, against an order granting an application for review was not controlled by O. XLVII, r. 7 which lays down the grounds on which such orders could be objected to. This decision was dissented from by the Madras, Calcutta, Allahabad, Rangoon and Lahore High Courts. The Chief Court of Oudh has also very recently disagreed with the view of the Bombay High Court and followed the view of the other High Courts, in Bankey Behari Lal v. Abdul Rahman (135 I. C. 695; 8 O. W. N. 1267). In his exhaustive and lucid judgment in Sikandar Khan v. Buland Khan (I. L. R. 8 Lah. 617; 107 I. C. 596), Tek Chand, J., has exposed the fallacy underlying the decision in Das Keshav v. Karabasappa and this decision of Tek Chand, J., which has been approved in all the subsequent cases has practically put an end to the conflict which was raging on this subject.

Points in everyday practice.

(1) An adjustment out of Court after the passing of a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit cannot be recognised by the Court in proceedings to pass the final decree. (33 C. L. R. 138.)

(2) In the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction the moffussil courts have the right to review and to entertain applications for setting aside ex parte orders. 49 M 935 dissented from. Ayyasami Chetty v. Official Receiver (135 I. C. 750).

(3) Where no notice is given to the decree-holder of the fact of a deposit under the decree, and the decree does not contain any special direction as to the mode of payment the decree-holder is entitled to interest up to the date when he has notice and to the costs of execution bona fide taken out: Rangpur Bank Ltd. v. Hesabuddin (135 I. C. 799).

Notable Dicta in Recent Cases.

'If any of His Majesty's subjects are clever enough to avoid taxation by legal means they are at liberty to do so; there is nothing wrong in so conducting one's affairs within the law as not to attract taxation.—Beaumont, C. J., in In re Bai Sakinboo [34 Bom. L. R. 100.]

"As it lies on the prosecution to prove the case against the accused, if this has not been done, it is not legitimate to draw any inference against the accused based on a criticism of the defence—Munroe, J., in R. v. Barwick [136 I. O. 5.]

"There seems to be a fatal attraction about conspiracy and gang cases and it is perhaps not always realised how difficult it is to prove them. Speaking generally, the police would usually be well advised to proceed with the substantive cases and to leave the gang cases alone."—Harrison, J., in Surjan v. Crown [136 I. O. 77]

Extracts from Contemporaries.

Shooting at a Judge.

It is not only in India that a Judge may be shot at. Missiles of various kinds have on various occasions, happily rare, been thrown or fired at occupants of the Bench in England.

Jessel, M. R., experienced, if he did not indeed enjoy, the distinction of being fired at by a clergyman, the Rev. H. J. Dodwell, whose mind had been unhinged by his troubles. The story was duly told to the Magistrate at Bow Street. Mr. Dodwell believed that he was entitled to certain property. His claim was stated in a petition of right, heard and dismissed by Malins, V. C. Jessel, M. R., upheld the Vice-Chancellor's decision. Thereafter for many days Mr. Dodwell haunted the Rolls Court for the purpose of making applications which could not be entertained. He came at last one day with a pistol concealed on his person. As the M. R. was ascending the steps of the Court, Mr. Dodwell fired at him point blank and missed. Sir George showed no sign of perturbation, refused Mr. Dodwell's card, which that gentleman politely offered, and calmly took his seat.

The Usher, Mr. Hayes, was the sole witness of the attempt on Jessel's life, and gave his evidence before the Chief Magistrate. Mr. Dodwell's only correction of the evidence offered against him was that he had not stated to the constable that Sir George Jessel had "did" him. He could not have said that, he declared, proudly observing that he was a man of education—The Law Journal.

Decline of the Bench.

The reason is simple and natural; the best men cannot and will not accept a post which brings so poor a reward as compared with what they can earn by remaining at the Bar. The Bench will then attract only the dubious and the second-rate, and prestige must suffer. The best Judges that England has produced belong to that period when a reasonably adequate salary, and fixity of tenure, had been established. And why, I ask for the third time, have they cut the judicial salaries so drastically in the days of reduction when in the days of increase and inflation they never augmented them by a penny?

Because of their prestige, their dignity, their patriotism and/or their pride the Judges will not agitate their grievances or strike or make use of the simple weapons of passive resistance and ca'nanny. They have indeed, it is said, indicated their views to Lord Sankey, who will do what he can to bring the matter to the Governmental ear. But it is a sad business that the Judges should, however indirectly, have to ask the Executive for a restoration of their emoluments. It places the judiciary in an invincible position of inferiority. These salaries were fixed by solemn and direct enactment of Parliament and ought never to have been altered save by the same means.—The Law Journal.

Necessity of training in Advocacy.

Mr. Justice Rigby Swift, speaking at the annual dinner of the Birmingham Law Students' Society, said he had long held the opinion that it was not enough to teach boys the law. If they were to be made advocates, they ought to be instructed in the mysteries of the greatest of all the arts. Nobody became a great surgeon without being taught how to conduct an operation; and no one became a musician without hours of practising. "But day after day", said the Judge, "the law students of this country are sent into court as full-blown barristers or solicitors, to conduct cases as advocates in an art in which they have never had the slightest training."—The Law Journal.

Recent Legislative Measures.

Hindu Widows' Right of Inheritance Bill.

Mr. Sarda moved for reference of the Hindu Widows' Inheritance Bill to a Select Committee. The Law Member (Sir B. L. Mitter) pointed out the various defects in the Bill and doubted if draftsmen in the Select Committee could do much with the Bill as it stood. He said it was not clear whether the Bill dealt with sonless widows or widows with sons, that it ignored testamentary rights and that he could not in fact discover any principle in the Bill. The House divided and rejected Mr. Sarda's motion. The status of widows under the Hindu Law requires considerable modification and the rejection of the Bill as a whole is to be deplored. We hope that a Bill in an improved form will be introduced in the assembly to ameliorate the condition of Hindu widows.

The Indian Companies Amendment Bill (No. I of 1932)

The Indian Companies (Amendment) Act (Act XIX of 1930) provided that a firm whereof 'the partners all hold auditor's certificate' may be appointed by its firm name to be auditor of a company. It was brought to the notice of the Government that the wording of the amendment excluded firms which had foreign partners who did not possess Indian auditor's certificate and the Act was kept in abeyance. This Bill has been introduced to remove this defect.

The Employers and Workmen (Disputes) Repealing Bill (No. II of 1932).

The Royal Commission on Labour which had invited opinions regarding the utility of the Employers and Workmen (Disputes) Act, 1860, reported that the Act had everywhere ceased to be used and recommended the entire repeal of this obsolete Act. This Bill is intended to give effect to that recommendation.

The Indian Partnership Bill.

The Report of the Select Committee on the Indian Partnership Bill has been published. The Committee propose that the Act should come into force on the 1st October 1932, and a year later. The main alterations which the Select Committee have made in the Bill are the following: The provision that the books of a firm shall be kept at its place of business has been removed and the clause is now confined to declaring the right of each partner to have access to all the books of the firm; as regards liability for fraud, cl. 14 (f) has been so amended as to make the liability to indemnify for fraud absolute and not subject to contract; the right of a minor to have access to the books of the firm has been confined to account books; the rights and liabilities of a minor partner when he attains majority are worked out in greater detail; provision has been made that a minor partner should be required to give public notice on attaining majority whether he elects to become or not to become a partner and that he shall be deemed to continue a minor until he gives notice or until the expiry of six months. There are some amendments of the clauses relating to registration of firms. An important change has been made in cl. 71 (a) by requiring that all public notices shall be published in the Gazette and in a local vernacular newspaper. [The other bills that have been introduced will be considered in our subsequent issues—Ed.]

Notes of Recent English Cases.

Banking—Alteration of Cheque—Materiality—Pay X or Order—Fraudulent addition of 'per Y' after X—Endorsement by Y—Payment by Bank—Liability.—The plaintiffs drew a cheque on the defendant Bank in favour of J. P. & Company and handed it over to O. P. a partner of the plaintiffs' Solicitors' firm with instructions to deliver it to J. P. & Company. There was some space in the cheque between the payee's name and the words "or order". O fraudulently added the words 'per O. & P.' after the payee's name, endorsed the cheque 'O. & P.' and paid to a bank to the account of a company of which he was the director. The cheque was credited to the latter bank by the defendant bank and debited to the plaintiffs' account.

In an action by the plaintiffs: Held, that the plaintiffs in leaving a space after the payee's name did not commit any breach of duty of a customer to his banker and as the defendant bank had paid on an irregular endorsement, the bank was liable to the plaintiffs. Held, further, that the plaintiffs were not liable as principals for the fraud of O, as O was not acting within the scope of his authority but fraudulently. [(Wright, J.) Slingsby v. District Bank Limited (Manchester) (1931) 100 L. J. Ch. 665.]

[This decision has been recently affirmed by the Court of Appeal in Slingsby v. District Bank, Limited. Scrutton, L. J., Greer, L. J., Romer, L. J.,]

Company—Director—Vacation of office—Verbal notice—Master and servant—Termination of service. Where the Articles of Association of a company provided that the office of a director shall ipso facto be vacated if by notice in writing to the company he resigns his office, and a verbal notice of resignation given by the director was accepted by a resolution of the company: Held, that there was a valid notice which vacated the office of the director. Where a written contract for service has been made for service which requires a notice on either side before it can be terminated, it can be terminated by word of mouth by mutual agreement between the parties: (Bennet, J.,) Latchford Premier Cinema Ltd, v. Ennion and Paterson: (1931) 100 L. J. Ch. 397.

Company—Proxy—Voting in person without revoking proxy—Validity of vote. Where the Articles of Association of a company provided that a vote given in accordance with the terms of an instrument of proxy will be valid notwithstanding the previous death of the principal or revocation of the proxy unless notice of revocation had been received at the office of the company before the meeting: Held, that every proxy was subject to an implied condition that it should only be used if the principal was unable or found it inconvenient to attend the meeting and a proxy-giver was entitled to vote personally at the meeting even though he had not given notice of revocation: [Lord Hanworth, M.R., Lawrence, L. J., Romer, L. J.] Cousins v. Int. Brick Co. (1931) 100 L. J. Ch. 404.]

Income Tax—Exemption—Bodies established for charitable purposes.—The Institution of Civil Engineers is a body established for charitable purpose only within the meaning of s. 37, of the Income-tax Act 1918, and is therefore exempt from the payment of Income-tax. Institution of Civil Engineers v. Rev. Commissioners, (1931) 100 L. J. K. B. 705.

THE LEGAL ASPECT OF LITERATURE.

(CONTRIBUTED.)

The lawyer's profession calls for a perfect understanding of human character and a skilful use of such knowledge. He can find in literature, drama, poetry or fiction, as in an encyclopedia, that learning which he cannot hope to gather from his own limited experience of men and things that chance may enable him to observe at close range.

This learning has been sought, possessed and valued by all great Advocates. Referring to the value of literature to lawyers, Mr. Frank J. Loesch, Esq., President of the Chicago Bar Association in an address to the students of the University Law School said:—"Read the literature of human nature.....To my mind Balzac is the greatest Judge of human nature, after Shakespeare. I think I learned more of human nature (outside of my own experience) from Balzac than I have from any other author except Shakespeare. I recall especially Eugenie Grandet, the history of a miser. I have read that book two or three times, and this is how it profited me afterwards. I was retained in a very serious case of fraud. I studied the party on the other side. I made up my mind, that, if ever there was a miser out of the pages in literature, that was the man and that Grandet was his literary father-in-law. I studied Eugenie Grandet again, and then I attacked that opponent. It was an eight years' task. But the image of Grandet helped me to hound that man, so that at the end of eight years there was not anything left but his hide. The greatest admirer of my work in that case was that man's own lawyer, but he will not give me credit for having any legal acumen. He maintained that I knew all the facts beforehand. Yet, the truth of the matter was that I did not. I drew the bill before I had the facts. I merely judged the man's character from what I had read of Eugenie Grandet. That experience was to me a life-lesson.

"Let me allude also to another case, one that nearly broke me down with the mental and physical strain. I had bought every printed trial I could find on that particular subject. I had a year to prepare for the actual trial of the case. There were very eminent lawyers on the other side. I will not mention names for the parties are living. But I did not receive from all these books as much light as I did from a certain classical novel, one that characterized exactly the plaintiff's object and put that party in the lime-light. With that aid I was able to follow all the ins and outs of his manoeuvres, and finally to win the case. It was a work of fiction that guided me to a right solution of that person's character, and a knowledge of his character that was essential to victory.

"Still another lesson I now recall which I learned from reading a lesson I shall never forget. It related to a gentleman by the name of Gil Blas. Gil had various and sundry adventures, and among others he was made secretary to the Archbishop of Toledo. The Archbishop said to him one day: "Gil, I look upon you as a very likely young man, I like your intelligence and acumen. Now I am getting old. I have to preach once a month. Make it your duty to let me know when you see any failing signs in my mental powers. I will trust you as a friend to tell me about it." So Gil noted the character of the sermon the next month. Then he heard the ensuing sermon; and he thought the Archbishop showed signs of age and senility. At the third sermon he was more satisfied of this, and the fourth was shockingly significant. He complimented the Archbishop on the first sermon, and spoke fairly of the second but of the others he did not. The Archbishop asked, 'Now, Gil, what is the truth?' Gil said: 'Your Eminence, your mental powers are failing rapidly'. 'Gil', responded the Archbishop, 'I find that I am mistaken in your acumen. The treasurer will pay you,—and you will leave the house'. I have never forgotten the moral of that story. Such incidents in literature add to your knowledge" (1).

And so the best literature—drama or poetry, philosophy or fiction must always be an arsenal for the lawyer.

"A lawyer without history or literature is a mechanic, a mere working mason; if he possesses some knowledge of these he may venture to call himself an architect." These were the words of Sir Walter Scott, put into the mouth of Mr. Pleydell—the most attractive of all the lawyers in the Waverley Novels.

"In order to be equipped for success in the profession to day a man must not only be a fairly good lawyer, but he must be a 'man of affairs' and he must also be a man of wide reading. Mere law reading, nothing but law reading, for a young man is bad. His mind gets into a groove and he becomes what is called a 'mere lawyer'. In the House of Commons or in Halls of the Legislature which, after all, often reflects the National feeling, a mere lawyer has no chance of getting forward; he is scarcely listened to. It would therefore be necessary for lawyers to endeavour to become cultured men, and, to do that, they must read the best authors. There is a lamentable want among the young men and women of to-day in that they never read the best novels and dramas or the ancient classics. We can imagine no better way for a man to educate himself as a practical and successful lawyer than by reading the Waverley Novels and the works of Dickens. He would find there beautiful descriptions of scenery, things that would enlarge his mind, and he would amass a store of reflection and recollection, and when the time for action comes those novels would recur to him again and again, and become a fine storehouse of instruction and inspiration. Some of the best English lawyers have been great students of Shakespeare."

Sir Edward Coke has left us his opinion, that some knowledge of literature and of every science and art, is not only useful, but even necessary to a lawyer:—"If it be asked, of what arts and sciences a knowledge is necessary for a full knowledge and understanding of our laws, I answer that since not only laws, but also all arts and sciences are subjects of jurisprudence, I not only do not exclude any art or science, but I consider a knowledge of every one of them not only useful, but even essential to a lawyer."

It is said that the "sparks of all the sciences in the world are taken up in the ashes of the law." The administration of justice has received its full share of the benefits conferred upon mankind by the development of science. One of the earliest missions of the electric telegraph was to consign a murderer, in hot fight from his prostrate victim, to a deserved scaffold. Scarcely had Tawell quitted the fearful presence to be borne from it, as he imagined, to a place of safety, with speed unknown to former years, than his fight was overtaken by a few words passed along the unsuspected wire, and the Ministers of Justice were awaiting his arrival. Another remarkable instance was afforded recently by the discomfiture of a daring impostor, laying claim to large estates, by means of elaborate fraud and perjury. He had tendered himself as a witness in his own cause, tried at the Gloucester summer assizes, in the year 1853, and was writhing under a powerful cross-examination inflicted by Sir Frederick Thesiger, since Lord Chancellor, when the electric telegraph unexpectedly enabled him to put a question which, so to speak, suddenly blew up the whole fabric of forgery and falsehood. The cross-examination had been pointed to a brooch and seal on which a name and alleged family arms were engraved, furnishing, if genuine, strong proof that the claimant was what he represented himself to be. The examination in chief having commenced on the preceding day, was fully reported in the newspapers on the ensuing morning, and came under the notice of a seal engraver in Oxford street. He instantly communicated by telegraph to the defendant's Attorneys, the fact that he had himself not long before, engraved the brooch and seal for the claimant, whose case was, that they had been given to him by a friend of his pretended mother, as part of their trinkets fifty years before the trial. The verdict was at once, amidst a scene of much excitement, entered for the defendants; and the plaintiff, consigned immediately to the hands of justice, was afterwards tried, convicted of forgery, and transported for life." (2).

No better advice was ever given to an ambitious lawyer than that given by Chitty, who advised him to "Study mankind so as to be able to detect under every semblance, the exact character of every individual with whom he is to have transactions in business...and devote your leisure hours to the study of literature and science, psychology, pathology, surgery, chemistry, medical jurisprudence and police."

Thomas Emmet was admitted to the Bar in the Supreme Court of the State of New York in 1805. The following incident in his professional career furnishes food for thought as to how far a lawyer can use his knowledge picked up from the study of fiction to advance his client's interests in the case.

"A journeyman saddler in New York who, by his industry and economy, had accumulated a few hundred dollars in money, resolved to establish himself in business in an adjacent village. After securing a situation for a shop, he returned to the City with about 200 dollars to purchase his stock. He put up at one of the public houses, and confiding in the integrity of the landlord, gave the money into his hands for safe-keeping till he should call for it. He then traversed the City in search of a favourable chance to purchase his stock, and after finding one that suited him, he returned to his quarters and called for his money."

"Your money," said the landlord, "you put no money into my hands."

"He had no evidence of the fact, and finding all his efforts to induce his host to give up the money were fruitless, the desponding and indignant saddler repaired to Mr. Emmet for counsel.

"After hearing a statement of the facts, and taking such measures as satisfied him that the saddler was a man of the strictest integrity, he rebuked him for putting his money into such hands without evidence; 'But' said he, 'if you will do as I tell you, I will obtain your money for you.'

"The saddler very readily promised a strict obedience to his directions.

"Well," said Emmet, "go back to the landlord and tell him when no one is present that you owe him an apology—that you have found your money and were mistaken in supposing that you put it into his hands; you will then return to me."

"The saddler did so, and the landlord expressed great satisfaction at the discovery of the mistake. Mr. Emmet then gave the saddler 200 dollars and told him to go and deposit it in the hands of the landlord, but before you enter the house, procure some gentleman of respectability to go in and call for a glass of beer, and request him then to take his seat and carelessly pass away the time in reading the news etc, till you arrive. You will then enter the room and in his presence tell the landlord you now wish him to take the 200 dollars for safe keeping till you call for it."

"This done, the saddler again returned to Mr. Emmet who directed him 'to continue his lodging at the house for two days, and be regular at his meals; and then, while no other person is present tell the landlord you will take back your money.' This the saddler did, and the unsuspecting landlord without hesitating immediately refunded the money, which the saddler restored to Mr. Emmet, who directed him to take a good witness with him, and go and demand the 200 dollars 'which you delivered in his hands for safe keeping in the presence of the gentleman who called for the beer.'

"The saddler accordingly proceeded to the house, in company with another person and demanded his money.

"Your money," said the astonished landlord, "I have just handed it to you."

"No, Sir," replied the saddler, "I have not received my money and if you refuse to deliver it to me, I shall take measures to obtain it."

"The landlord dared him 'to do his best'; and Mr. Emmet immediately instituted a suit against him in favour of the saddler. The landlord, finding himself outwitted, paid over the money, with 20 dollars as costs". (3).

It is said of Mr. William Beach, "one of the noblest Advocates that ever practised in the American Bar" that his father, a well-to-do tradesman in Saratoga, New York, gave William a good education in the academy, and his admission to the Bar was considerably later; for the old gentleman had peculiar notions of how Beach should pursue his studies.

After spending something over a thousand dollars on the young man's education he questioned him of his future plans and prospects, of what he wanted to do for a living. The young graduate had not the faintest notion of law at that age, and replied that he did not know. "I want you to be a lawyer," said the father decidedly. The young man hung his head, and replied. "How can I get a library?"

He was an early lover of books and fishing, and kept up both for a life-time. "I'll hire you," said the father, "If you'll work faithfully and obey orders for the first year or so, and you will have a stated salary 'and enough' to buy books when the time comes."

"I will do it," said William; and accordingly he was furnished with a Bible, a copy of Shakespeare and Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress", and sent to live with a farmer uncle in the mountains some twenty miles away. It was some days and weeks before he became interested in the Bible (each book was to be read three times thoroughly and notes made of it); but the young man became interested, fascinated, and charmed by each volume. He mastered them, and received with this victory a splendid vocabulary.

He was still diffident, and when he commenced practice he was timid and ungraceful. Still he had ideas in his language, quaint illustrations, strong sentences, little words, and clearness in putting things. The boys would say, "Let's go down and hear Gus Beach plead a case"; and they would first go out of curiosity; but they would turn away, charmed by the little things he had said, and later they would change the saying to,

(3) Donovan's Modern Jury Trials.

"Let's go and hear young Beach speak." And so, by degrees he grew to be a fine reasoner, an attractive speaker, and late in life had a charm about all his speeches that was almost irresistible. (4).

Gray says very truly in a letter to his friend West, who could not force his inclination to like the study of the law and to dissuade him from being disgusted with its dry and unentertaining elements, "It is strange, if, among all that huge mass of words there be not something intermixed with thought. Laws have been the result of long deliberation, and that not of dull men, but the contrary; and have so close a connection with history, nay, with philosophy itself, that they must partake a little of what they are related to so nearly."

There is yet another use of literary works for lawyers and laymen alike. They teach a great deal of law in simple and interesting stories. Legal text books do not, as such, always afford pleasant reading to others than lawyers. But even a layman may learn a great deal of law in a very agreeable way by reading novels. Thus, in Ten Thousand a Year, you find the old action of ejectment with all its fictions and prolixities, fully described; the plot of Felix Holt turns upon a base fee, and George Elliot obtained professional advice upon her book before it was published. In Cesar Biottear, Balzac explains in detail the French Law of Bankruptcy; while in other books forged wills and murder trials of the most thrilling sort abound. Sometimes these legal novelists may not be very accurate in their law, but on broad outlines they rarely err. Shakespeare's plays are crammed with legal allusions; and Sir Walter Scott who was a lawyer by profession and a well-read lawyer too, made good use of his legal learning. Nothing of the kind is more amusing than his account the great case of Peebles v. Planestanes in 'Redgauntlet' while 'Anne of Geierstein' is worth reading for the sake of the Vehmgericht. (5). The works of Dickens abound in law and lawyers. We shall deal in the course of this article with the way in which Dickens treated law and lawyers in some of his famous novels.

In reading Dickens's description of law and lawyers we must bear in mind that, first and last, his aim was to ridicule satirize and caricature all that he disliked and despised, and he saw much in the law and lawyers of England in his days dislike and despise.

Novelists and dramatists have always a strong tendency to exaggerate lights and shadows and the resulting pictures are marked by caricature and burlesque. Caricature, the humorous exaggeration of characteristics, is always popular, for every one likes to see every one else ridiculed, and burlesque renders any subject ludicrous by an incongruous manner of treating it. So when a talent like that of Charles Dickens for caricature and burlesque is turned loose upon the unpopular profession of the law, the result is highly edifying to the laity." Dickens was not a very learned lawyer, and one may very much doubt, if he ever seriously read any law at all. Dickens's knowledge was not derived from the printed page of legal text books, but from what he saw and heard.

Dickens's practical experience of the law was decidedly unpleasant. "In 1844 Vice-Chancellor Knight-Brace granted him an injunction against some literary pirates who published limitations of his 'Christmas Carol' and 'Martin Chuzzlewit' Although successful, he had to pay the costs, an incident which he might have considered very funny had it happened to another. When another case of piracy occurred, he wrote to his Counsel, Talfourd: "It is better to suffer a great wrong than to have recourse to the much greater wrong of the law. I shall not easily forget the expense and anxiety and horrible injustice of the Carol case, wherein, in asserting the plainest right on earth, I was really treated as if I were the robber instead of the robbed."

It was doubtless his own sentiments which he expressed in the 'Battle of Life', which he wrote soon after.

"Nothing serious in life", said Mr. Snitchey, of the law-firm of Snitchey & Oragge, as he peeped into his blue bag. "What do you call law?"

"A joke," replied the doctor.

"Did you ever go to law?", asked Mr. Snitchey, looking out of the blue bag.

"Never," returned the doctor.

"If you ever do", said Mr. Snitchey, "perhaps you'll alter that opinion."

Snitchey the solicitor naturally took a professional view of the law. "Take this smiling country as it stands. Think of the laws appertaining to real property; to the bequest and devise of real property; to the mortgage and redemption of real property; to leasehold, freehold and copy-hold estate; think," said Mr. Snitchey, with such great emotion that he actually smacked his lips, "of the complicated laws relating to title and proof of title, with all the contradictory precedents and numerous Acts of Parliament connected with them; think of the infinite number of ingenious and interminable Chancery suits to which this pleasant prospect may give rise, and acknowledge that there is a green spot in the scheme about us."

"The one great principle of the English Law," says Dickens in 'Bleak House', "is to make business for itself. There is no other principle distinctly, certainly, and consistently maintained through all its narrow turnings. Viewed by this light, it becomes a coherent scheme, and not the monstrous maze the laity are apt to think of it. Let them but once clearly perceive that its grand principle is to make business for itself, at their expense, and surely they will cease to grumble."

'For fees to any form they mould a cause;

The worst has merits and the best has flaws.

Five guineas make a criminal to-day.

And ten to-morrow wipe the stain away.'

Dickens like other great writers, has been responsible for several salutary reforms in the laws of his country. To take one out of several such instances, he more than another, was responsible for the change in the method of executing death sentence on condemned criminals.

"Executions were in his days public and, up to very recent times, were attended by, people of fashion. Boswell, Johnson's biographer, had a great taste for that sort of thing. On one occasion, he records, he saw six executed at Tyburn; on another, fifteen at Newgate. The solemn procession to Tyburn had been abrogated in 1783, much to Boswell's disgust, and Dr. Johnson observed: "The age is running mad. Men are to be hanged in a new way. The old method was most satisfactory to all parties, the public was gratified by a procession, the criminal was supported by it. Why is all this to be swept away?" The celebrated George Selwyn never missed a hanging without some legitimate excuse. When Hackman was executed for the murder of Miss Ray, the Earl of Carlisle wrote Selwyn an account of it, and added, "Everybody inquired after you". Selwyn made a trip to Paris to see Damien broken on the wheel for attempting to assassinate Louis XV. He displayed so much interest that he was asked by a French nobleman if he were a hangman. "No, Sir", was his reply, "I have not that honour; I am only an amateur."

Charles Lamb wrote to a friend in Paris: "Have you seen a man guillotined yet? Is it as good as hanging?"

But times and tastes have changed. In 1849 Dickens saw the two Mannings, husband and wife, executed on the wall of Horse-monger Lane Jail, and, like a true-born Englishman, sat down quickly and wrote a letter to the Times, advocating a change, which was finally effected, in or about 1868. (6)

One of the best law reforms with which the name of Dickens is associated is the avoidance of the great expense and inordinate delay, which were inseparable incidents of Chancery suits in the first half of the 19th century.

The law's delays have been the subject of several satirical attacks by Charles Dickens in many of his novels.

"A bill in equity, in those days, was not the innocent document which with us bears the name, but a much more formidable instrument. In the first place, it was very lengthy. After the caption and names of the parties came the stating part, in which the plaintiff stated the facts of his case; then a general charge of confederacy against the defendants and divers other persons then unknown. This was originally inserted in order to lay ground for amendment by adding other parties to the bill, but soon became a mere form. The next was the charging part of the bill, in which were set out anticipated defences, which were then denied or avoided in order to ground interrogatories. Then, after an averment that the plaintiff had no remedy at law, came the interrogatories propounded to the defendant, with prayers for relief and process. As the costs were in proportion to the length of the pleadings, it will be readily seen that the solicitors had every temptation to prolixity. Thus, a witness testified before the Chancery Commission of 1852: "If I draw a document of 120 folios, I get £6, and if I compress that into 30 folios I get only 30 shillings. In fact the worse the business is done the better it is paid for,"—a folio being about fifteen lines of six words each (7).

(7) Testimony of Henry Lake, First Report, Chancery Commission, 1852, App. A. page. 180.

It frequently happened that the defendant's answer rendered it necessary or advisable to amend the bill, adding fresh interrogatories which called for a further answer. Sometimes the plaintiff would designedly refrain from making his bill full in the first instance and file what was called a fishing bill, and then on the answer coming in, would avail himself of its averments to frame his amendment. This was called "scraping the defendant's conscience." (8).

As the defendant very frequently filed a cross-bill against the plaintiff to scrape his conscience, and there were continual opportunities for exceptions, and references to a Master and appeals, it will easily be seen that by the time the parties' consciences had become thoroughly scraped, the proceedings had become unconscionably complicated.

Again, the rules of the Court required that every person having any interest, no matter how theoretical, remote or contingent, must be made a party, and this added enormously to the expense, and also to the vexation of suitors. Many a man whose interest was, as a practical matter, nothing, would be made a defendant, and, fearing to disregard the suit, would be obliged to employ Counsel. Forster, Dickens's biographer, mentions a case of a legacy of three hundred pounds. There was but one defendant in reality but seventeen according to the technical rule, and, after two years, it was discovered that an eighteenth should be added, and the suit begun de novo, after costs had been incurred of over eight hundred pounds. This case Dickens worked up in 'Bleak House' as the story of Gridley, "the man from Shropshire."

The testimony in a Chancery case was not oral, but taken in writing by commissioners or examiners. The party examining prepared his questions in writing, and the other side cross-examined if he chose, and questions were propounded to the witnesses by the examiner. This method was most unsatisfactory, tedious, and expensive. A witness before the Chancery Commission testified that in one case, where bill had been filed against the directors of a bank to hold them liable for its debts, the expense of obtaining the testimony of one witness was over eight hundred pounds. The witness observed that "the tremendous expense expedited a compromise (9)."

(8) Testimony of James Chalmers, Chancery Commission, 1826 pages 165—166.

(9) Testimony of S. B. Toller, 3rd Report, Chancery Commission, 1856 p. 38.

Then every party had to take office copies of every paper filed or at least pay for them, on penalty of incurring the displeasure of the officials.

Then the delay caused by appeals was something of which we can have little idea at this time. In 1811 a Scotch solicitor testified before the Committee on delays of suits in Chancery: "I know that there has been a great increase of appeals and I know that appeals are entered, many of them, only for the purpose of delay. There was a remarkable instance of it this session, to prevent a person paying one thousand pounds into Court; it was in the House of Lords seven years. I had orders to withdraw the appeal as soon as it should be called on, and when it came to the last moment I took it away upon paying the costs." (10)

In 1824 a witness before the Chancery Commission spoke of the "Heart-sickening delays" in appeals, and mentioned one important case, appealed from the Master of the Rolls to the Chancellor, which remained unheard for nearly six years (11).

Well might poor, crazy Miss Flite say so often: "I expect a judgment. Shortly. On the day of judgment."

Litigated or contentious suits, we all expect to be somewhat protracted. But when all the parties to the suit simply want their rights determined by the Court, it seems cruel to prohibit them. Yet this was what the Court of Chancery did by making no distinction between contentious and merely administrative business. The disputes which arise over the interpretation of a Will, the settlement of accounts, and, in short, the thousand and one things which the modern Courts, attend to every month, would, in England, under the old practice, be the subjects of bills in equity, with all their delay, expense, and vexation of spirit; as, for example where a trustee filed a bill merely to obtain the direction of the Court in the execution of the trust, or to have the terms of an obscure Will construed by the Court, or where a creditor was required to make formal proof of his claim—all these proceedings assumed the cumbrous and expensive character of hostile suits (12).

In 1855 it was said before the Chancery Commission that it took the Registrar six months merely to settle the decree in the settlement of an intestate estate where some of the children had been advanced. It only required somebody to do it "who understood figures," but there was "nothing that any man of business might not settle in two or three hours." (13)

Then when the decision of the Chancery suit involved a preliminary determination of the legal rights of the parties the Chancellor generally considered himself bound to direct an issue to a Court of law, or take the opinion of the law Judges. He was concluded to be sure by neither, but took this course to assist his conscience, and it need hardly be said that it was a proceeding which did not speed the cause nor lessen its expense.

In one case, where the contest involved the determination of who were the next of kin, the Master of the Rolls heard the case for three days, and then directed an issue. The case was tried for two days, and then the Master of the Rolls, dissatisfied with the verdict, directed a new trial. The Master of the Rolls was again dissatisfied, but no further trial was awarded, for the very simple reason that the fund of five thousand pounds was just sufficient to pay the costs (14).

How Bentham lashed the whole system. "Equity!", he claims, "Equity! It is a term of derision, a cruel mockery. Is it a remedy? It sweetens like sugar of lead; it lubricates and soothes like oil of vitriol." And in another place he says "The parties unheard of and unthought of, pave their way through the offices like half-starved flies crawling through a row of spiders."

The evils of the Court of Chancery were not confined to the mother country. It spread to some of the Colonies that borrowed its law and legal procedure from England. In some Colonies the supplanted procedure was even worse than the parent stock. According to Parke's "History of the Court of Chancery", the Court of Chancery in the island of Montserrat, West Indies, had several times been represented as a public nuisance; and, he says, "the tornado which periodically interrupts the sittings of the West India Courts of Chancery is the only temporary relief of the islanders from the visitation of equity."

Here is an inimitable description by Charles Dickens of the progress of a Chancery suit in the early part of the 19th century.

"Jarndyce and Jarndyce drones on. This scarecrow of a suit has, in course of time, become so complicated that no man alive knows what it means. The parties to it understand it least; but it has been observed that no two Chancery lawyers can talk about it for five minutes, without coming to a total disagreement as to all the premises. Innumerable children have been born into the cause; innumerable young people have married into it; innumerable old people have died out of it. Scores of persons have deliriously found themselves made parties in Jarndyce and Jarndyce without knowing how or why; whole families have inherited legendary hatreds with the suit. The little plaintiff or defendant, who was promised a new rocking horse when Jarndyce and Jarndyce should be settled, has grown up, possessed himself of a real horse, and trotted away into the other world. Fair wards of Court have faded into mothers and grandmothers; a long procession of Chancellors have come in and gone out; the legion of bills in the suit have been transformed into mere bills of mortality; there are not three Jarndyces left upon the earth perhaps, since old Tom Jarndyce in despair blew his brains out at a coffee-house in Chancery Lane; but Jarndyce and Jarndyce still drags its dreary length before the Court, perennially hopeless.

"Jarndyce and Jarndyce has passed into a joke. That is the only good that has ever come of it. It has been death to many, but it is a joke in the profession. Every Master in Chancery has had a reference out of it. Every Chancellor was "in it" for somebody or other, when he was Counsel at the bar. Good things have been said about it by blue-nosed, bulbous-shoed old benchers, in select pot-wine committee after dinner in hall. Articled clerks have been in the habit of flashing their legal wit upon it. The last Lord Chancellor handled it neatly, when, correcting Mr. Blowers the eminent silk gown who said that such a thing might happen when the sky rained potatoes, he observed, "or when we get through Jarndyce and Jarndyce, Mr. Blowers;"—a pleasantry that particularly tickled the maces, bags, and purses. * * *

Here is a bit of how the proceedings were conducted in the Jarndyce case.

Thus in the midst of the mud and at the heart of the fog, sits the Lord High Chancellor in his High Court of Chancery.

"Mr. Tangle," says the Lord High Chancellor, latterly something restless under the eloquence of that learned gentleman.

"My Lord," says Mr. Tangle. Mr. Tangle knows more of Jarndyce and Jarndyce than anybody. He is famous for it—supposed never to have read anything else since he left school.

"Have you nearly concluded your argument?"

"My Lord, no—variety of points—feel it my duty to submit-ludship", is the reply that slides out of Mr. Tangle.

"Several members of the bar are still to be heard, I believe?", says the Chancellor with a slight smile.

Eighteen of Mr. Tangle's learned friends, each armed with a little summary of eighteen hundred sheets, bob up like eighteen hammers in a pianoforte, make eighteen bows, and drop into their eighteen places of obscurity.

"We will proceed with the hearing on Wednesday fortnight," says the Chancellor. For the question at issue is only a question of costs, a mere bud on the forest tree of the parent suit, and really will come to a settlement one of these days.

"The pages of 'Bleak House' do not disclose the details of the great case of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce, although, as the book was professedly written to show up the iniquities of the Court of Chancery, and is spun out to more than a thousand pages, surely a few might have been spared to give the reader a definite idea of what the case was about. It does appear, however, that the question was how the trusts under the Jarndyce Will were to be administered, and that, while the costs were steadily increasing, the value of the estate was steadily decreasing. "It was a street of perishing blind houses, without a pane of glass, without so much as a window frame, with the bare bland shutters tumbling from their hinges, and the iron rails peeling away in flakes of rust; the chimneys sinking in; the stone steps to every door (and every door might be Death's Door) turning stagnant green." Meanwhile, the legatees were reduced to poverty, and everybody had to have or pay for copies of cartloads of papers, and all hands went down the middle and up again through such an infernal country dance of costs and fees and nonsense and corruption as was never dreamed of in the widest visions of Witch's Sabbath."

"The parties in a case are made to say, "And nothing ever ends. And we can't get out of the suit on any terms, for we are made parties to it, and must be parties to it, whether we like it or not."

So Tom Jarndyce committed suicide from despair. "For," said he, "it is being roasted at a slow fire, it's being stung to death by single bees, it's going mad by grains."

All these evils of Chancery were well known, well recognized by the Government of the day and had been exposed over and over again in judgments of courts. But where the Blue Books and the Law Reports in which the evidence was contained, could find one reader, Dickens's 'Bleak House' would find a myriad. Even Parke's "History of the Court of Chancery," one of the most interesting law-books ever written, does not attract the casual reader. Nothing stirs the public conscience so well and so deep as a study of the system in the pages of 'Bleak House'.

Even before Dickens's 'Bleak House' came to be widely read a Parliamentary Commission was appointed with Sir Romilly, then Attorney-General as President, and as a result of its labours Acts were passed in 1853 which made most important alterations in the method of taking evidence, substituted printed bills for engrossed bills, simplified rules as to joinder of parties, gave the Chancellor full power to determine questions of law, substituted salaries for fees, and abolished many useless expenses and offices. (15).

In his preface to 'Bleak House', Dickens wrote: "As it is wholesome that the public should know what has been doing, and still is doing in this connection, I mention here that everything set forth in these pages concerning the Court of Chancery is substantially true, and within the truth."

The ravages of law on the fortunes of the litigant are not even to-day a thing of the past. Only a few weeks ago we saw in the daily papers, the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in disposing of a long pending suit remarked in much the same words as Charles Dickens that the purpose of the whole proceedings seemed to be nothing else than to incur costs in the litigation and to create business and provide profit for lawyers. Scott's picture of Peter Peebles can very well be applied even to-day to many a suitor who seeks his fortune in Courts of Law.

Peter Peebles was called poor Peter, because he was "a suitor in forma pauperis a worn-out litigant, half crazed by fifteen-years' experience in the Courts with a new Solicitor every year.....he wished he had a new coat as regularly—broken down with poverty and drink, the laughing stock of the Courts, and yet proud of his notoriety, as the best known litigant in Edinburgh. When asked for his occupation he said, "If I am laird of naethin else I am aye a dominus litis"—i. e. laird of a lawsuit.

We will close this little article with the following remarks made by an eminent Judge in an address delivered by him before an assembly of English lawyers: "Whether Advocates, Judges or text writers we are fast becoming case lawyers, and yet we instinctively feel that this is not the highest type. When we wish to recall great legal names they are rather Hardwicke, Mansfield, Marshall, Webster, O'hat, Story, John and Campbell and not the lawyers that have won cheap victories and amassed great fortunes by mere citation of cases on point. The great Advocates, whose names are enshrined in the pages of history were not case lawyers,—but people that dwelt on principles, with ever-widening horizons. I think the antidote of our tendency to study law only as an art is to be found in remembering that it is also a science and in the study of its literature, its origin and its history" (16).

Notes on Current Topics.

The Consultative Committee and Supreme Court for India.

The question of establishing a Supreme Court for India was taken up for consideration by the Consultative Committee of the Round Table Conference on the 29th February. The Federal Structure Committee had recommended that the Constitution Act should prescribe the jurisdiction and the functions of the Supreme Court and that the Federal Legislature should be given the power to adopt those provisions of the Constitution Act if it should think fit to do so. The discussions in the Consultative Committee centered round the precise interpretation to be put on these recommendations. The Committee have agreed on the following points: First, that the intention of the Federal Structure Committee was that there should be a single Court which would sit in two divisions and not two separate institutions. Secondly, that the salaries of the Judges of the combined Federal and Supreme Court should be a little higher than those of the Judges of the High Court, and that the exact figure might be fixed by a clause in the Constitution Act. The Committee were further of opinion that the Supreme Court should be invested with jurisdiction to act as a Court of criminal appeal for the whole of British India, the right of appeal being however confined to capital sentences. We think that the opinion of the Consultative Committee that it is unnecessary to have two separate Courts and that the Supreme Court should be invested with power to act as a Court of criminal appeal will meet with general approval but its jurisdiction in criminal matters should not be so restricted.

The exact scope of the powers of the Supreme Court in civil matters does not seem to have been discussed. In our view the powers of the Supreme Court in the matter of appeals from the High Courts should be more comprehensive than those of the Judicial Committee and the Supreme Court should be invested with the power to settle all conflicts of opinion that arise between the several High Courts.

Civilians as High Court Judges.

The Legislative Assembly has adopted the resolution moved by Sir Hari Singh Gour that the Chief Justice of a High Court of India shall be a Barrister, Vakil, or Advocate and not a member of the Indian Civil Service. The resolution as it stands, whatever may be its merits from other points of view, is unfair. It would be a travesty of justice indeed if impartial justice based on claims of seniority and merit is not meted out to those who have been presiding over the highest Courts of Justice and without committing grave injustice how can the claims of the seniormost Judge be overruled because he belongs to a particular race or community or because he is a member of the Indian Civil Service and a junior Judge be promoted over his head because he happens to be a Barrister or Advocate? If any sort of exclusion of civilians is to be imposed it should be done at a much earlier stage.

While we are not in favour of Sir Hari Singh Gour's resolution, we are entirely in sympathy with the principle underlying it. Though it is not difficult to mention the names of some eminent civilian Judges, it cannot be denied that, as a rule, an early training in law and association with the traditions of the Bench and the Bar are bound to have an effect on the growth and development of the judicial mind which service on the executive side, however long, cannot produce. The proper time, however, to work out this principle is when it is proposed to transfer an executive officer to the judicial side.

The Privy Council on winding-up proceedings in India.

Though the actual decision of the Judicial Committee in Ripon Press and Sugar Mills Company, Limited v. Gopal Chetty (136 Ind. Cas. 114) is not of much importance, we would invite the careful attention of the High Courts of India to certain observations which their Lordships have made in this case on winding-up proceedings in India. With regard to delay in the disposal of winding-up proceedings their Lordships observe as follows:

"The petitioners appealed to the High Court by notice dated the 17th November, 1922. For some unexplained reason the appeal was not disposed of until the 13th November, 1924, nearly two years later. There were no new materials placed before the Appellate Court to account for this loss of time which would not have been possible in England where winding-up appeals are placed in an interlocutory list in order to be beyond any such risk. Their Lordships hope that this case is, in this, as in so many other respects, exceptional, but this delay ought to have weighed with the learned Judges in reaching a decision. The difficulties created by a winding-up order in November, 1924, with effect from 1st May, 1922, which so soon became manifest in the liquidation might have given them pause. It does not appear that these difficulties were even present to their minds." (p. 119)

The next point on which their Lordships have laid great emphasis is the necessity of care and caution in making orders for winding up solvent companies on the application of persons having no substantial interest in them and against the wishes of the majority of the shareholders. The practice of passing summary orders on important matters on ex parte summons at the instance of the liquidator is also condemned. Referring to certain orders of this nature, their Lordships say:

"It is to be hoped that orders like that of the 14th November, 1928, will not in future be lightly made in the course of an Indian winding-up." (p. 121) and again,

"their Lordships cannot refrain from expressing the hope that in liquidation proceedings in India matters of such importance will not normally be so summarily disposed of." (p. 124)

Their Lordships further point out that it is the duty of the Official Liquidator in winding-up cases not to identify himself with either of the parties but to maintain a position of complete impartiality. Their Lordships conclude with the following remarks:

"What they find themselves faced with at the end of the day is a winding-up order made two years after its presentation upon a petition which ought never to have been presented, for, even if not merely vindictive and malicious, the petition was merely without proved merits. They find also that the winding-up order has in the liquidation been succeeded by series of orders off hand in form and on the face of them at all events made without full consideration of all relevant circumstances. Lastly, their Lordships find a liquidation in being which if carried on as it has been begun, can, as they forecast it, end in nothing for the contributories but a call of all the unpaid capital to provide for payment of the costs and expenses." (p. 124)

Though the order for winding-up was made in this case on entirely insufficient grounds, their Lordships held that it would be 'a calamity to all concerned' to set it aside as four years had elapsed since the date of the order. This case reveals the harmful consequences of delay in winding up proceedings and the necessity of framing rules for the quick and proper disposal of winding-up proceedings on the lines of the English Rules.

Marginal Notes.

It was laid down in Claydon v. Green [(1868) 37 L. J. O. P. 256], that marginal notes could not be used in the construction of Acts of Parliament and their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balraj Kanwar v. Jagat Pal Singh, [26 All. 393] observed as follows: "It is well settled that marginal notes to the section of an Act of Parliament cannot be referred to for the purpose of construing the Act. The contrary opinion originated in a mistake and it has been exploded long ago. There seems to be no reason for giving the marginal notes of an Indian Statute any greater authority than the marginal notes in an English Act of Parliament." Mr. Justice King of the Allahabad High Court has in a very able judgment in Ram Saran Das v. Bhagwati Prasad, (I. L. R. 51 All. 411; 113 Ind. Cas. 442) described how the practice in India differs from that of the House of the Commons in this respect and has held that in India marginal notes can properly be regarded as giving a contemporanea expositio of a meaning of the section when the language of the section is obscure and ambiguous. It would be interesting to note that the old rule laid down in Claydon v. Green is losing currency and becoming a matter of imperfect obligation in England also. Reference was made very recently to a marginal note to a section of an Act of Parliament in Vauxhall Estate Limited v. Liverpool Corporation, (1931) 95 J. P. 224. The current view in England seems to be that it is permissible to look at a side-note, not as enacting anything, but a throwing some light on the meaning of the section itself, though as one of our learned contemporaries has observed "old fashioned lawyers may shake their heads about such a lapse, as they might regard it, from the proper standards of interpretation."

The Law of Tender.

There is an interesting discussion in a recent decision of the Madras High Court, Arunachalam Pillai v. Govindaswami Chettiar (135 Ind. Cas. 907), of the question whether in order to stop the running of interest a tender before suit must be followed by payment into Court. The general rule of the common law and the long standing practice in England was that there must be payment into Court. In India this principle was applied in Haji Abdul Majid v. Haji Noor Muhammad (1. L. R. 16 B. 141) and referred to with approval by the Calcutta High Court in Boyle Chand Singh v. Moulard (1 L. R. 4 C. 572) and Jagat Tarini v. Nabha Gopal (1. L. R. 34 C. 305). But in a later decision of the Calcutta High Court, Gajendra Narain Maiti v. Sita Nath Das (1926, 90 Ind. Cas. 637), doubts were thrown upon the applicability of the rule to India. The learned Judges held in this case that in the absence of any provision in the law of contract or in the law of procedure applicable to Indian Courts it cannot be laid down as a binding rule of law that if a tender is not followed by a deposit in Court it is ineffectual to stop running of interest. In a subsequent case decided in 1928, Rakhal Chandra v. Baikunthanath (117 Ind. Cas. 687, 32 C. W. N. 1032) the Calcutta High Court has explained and adopted the principle though without referring to the earlier decision of 1926. Waller and Pandolai, JJ., after discussing the point with reference to principles and authorities and distinguishing cases under s. 84, Transfer of Property Act, have expressly held in the recent Madras case that 'the later Calcutta decision is more in accord with precedent and the reason of the thing'. The authority of the decision in Gajendra Mohan Maiti's case is considerably shaken by the later decisions of the same Court and we think we may now take it as settled law in India that in order to stop the running of interest in the case of ordinary money claims, tender must be followed by payment into Court. As their Lordships say:

"A debtor who is required to keep his tender good must when he is sued, certainly understand that the debt is being demanded through the Court and as he must be able and willing at any time after tender to pay it on demand he can demonstrate his ability and willingness after the matter has come to Court only by bringing the money into Court. Although in the abstract it is possible to argue that though the defendant has not deposited the money in Court and so placed his ability and willingness beyond question, he may be able to prove by other evidence that he was always ready and willing to pay the debt, to accept that argument would be to introduce much uncertainty into a test which is simple and conclusive and which has been accepted and acted on by the Courts in England and India for a very long time."

Interpretation of s. 211, Penal Code.

In a series of decisions beginning with Empress of India v. Putam Rai (1. L. R. 5 A. 215) and ending in Burkuttulla v. Sadhokalwar, (17 Ind. Cas. 791) the Allahabad High Court had consistently held that in order to constitute an 'institution of criminal proceedings' within the meaning of s. 211, Penal Code, a criminal prosecution should have taken place. Though a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court had in Karim Bakhsh v. Queen-Empress (1. L. R. 17 Cal. 574) taken a different view, the Allahabad High Court refused to change its opinion. The view of the Calcutta High Court was followed by the Madras and the Patna High Courts in preference to that of the Allahabad High Court. In the recent case of Emperor v. Johri, (136 Ind. Cas. 277), however, King & Bennet, JJ., have completely altered the trend of the rulings of the Allahabad High Court. After discussing the matter in detail, Bennet, J., concludes as follows: "The Allahabad ruling in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar, (1834, 1. L. R. 16 A. 14) has, therefore, been considered and dissented from by three other High Courts and in one case dissented from by a Bench of five Judges. The weight of authority is, therefore, heavily against the ruling in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar. The reasoning contained in the rulings of the other High Courts is clear and cogent. I, therefore, consider that we should follow the rule of the other High Courts and hold that making of a false charge to the Police of a cognizable offence is the institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211, Indian Penal Code." The long conflict that prevailed on the point has thus been finally set at rest.

Summary powers of Court under the Guardians and Wards Act.

On the question whether under the Guardians and Wards Act the Court has power to compel the guardian to pay into Court sums found due on investigation by the Court, there has been some conflict between the several High Courts. The Calcutta High Court, the Madras High Court and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind hold the view that the Court has no such power. The Allahabad High Court has taken a contrary view. The point was recently discussed in the Lahore High Court by Shadi Lal, C. J., in Arar Singh v. Gurbax Singh (136 Ind. Cas. 2), and Addison, J., in Fakir Muhammad v. Bhari (136 Ind. Cas. 3). Their Lordships have followed the view of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts and dissented from that of the Allahabad High Court. In the latter case Addison, J., observes that 'the question does not appear to have come directly before this Court', but we find, on the other hand, that the question was well discussed and decided in the same way in two earlier cases of the Lahore High Court, namely, in Hakim Rai v. Khandi Bai (1930, 126 Ind. Cas. 785; A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 420) and in Sadhu Singh v. Mehr Singh (1931, 130 Ind. Cas. 779; A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 68; 31 P. L. R. 965). But the fact that Addison, J., has come to the same conclusion independently of the earlier decisions only enhances the value of the decision. The weight of authority against the correctness of the decision in Sita Ram v. Govindi (I. L. R. 46 All 458; 10 Ind. Cas. 592) is becoming stronger day by day and we hope the Allahabad High Court would reconsider its decision and refer the question to a Full Bench when it arises for decision again.

A 'novel' procedure.

We find in The Municipal Board, Etah v. Asghari Jan, (1932) A. L. J. R. 117, a glaring instance of the abuse of the power of the Court to issue a commission. The question in issue in this case was whether the plaintiff was a public prostitute. The Municipality found that she was, and dismissed the suit. On appeal the Additional District Judge passed an order to the following effect: "As the question largely hinges on the point whether the chief business of plaintiff is public prostitution or her chief business is singing and dancing as an art, so in order to decide this point, it is necessary that some one who is an expert in this art should be examined. The expert should see the girl's singing and dancing and then should give his evidence before this Court. The expert's fee will have to be paid by the plaintiff. Mr. A. A. Jilani,

M.A., LL. B., Vakil, is present in Court. He says that he can work as an expert. I appoint him as an expert. He should have the performance of singing and dancing of the girl at some place and give evidence before this Court on February 23, 1929." The qualification of the expert was that he had been regularly hearing the singing of dancing girls since 12 years, that he was acquainted with a large number of public prostitutes and had many opportunities of mixing with them. The commissioner "invited the best educated singers of the city to hear the singing and to help him as assessors", got a performance of music made, "took help from the assessors, and weighed their opinion with his opinion in forming the opinion about the art of the plaintiff." He gave evidence that in his opinion the plaintiff was 'a tolerably fair singer and knew her art', that she was 'a trained girl in the art of music and not an ordinary public prostitute', that a girl who is habituated to promiscuous cohabitation like a public prostitute can in no way possess a melodious and sustained voice and that from this he was of opinion that the plaintiff was not a public prostitute. The Additional District Judge acted upon this evidence and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not a public prostitute. The judgment reads more like a passage from a novel of Dickens or a satire of Addison, than a report of the proceedings of a judicial tribunal. Their Lordships have characterised the procedure adopted by the Additional District Judge and the nature of the evidence adduced as 'novel and startling' and it is a great relief to think that such instances are happily too rare to spoil the fair name of the administration of justice in India.

Ill-considered proceedings against Legal Practitioners.

Proceedings against legal practitioners for professional misconduct are now-a-days becoming too common and the note of caution which the Allahabad High Court has given to the Subordinate Courts against initiating proceedings in haste has come at a most opportune time. The principles which should guide the Subordinate Courts in such matters are laid down in this case by the Court (Boys, Banerjee and Niamatullah, J. J.) in the following words: "We cannot however, leave the matter at that without putting on record our view that the Magistrate was unduly hasty in making that complaint. It is right and proper that all judicial officers, high or low, should keep a vigilant eye on the conduct of legal practitioners, of whatever status, who are all ministers of the Court and should in proper cases institute inquiries under the Legal Practitioners Act or make complaints under the Bar Councils Act according to the status of the legal practitioner concerned, but legal practitioners are one and all of whatever status, entitled also to the protection of the Court, and inquiries should not be instituted or complaints made without giving very grave consideration to the reasonable probability of the case against the legal practitioner being well-founded. As much injustice may be done to a legal practitioner by ill-conceived proceedings against him as may be done to the public interest and to the general body of legal practitioners by failure to keep a vigilant eye upon and take proper strong action against cases of misconduct. It is manifest that permanent and undeserved harm may be caused to the reputation of any legal practitioner against whom ill considered proceedings are taken. We say advisedly "ill-considered" proceedings. It is equally the bounden duty of every judicial officer to initiate proceedings where he has upon grave consideration, reason to believe there has been misconduct as it is to refrain from ill considered proceedings and vice versa."

Points in everyday practice.

Inherent powers.

Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, is not applicable to the dismissal of an application to set aside a sale under O. XXI, r. 91, Civil Procedure Code, but the Court has inherent jurisdiction to restore such an application if good cause is made out. Dwarka Das-Babu Ram v. Vaish Flour Mill, (136 Ind. Cas. 283.)

Interest.

Having regards to the terms of s. 34, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has power to award interest after suit, whether claimed specifically in the plaint or not. Chathurbhuj Tulsiram v. Ambarsing Harji (34 Bom L R. 1240; 136 Ind. Cas. 186.)

Alteration of charge.

Section 231, Criminal Procedure Code, is mandatory and if a charge is amended the accused must be given an opportunity to recall witnesses who may have been examined irrespective of whether the alteration is material or not. Nagendra Nath Sen Gupta v. Emperor, 136 Ind. Cas. 136.

Insolvency.

The Insolvency Court is the only Court which can determine the questions raised under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and to decide them and the parties cannot be referred to the Civil Court. Hridaya Krishna Adya v. Osmanali Mandal, 136 Ind. Cas. 143.

Ex parte decrees.

High Courts have power to grant an injunction restraining execution of an ex parte decree pending an appeal from an order refusing to set aside such decree. (Ourgaenver, J) Govinda Rajulu Naidu v. Imperial Bank, 35 L. W. 168.

Recent Legislative Measures.

Indian Finance Supplementary Amendment Bill No. 3 of 1932.

The object of this Bill is to enable the assessments of incomes exceeding Rs. 1,000 but not exceeding Rs. 1,999 to be carried out expeditiously and economically with the minimum of labour and inconvenience, by reintroducing the provisions of the Income Tax Act of 1918, s. 30, with one exception namely that the assessment notice is now to be served personally. The Bill reserves the option to accept the summary assessment or to claim assessment on a return according to the usual procedure.

The Indian Air Force Bill, No. 4 of 1932.

This Bill is intended to provide for the discipline of the officers and men of the Indian Air Force which is expected to come into effect in 1933. The Government have adopted the course of introducing a self-contained Air Force Bill following the general outline of the Indian Army Act. The material of the Bill is drawn from the Indian Army Act and from the British Air Force Act.

The Sugar Industry Protection Bill No. 5 of 1932.

The object of this Bill is to provide for the fostering and development of sugar industry in British India by temporarily increasing the import duty leviable on sugar and to amend the schedule of the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, so as to carry out this object.

The Wire and Wire Nail Industry Protection Bill, No. 6 of 1932, and The Bamboo Paper Industry Protection Bill, No. 7 of 1932.

These Bills are intended to protect Wire and Wire nail Industry and Bamboo Paper Industry by imposing a temporary protective duty on Wire and Wire nails and imported pulp, respectively, as recommended the Tariff Board. The latter bill was introduced on the 3rd February, and was referred to a Select Committee. In their report, the Select Committee have added a provision to exempt the proposed duty from the operation of the surcharge imposed by the Finance Supplementary Act, 1931.

The Wheat Import Duty (Extending) Bill, No. 8 of 1932.

The Workmen's Compensation (Amendment) Bill, No. 9 of 1932.

Since the coming into force of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, a number of modifications were suggested by various authorities and interests. These suggestions were referred to the local Government for opinion and to the Royal Commission on Labour who submitted a report making several recommendations. The Bill is intended to give effect to their recommendations. Many sections of the Act of 1923 are substantially altered.

The Indian Income Tax (Amendment) Bill, No. 10 of 1932.

The statement of objects and reasons recites that the procedure for the levy of Income-tax at present followed in India is antiquated and summary and places an undue power in the hands of the assessing authorities who have been given the final right of hearing the so-called appeal of the assessee. The Bill is intended to remove the most glaring defects in the method of assessment and its control, by bringing the assessors under some popular and judicial control. The most important provisions in the Bill are (i) that the Income-tax authorities shall act with the concurrence of three or more assessors and (ii) that all appeals against assessments shall lie to a Court connected with the assessing department. In associating the Income tax authorities with assessors and providing for appeals to the Civil Court, the Bill follows the principle of the English Tax Act and it deserves the general support of the rate payers of this country.

Bankruptcy—Principal and Surety—Rule against double proof.

F guaranteed advances by B to a limited Company. F became insolvent, and the Company was ordered to be wound up. The liquidator proved against F's trustee for monies due by F to the Company and B proved for monies due from F as surety. B also proved against the Company for monies advanced to the Company which had been guaranteed by F. The Court held, that F's trustee was not entitled to set off against the liquidator the contingent liability of F on his guarantee and the trustee admitted the liquidator's proof for the full amount, and declared and paid an interim dividend to B but claimed to retain the dividend payable to the liquidator in order to make good the dividend paid to B.

Held, that the trustee was bound to pay the whole of the dividend to the liquidator inasmuch as retention by the trustee of the dividend payable to the liquidator would infringe the rule against double proof. (Luxmore, J.) Fenton In re, Deed of Arrangement Trustee v. Fenton Textile Association, Ltd., (1932) 101 L. J. Ch. 1).

Interest—Unreasonableness.

In determining whether interest is excessive or a transaction is harsh and unconscionable the Court may consider among all the circumstances the fact that the borrower himself had never suggested that the interest is excessive or the transaction is harsh and unconscionable and that he has not appeared and does not defend the action or asked for any relief. It was held that the interest 160% per annum was not excessive though very high. (Swift, J.), Parkfield Trust Ltd., v. Dent (1932) 101 L. J. K. B. 6.

Income Tax—Income from shares in Company—Mode of calculation for purposes of sur-tax—Deduction at the source.

For purposes of sur-tax the income which an assessee receives from shares in a Company in any year is the sum actually paid to him by the Company added to the amount deducted for income-tax at the standard rate for the time being. The income should not be calculated by adding to the sum actually paid to him a sum calculated from that actually paid by the Company as income-tax during the same year, and proportionate to the assessee's interest in the Company, inasmuch as the Company is entitled under the rules to deduct from the dividends the tax appropriate thereto and the expression tax appropriate thereto means the tax calculated at the rate prevailing at the date of the payment of the dividend, that is, appropriate to the dividend. (Lord Hanworth, M. R., Lawrence, L. J. Romer, L. J.) Hamilton v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, (1931) 100 L. J. K. B. 693 (O. A.)

Income-Tax—Theatrical actress entering into contract of employment—Mode of assessment—Meaning of employment.

'Employment' as used in the Finance Act, 1922, s. 18 (1) means something analogous to an office or post as opposed to a mere engagement in the course of carrying on a profession. Therefore, where an actress enters into contracts of employment with theatrical firms she can be assessed only as following her profession of an actress and cannot be assessed as exercising certain employments under the particular engagement which she has made. Notes on Current Topics.

The English Bar Council Report.

Though the theme of professional ethics is well worn, now and then practical difficulties on which different views might reasonably be held arise. In the last report of the General Council of the English Bar some questions of general importance have been answered. The Council has expressed its opinion that members of the Bar should not write articles for, or give interview to, newspaper representatives with regard to pending cases, nor regarding cases where the time for appeal has not expired. The Solicitors' Journal doubts the propriety of this rule and says that "a barrister in respect of cases under appeal should not have less freedom of comment than a layman and that criticism of the law laid down by a judge if properly made should surely be allowable at any time and it is not likely that the judges in the court of appeal would be unduly influenced if they read it." The position of a barrister is much more responsible than that of a layman. He is an officer engaged in the administration of justice and his opinion is bound to have a greater influence, whether for good or bad, and it is not proper to claim for a barrister the same latitude as for a layman. Again, granting that the assumption that such comments are not likely to influence the judges is correct, the fact that our judges may be too strong to be influenced is no excuse for making such comments. Ex parte comments are bound to prejudice the minds of the public and create a want of confidence in the administration of justice and should be avoided. We may refer our readers in this connection to Art. 20 of the Code of Ethics of the American Bar Association which runs as follows:

"Newspaper Discussion of Pending Litigation :—Newspaper publications by a lawyer as to pending or anticipated litigations may interfere with a fair trial in the courts and otherwise prejudice the due administration of justice. Generally they are to be condemned. If the extreme circumstances of a particular case justify a statement to the public, it is unprofessional to make it anonymously."

To the question whether a barrister could appear for a creditor in a bankruptcy petition when he himself was also a creditor of the bankrupt, the Council replied that as a general rule it is undesirable for a barrister to appear in a matter in which he is himself pecuniarily interested. It was, however, a matter for counsel individually to determine when they may properly make exception to the general rule.

The question whether an ex-Indian Judge could practise in the Privy Council was also considered by the Council of the English Bar and in its report it has recorded the opinion that in the absence of any objection or question raised by the Indian Government, India Office or Board of the Privy Council, generally or in a particular case, there is no objection to an ex-Indian Judge practising before the Board of the Privy Council.

Law of Negligence : Theory of fantastic possibility.

The House of Lords has recently decided an interesting case on the law of negligence: (Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington January 22, 1932: Lords Dunedin, Warrington, Atkin, Macmillan and Thankerton). The defendant parked his car in a street leaving a young dog inside the car. While the plaintiff was passing by, the dog started jumping about on the seat and smashed the glass panel at the back of the car with the result that a splinter of the glass entered the left eye of the plaintiff and his eye had to be removed. There was no evidence to show that the dog had a dangerous propensity. The jury found for the plaintiff and awarded him £2000 damages. The Court of Appeal allowed the defendant's appeal and in the House of Lords the decision of the Court of Appeal was affirmed. Their Lordships held that the danger of a piece of glass being knocked by a dog out of a widow at the back of a car and of a splinter of glass hitting a passer-by was such an unlooked-for event that no one could reasonably say that the defendant ought to be convicted of negligence for not taking precautions against it. A person must guard against a reasonable probability of danger; he is not bound to guard against a fantastic possibility.

"It is better that ten guilty men should escape than that one innocent man should suffer."

The Law Times (February 6) contains an interesting note on the evolution of this legal maxim. The first mention of the idea is to be found in Fortesque's "De Laudibus". Two hundred years later Hale in his "Pleas of the Crown" restated the aphorism though in a slightly different form. In 1823, Mr. Justice Holroyd stated the maxim in its present form, and in this form it is reported by Sir Gregory Lewin in his Crown Cases. Though, as the Law Times has humourously observed, the number of guilty persons who should escape rather than that one innocent should suffer has varied from time to time, and as Mr. O. K. Allen in his "Legal Duties and other Essays in Jurisprudence" has observed, ideally the acquittal of ten guilty persons is exactly ten times as great a failure of justice as the conviction of one innocent person, the maxim embodies in a striking way the sanctity of innocence and emphasises the caution which criminal courts should exercise before coming to a conclusion adverse to an accused person.

Section 80, Civil Procedure Code, and suits for injunction.

For many years there had been a marked difference of opinion between the High Courts of India on the applicability of s. 80, Civil Procedure Code, to suits for injunction. In Bhagchand's case (I. L. R. 51 Bom. 725) the Privy Council thought that it was undesirable that the difference of opinion on this point should be left unresolved and after discussing the rulings of the Indian High Courts and the object of the section observed:—

"Section 80 is express, explicit and mandatory and it admits of no implications or exceptions. A suit in which inter alia an injunction is prayed is still "a suit" within the words of the section and to read any qualification into it is an encroachment on the function of legislation.....Section 80 imposes a statutory and unqualified obligation upon the Court." In Krishnaswami Sastri v. Syed Ahmed (34 L. W. 993) Ourgenvén, J., of the Madras High Court has, however, held that the words 'in respect of any act purporting to be done by any such officer in his official capacity' in s. 80, Civil Procedure Code, clearly refer to a past act and not to any action merely contemplated or threatened and that s. 80 is not applicable to suits for injunction in respect of such acts. Ourgenvén, J., is of opinion that Arunachalam Chetti v. David (I. L. R. 50 Mad. 239) in which such a view was held is good law, notwithstanding the later decision of the Privy Council, as their Lordships have not considered the meaning of the words "for any act purporting to be done" in Bhagchand's case, Ourgenvén, J., would confine the decision in Bhagchand's case to suits for injunction based on past acts. We think that the decision in Arunachalam Chetti's case was based on certain considerations applicable to suits for injunction in general and as those have been disapproved by the Privy Council the said decision is no longer law. If any part of the judgment in that case still holds good it is the view expressed by both the learned judges that, grammatically, the words "acts purporting to be done" are wide enough to cover future acts. Again, though suits for injunction may be based on past acts, they are, save in the case of mandatory injunctions directed against future acts. We think, after all, this is the same old controversy in a new shape and that in the face of the definite pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in Bhagchand's case of the scope and object of s. 80, Civil Procedure Code, it is now too late in the day to contend that s. 80 is not applicable to suits for injunction in respect of future acts.

A Curious Anomaly in the Penal Code.

Section 392, Penal Code, prescribes the punishment for robbery and dacoity and the next section prescribes the punishment for attempt to commit such offences. Section 397 prescribes that, if at the time of committing robbery or dacoity, the offender uses any deadly weapon or causes grievous hurt etc., the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years; and s. 398 provides that if at the time of attempting to commit such an offence the offender is armed with any deadly weapon, the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years. As these sections stand, the minimum punishment of imprisonment for seven years applies in the case of a completed offence of robbery or dacoity if a deadly weapon has been used and in the case of an attempt to commit robbery or dacoity if the offender is armed with any deadly weapon. The result is that if the offender is merely armed with a deadly weapon and does not use it, if the offence is merely an attempt, the minimum sentence of seven years has to be imposed, but if the offence is actually committed the Court is not bound to give any minimum sentence. This is certainly a curious anomaly requiring the immediate attention of the Legislature. The matter has been brought to light recently in a case decided by the Oudh Chief Court, Chandra Nath v. Emperor [9 O. W. N. 152.]

In Nga I. v. R. (1911, 6 L. B. R. 41, 14 Ind. Cas. 651) the word 'uses' in s. 398 has been interpreted in a wide sense so as to include cases where the offender is possessed of a weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed. We cannot get over the anomaly even by giving such an interpretation, as it is impossible to widen the meaning of the word 'uses' to such an extent as to cover all cases of being armed with, for instance, where the offender keeps the weapon concealed in his dress so as not to be visible to outsiders while committing the offence. By the way, we doubt whether the remark made by Sir H. S. Gour in his Penal Law that if 'uses' is interpreted in the wide sense referred to in Nga I's case the next section would be superfluous is correct as s. 397 deals with actual robbery or dacoity and s. 398 deals with mere attempts.

Amendment of decree and s. 5, Limitation Act.

It was held by Mookerjee, J., in Brojola Rai Chowdhury v. Tharaprasanna Bhattacharjee (3 C. L. J. 188) that if the amendment of a decree has no relation to the grounds upon which the validity of the decree is sought to be challenged in appeal, the appeal should not be admitted out of time and this decision was followed by the Allahabad High Court in Gajadhar Singh v. Basant Lal, (I. L. R. 43 A. 380). But the soundness of this proposition has been challenged in the recent decision of the Calcutta High Court in Nandlal Ganguli v. Dasarathi Mukerjee (36 O. W. N. 218, Mukerjee, J., and Mitter, J.) In the later case Mukerjee, J., referring to the above proposition says "With this proposition, I am afraid, I cannot agree, because it means to circumscribe and limit the discretion which s. 5 of the Limitation Act confers upon a court by the terms in which that section is expressed. In my opinion even in a case in which the amendment has no relation to the grounds upon which the validity of the decree is sought to be challenged in appeal, circumstances may appear which may justly bring the case within the meaning of the expression 'sufficient cause' which appears in that section." It is doubtful whether in Brojola's case the learned Judge intended to lay down an invariable proposition of law, but if it was so, we think that the later decision lays down the correct law.

Notable Dicta.

Enmity.—Enmity is a double-edged weapon and what would be a reason for murder might well be a reason for fabrication of a false case also. R. v. Bharat Singh, 9 O. W. N. 45.

Suppression of Facts.—If in a criminal case the complainants choose to suppress the real facts and give false or unreliable evidence in order to implicate their enemies, the only result is that the persons who are probably guilty have to be acquitted. R. v. Bharat Singh, 9 O. W. N. 45.

Law.—"The law is not made by casual and hasty decisions in courts of first instance. Its guiding principles and the harmony of its controlling ideas must be sought in the considered judgments of the higher tribunals".—Sir Frederick Pollock.

Text Books.—"Of the first three editions of a law treatise the third is usually the worst."—Pitt Taylor.

Common Law.—"The common law consists of about half a dozen obvious propositions but unfortunately no one knows what they are"—Lord Sterndale,

Points in everyday practice.

Insolvency.—Possession of assets is not a condition for adjudicating a debtor as an insolvent. Doraswamy Chettiar v. Abdul Subhan Sahib, 35 L. W. 148.

Court Fees.—An application for restoration of an appeal dismissed for default in payment of paper-book cost is not an application for review. A Court-fee of Rs. 2 is sufficient. Nalini Sundari v. Narendra Chandra, 36 O. W. N. 246.

Complaint.—Dismissal of an application for making a complaint under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, does not bar a second application for the same purpose. Kalastri Mudali v. Emperor, 136 Ind. Cas. 313.

Withdrawal of suits. An application for withdrawal with liberty to institute fresh suit must be treated as a whole and the Court cannot allow the prayer for withdrawal alone without giving liberty to bring fresh suit. It must grant the petition as a whole or allow the plaintiff to proceed. Marudh-chala Nadar v. Chinna Muthu Nadar, 136 Ind. Cas. 316.

Appeal after review.—It is open to the aggrieved party to appeal from an order granting review without appealing from the altered decree itself. If the order granting review is set aside all subsequent proceedings taken under that order must also be regarded as having been set aside. Radhakrishnadas v. Beni Madhabdas and others, 36 O. W. N. 212.

Arbitration.—A person who is to be appointed umpire should not be at the same time an arbitrator. Kafurchand Fulchand v. Jewaraj Chunilal, 36 O. W. N. 332.

Partnership.—A partner has no authority to bind the other partners by a reference to arbitration. Rajendra Prosad v. Pannalal Champalal, 36 O. W. N. 8.

Extracts from Contemporaries.

An All-India Federation.

The great attempt at the making of a Constitution for India which, in continuation of the Round Table Conference of last year, has been in progress for the last three months, has come to an end without specific result, but is to be carried on by a small representative Committee which will meet in India. Starting from the declaration made by Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons in August, 1917, that the policy both of the British Government and the Government of India was "the increasing association of Indians in every branch of the Administration, and the gradual development of self-governing institutions with a view to the progressive realisation of responsible Government in India as an integral part of the British Empire"; and proceeding by the conferring of increased powers on the Provincial Legislatures by the Government of India Act, 1900; the British Government prepared the way for further development by the appointment, under that Act, in November, 1927, of the Indian Statutory Commission, of which Sir John Simon was the Chairman. The Report of the Commission, issued in June, 1930, is valuable for its wide survey of the conditions to be dealt with, but its actual constructive proposals have formed little more than the groundwork for the discussions in the two Round Table Conferences. There remains, however, to the credit of the Commission the conception of a Federal India, and the working out of this conception has been the task of the Lord Chancellor's Federal Structure Committee of the Conference. At the time of the Report, the Statutory Commission were not able to speak confidently of the attitude of the Indian Princes to Federation, but the doubt in that respect has been, in principle, removed and the central point in the Prime Minister's statement of the Government's Indian policy at the closing sitting on the last instant of the Round Table Conference was that "the great idea of an All-India Federation still holds the field." The statement has been issued as a Parliamentary Paper (Cmd No. 3972), and was approved by the House of Commons last week after a two days' debate by 369 to 43, and it has been under consideration in the House of Lords this week.—Law Journal.

India and Dominion Status.

The discussions on the Government of India, coming at the same time that the Statute of Westminster has been in progress, have naturally raised the question whether the new conception of Dominion Status can properly be applied to India. In the past there appeared to be no objection to treating India on the same footing as the other Dominions of the Crown, and if the term "Dominion Status" was applied to them, it was natural for the same status to be anticipated for India. But whether this is now appropriate in view of the altered conception of Dominion Status which is embodied in the Statute of Westminster has been doubted. Mr. Churchill, writing to The Times (25th ultimo) says: 'The Imperial Conference of 1926 had transformed the meaning attached to the loose term 'Dominion Status' in such a way as to abolish all conception of Imperial supremacy; and this vast change was subsequently to be prescribed in the rigid language of a Statute.' That has been done, and as we have pointed out, the translation of Dominion Status into statutory form was inevitable so soon as the Dominions desired that their legislative independence should be thus declared. Of course, the conditions as to self-government in India are very different from those in the Dominions which prompted the late Lord Balfour's formula of equality of status, and it was never contemplated that the Statute of Westminster should apply at this stage of her development to India. The Statute is restricted to the six Dominions mentioned in it, and these do not include India. But it can hardly be doubted that the same goal will be the object of Indians, though how long and difficult may be the way to it cannot be foreseen.—Law Journal.

Lawyers and Jokes.

Mr. Justice MacKinnon is recently reported to have given the following advice to the members of a Law Society. "There is only one golden rule if you wish to succeed either as a young solicitor or barrister. That is, never make a joke. I have known many people blessed with a happy wit who have failed when others have succeeded with a portentous solemnity."

Expression of Views by the Bench.

We think that His Honour Henry Terrell, K. C., has rendered a public service by drawing attention in his letter to The Times of the 2nd December, to the growing practice for Judges of the King's Bench Division and others holding judicial office to express their views from the seat of justice, on matters which are the subject of controversy with the general public. His Honour's letter was prompted by the recent observations made by Mr. Justice McCardie regarding the crime of procuring abortion. We are not concerned with the moral aspect of the matter upon which, as a famous Magistrate is reported to have said, to the apparent satisfaction of all parties, "there is much to be said upon both sides," but it is, in our view, undesirable that a judge should, speaking from the Bench, express his personal opinion on such a vexed question, especially as his remarks appear to invite the commission of what, as the law now stands, is a crime. As His Honour indicates in the letter to which we have referred, expressions or pronouncements from the Bench on religious, political or other matters upon which there is a division of opinion amongst the public may call in question the complete impartiality of those indulging in them and tend to undermine confidence in the administration of justice. There is, of course, no suggestion that in fact the learned judge would allow his personal views to interfere with his public duty, but we cannot regard it as other than inadvisable that he and others should place themselves in a position which, to the uninformed, might give ground for suspicion that in certain classes of cases the Bench might be expected to be biased on one side or the other—Solicitors' Journal.

A Husband's Rights.

The remarkable trial which took place at Cambridge Assizes a few days ago (Place v. Searle, Times, January 19 20) reminds us that a husband still has at common law the old remedy of action against those who by enticement or persuasion, deprive him of the "help, society, and comfort" of his wife. It is not, however, enough to show that the wife has left after advice given by another. The jury must find that the advice or persuasion cause her departure. Acquiescence by an outsider in the wife's voluntary act, too, is not enough. This appears pretty clearly from the charge of Mr. Justice Wright to a jury at Leicester nearly thirty years ago (Smith v. Kaye, 20 T. L. R. 261.) The leading case is Winsmore v. Greenbank (1745, Wills 577), where some interesting old law is collected. It was laid down there that declarations by the wife were not admissible—a point which seems to have been overlooked at Cambridge. Another point elucidated there is that there is no need to give particulars of the means adopted by the defendant. A verdict on a general declaration of persuading, enticing, and procuring will stand.—Law Journal.

Punishment varies as the Judge.

The punishment of offenders varies as the Judge, his head, his heart, his liver, his stomach, his philosophy and his marital condition, or any one or more of many causes. And this is a terrible defect in our justice. We all know or the judge who thought it his duty to impose the maximum penalty in every case; or of the other who, after describing a crime as the worst in his experience, would pass a light sentence of six months on the worst offender.—Law Journal.

Law Reporters as Judges.

It is not to be supposed that law reporters do not practise. Many of them do, although their practice is naturally not so large as to justify them in giving up the certain, if small, income derived from law reporting. I have heard men wonder why they are not more frequently chosen for the position of Magistrate or County Court Judge: for most of them have unusual knowledge not only of case law, but of legal principles, and a cultivated faculty for rejecting the irrelevant and for discerning the material points in a mass of evidence. Moreover, most of them are patient men.—Law Journal.

Judicial Dress.

The story of clothes is a not unimportant part of social and economic history. Industries have bloomed and decayed as the result of changes in fashion and there can be no doubt that the shape and colour of human habiliments are affected by and in turn affect men's mentality.....The Bench and the Bar no more than other men can escape from the effect of their costume.....The Judges cannot be accused of embarrassing their costumiers by frequent and hasty changes of fashion. Their official garb is largely as it was ordained by the judicial body in 1635. Wigs were added at the end of the seventeenth century and have persisted, though not without modification to the present day. There is a great deal to be said for the pageantry of justice and we would not willingly part with it. But it might be fairly asked whether so many and various garments are essential for the Judges. There is nothing to be said for wigs which are definitely said to be insanitary and but rarely becoming—Justice of the Peace.

Recent Legislative Measures.

Indian Khadar (Name Protection) Bill No. (11 of 1932).

Owing to the considerable progress made in the manufacture of khadar spurious khadar is manufactured both in India and abroad and as there is a likelihood of purchasers being misled, this Bill has been introduced by Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh to extend the protection afforded by the Merchandise Marks Act, 1889 to the names khadar and khadi which have come to denote hand-spun and hand-woven cloth only.

Indian Coastal Traffic Reservation Bill (No. 12 of 1932).

Mr. Sarabhai Haji's Indian Coastal Traffic Bill was referred to a Select Committee and the report of the said Committee was presented to the House but the Bill lapsed owing to the dissolution of the Assembly. Mr. B. V. Jadhav has submitted the same Bill as approved by the Select Committee. The object of the Bill as is well-known is to provide for the employment of Indian tonnage in the coastal traffic of India, and the Bill is intended to serve as an aid to the rapid development of an Indian Merchant Marine.

Hindu Untouchable Castes (Removal of Disabilities) Bill (No. 13 of 1932).

This Bill has been introduced by Mr. Shunmugam Chetty with the object of removing the disabilities of the so-called untouchables in Hindu society. The Bill provides that no person belonging to the Hindu community shall be deemed to be incapable by reason of his caste, of sharing the benefit of Hindu religious and charitable trusts of a public nature and of conveniences like public wells, tram-cars buses etc., which are maintained or licensed for the use of the public Prevention of Dedication of Devasis Bill (No. 14 of 1932).

This is another Bill introduced by Mr Shunmugam Chetty to put an end to the practice of dedicating girls to Hindu temples for the purpose of service to the idol which has degenerated into a method of initiating young women to a life of immorality and prostitution. The Madras Presidency, the United Provinces, and the Mysore State have already adopted Legislative measures to deal with this evil and the object of the present Bill is to enact a comprehensive measure dealing with this evil wherever it exists in British India.

Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Bill (No. 15 of 1932).

This Bill has been introduced by Sir Hari Singh Gour to amend the Hindu Law of Inheritance by providing that a son's widow shall be entitled to rank in the order of succession next after the sister's son.

Child Marriage Restraint, Repeal and Amendment Bills (Nos. 16, 17, 19 & 20 of 1932).

These Bills are intended to amend the Child Marriage Restraint Act of 1929. Mr. Bhuput Singh wants provision to be made for those cases in which parents or guardians may, by reason of their conscience or exceptional family circumstances, have to marry their children before they have attained the age prescribed by the Child Marriage Restraint Act. Mr. Wajihuddin, wants the Act to be repealed altogether or at least so far as the Muslims of British India are concerned, and Mr. Krishnamachariar wants Brahmins, Vaisias, Sourashtras and other communities amongst whom post-puberty marriage is forbidden, to be excluded from the operation of the Act.

Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Bill (No. 18 of 1932).

The main amendments proposed in this non-official Bill are the following—(i) Omission of ss. 30 and 34, (ii) amendment of s. 103 by substituting the word 'vicinity' for 'locality' and by inserting a new provision that no evidence other than the search list shall be admissible to prove the articles discovered, (iii) amendment of s. 167 by providing that the accused or his counsel shall be heard, if he so desire, and (iv) repeal of ss. 412 to 415. Certain amendments to ss. 205 (1), 286 (1) and 406 are also proposed.

Notes of Recent English Cases.

Bankruptcy—Hire purchase agreement—Hire falling due after adjudication—Whether vests in Receiver or prior purchaser.

An owner of goods let them on hire purchase agreement under which the hire was payable monthly in advance and the agreement might be determined at any time. He assigned the benefit of the hire purchase agreement and then became bankrupt:

Held, that the monthly payments which accrued due after the date of the bankruptcy were 'debts growing due' within s. 38 (c), Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and, therefore, passed to the trustee in bankruptcy and not to the assignee. (Lord Hanworth, M. R., Lawrence, L. J., Romer, L. J.) Blakey v. Trustees of the Property of Pendlebury, (1931) 100 L. J. K. B. 399 (C. A.)

Will—Gift for the benefit of the community as a whole—Validity.

Where a testator made a gift "unto my country England to and for.....own use and benefit absolutely": Held, that the gift was a valid charitable gift (Lord Hanworth, M. R., Lawrence, L. J. and Romer, L. J.) Smith, In re; Public Trustee v. Smith, (1931) 100 L. J. Ch. 409 (C. A.)

Vendor and purchaser—Auction—Misrepresentation in particulars of sale—Rescission of contract.

In the particulars of an auction sale certain lease hold premises which were put up for auction were described as 'valuable business premises' though there were covenants in the lease against carrying on any business except that of ladies' out fitter, fancy draper and manufacturer of ladies' clothing. A dairyman purchased the premises and finding that there were such restrictive covenants refused to complete the purchase. In a suit for specific performance by the vendors: Held, that inasmuch as the use of the premises was restricted to one trade they were not 'valuable business premises' and as the purchaser had been misled by the particulars of sale he was entitled to avoid the contract and recover the deposit he had paid. (Olauon, J.) Hunt (Charles) Limited v. Palmer, (1931) 100 L. J. Ch. 356.

Husband and wife—Domicile. Where the circumstances of a case are such as to raise a presumption that an alien has acquired a domicile in England the acquisition is not negatived by the fact that during his residence in England he was subject to the Aliens' Restriction Act 1914, and the Aliens' Order, 1920. Boldrini v. Boldrini, (1932) 101 L. J. P. 4 (C. A.)

Divorce—Costs—Wife's petition.—A wife's right to receive from the husband the costs of an abortive trial is not absolute. The Court has a discretion to reserve its decision until the determination of the

Patent.—In a 'threats' action to restrain the defendant from alleging that his patent has been infringed by the plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to raise the question of the validity of the patent Pittevil v. Brackelsberg Melting Processes Limited (1932) 101 L. J. Ch. 8. (C. A.)

Companies—Winding up—Solicitor's costs—A compulsory order was made for the winding-up of a company and for taxation and for payment of costs of the petition out of the assets of the company. These costs were taxed upon the basis that the company was insolvent and were allowed at the sum of £ 83. The company turned out to be solvent and the solicitor claimed to prove as creditor for the balance of the costs due to him. At the date of the winding-up order the company was indebted to the solicitor for costs in the sum of £433. The liquidator rejected the proof.

Held, the liquidator was bound to admit the proof subject, if he so wished, to taxation of the whole bill. C B & M (Tailors) Ltd., In re (1932) 101 L. J. Ch. 6.

Review.

The Punjab Criminal References, Vol. II, 1920-1930: By RAI BAHADUR DIWAN OHAND OBHRAI, B.A., LL.B., EX-GOVERNMENT PLEADER AND PUBLIC PROSECUTOR, PESHAWAR: ADVOCATE, HIGH COURT OF LAHORE. Price Rs. 12—Nett

The first Volume of Mr. Obhrai's Punjab Criminal References was published some time back. Mr Obhrai has now brought out the second volume. The present volume deals with all the Criminal Rulings of the Lahore High Court from the beginning of 1920 to the end of 1930. The important feature of Mr. Obhrai's work is the exhaustive analytical abstract of each case.

The learned author has taken great pains to find out the legal principles enunciated in each case and to state them accurately and clearly. The facts of the cases are also briefly stated and all notable remarks and dicta of the Judges are faithfully reproduced. Notes of cases cited and the subsequent history of each case are also given. The work entirely differs in its plan from the ordinary digests and is far more useful.

It fulfils the purposes of a concise reporter, a digest, a subject index and an index of cases judicially noticed. In fact we get in Mr. Obhrai's book all the information which a practitioner or a text-book writer is likely to require about a case.

The publication is the result of immense labour on the part of an able and experienced lawyer and we have not come across any other book which will be so useful to the criminal practitioners of the Punjab as Mr. Obhrai's Punjab Criminal References.

The Centenary of Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer.

The centenary of Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer, the first Indian judge who sat on the Bench of the Madras High Court, was celebrated recently by the members of the Madras High Court Bar under the auspices of the Advocates and Bar Associations. The Advocate-General, Sir Alladi Krishnaswamy Iyer, in delivering the welcome address spoke about the great qualities of Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer, about his classical judgments and his high conception of duty. The Chairman, Sir O. V. Kumaraswami Sastriar, made a short speech paying tribute to the greatness of Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer in the course of which he laid stress on the importance of such functions. The Chairman said that the recalling of the memories of great men was a necessity. It was an expression of gratitude to those who have been our leaders and who by their genius, precept and example have dignified as well as lightened our labours. It was the effort of man to defy the tendency of time to obliterate memories and to wrest from the destroyer at least the fragrance of the ashes of remembrance. Justice Sir Vepa Ramesam, Dewan Bahadur T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and other leading members of the Bar also spoke on the occasion.

The late Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer's youth was spent in poverty, hard work and privations. He started his life as a Tahsildar's clerk and the Tahsildar who was struck by his ability and intelligence educated him up to the F. A. Class. Muthuswami Iyer then entered service in the Inam Commissioner's Office and after serving as District Munsif and Presidency Magistrate he became the judge of the Small Cause Court. After Lord Lytton's Durbar when it was proposed that an Indian judge should be appointed to the High Court, Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer was selected and appointed. He served in the High Court for sixteen years and an idea of his sense of duty and devotion to work can be had from the fact that during this long period of sixteen years he took leave only once and that, just before his death. He has expressed his high conception of the duties of a Judge in these memorable words :—

"The Court of Justice is a sacred temple; the judges presiding over it are, though men, the humble instruments in the interests of truth and those who enter this holy edifice with unholy thought or desecrate it with unworthy actions are traitors to their God and to their country. Those of you who may rise to the Bench should recollect that the power you may be called on to exercise in the name of your sovereign is according to one of your ancestors a power divine."

The Electric Comb Case.

The recent case of Wood v. Letirik Limited (146 L. T. 36) bears a close resemblance to the well known case of Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co., and affirms the principle laid down in that case. In Wood's case the defendant company advertised their comb as follows :—"New hair in 72 hours. Letirik Electric Comb. Great news for hair sufferers. What is your trouble? Is it grey hair? In 10 days not a grey hair left. £ 500-guarantee." The plaintiff whose hair had turned grey purchased the comb and followed closely the directions given by the company but nothing happened except that his head began to ache by constant combing. He sued the company. Mr. Justice Rowlatt gave a decree for £100. As Lord Justice Lindley observed in the Carbolic Smoke Ball Co's case where there is a distinct promise expressed in language which is perfectly unmistakable, the promisor cannot escape by saying that his promise was a mere puff.

Amendment Depriving Defendant of the Defence of Limitation.

An important aspect of the law of limitation in relation to amendment of plaint was recently considered by the Court of Appeal (Scrutton and Greer, L. JJ.) in Mabrao v. Eagle Star and British Dominions Insurance Co. Ltd. (Law Times, page 131). Order XVI, r. 2 of the Rules of the Supreme Court which corresponds to O. I, r. 10, of our Civil Procedure Code provides that where an action has been commenced in the name of a wrong person or where it is doubtful whether it has been commenced in the name of the right plaintiff, the Court or a judge may..... order any other person to be substituted or added upon such terms as may be just. In this case two persons A and B effected an insurance in 1922, and sued on the policy in 1925. In 1931, an application was made that C should be added as plaintiff as he C was the person really interested in the insurance, A and B being merely agents for collection. The application was refused by Branson, J., and the Court of Appeal held that Branson, J., was right in refusing the application as it would take away from the defendants a defence which had already accrued to them by virtue of the Statute of Limitations. Though s. 22 of the Indian Limitation Act provides that where a new party is substituted or added, the suit shall as regards him be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party, doubts have been entertained as to the applicability of the rule to cases where the Court adds a party under O. I, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code (vide 66 Ind. Cas. 217) and to cases like the present one where the person interested in name is already on record and the real person is sought to be added at a subsequent stage. The trend of the recent decisions of the High Courts of India is towards the view that s. 22 applies even to such cases (vide I. L. R. 35 Cal. 519; A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 747) and there are numerous rulings to the effect that a plaint cannot be amended so as to base the claim on a cause of action which is time barred. But the latter does not seem still to be beyond doubt. Beaumont, O. J., for instance, in a recent case of Parbhudas Girdhardas v. Lallubhai Khushal, 34 Bom.

L. R. 35, observes that there is no invariable rule that an amendment should not be allowed so as to base the claim on a time-barred cause of action, and that even if the amendment introduces a new cause of action it is within the powers of the Court in special circumstances to allow the amendment even though the cause of action may be barred by limitation. The decision of the Court of Appeal does not, however, seem to support the theory that the Court has a discretion in the matter.

Arbitration between Companies.

It was held by the Lahore High Court in Sundar Mal-Lakhu Mal v. Paris Business Corporation Ltd. (132 Ind. Cas. 399; A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 555) that s. 152 of the Companies Act does not empower a Court situated in a local area to which the Indian Arbitration Act has not been extended, to apply the provisions of the said Act to arbitration between companies or between companies and third persons. In 1931 Company Cases Jour. page 3 in commenting upon this case it was observed as follows:

"It seems to be plain from the section itself that its object is to make the provisions of the Arbitration Act applicable to all arbitrations under the Companies Act and with all respect to the learned Judge we think the decision does not lay down correct law."

We are happy to find that this view has been approved in a very recent judgment of the Patna High Court in Roop Lal Agarwala v. Dhanasar Coal Company (13 Patna Law Times 169) decided on February 12th. In this case Scroope, J., after considering the history of the Companies Acts of 1882 and 1913, and the language of s. 152 observes:

"The object of the relevant sections of the Companies Act of 1882 was to give facilities to companies for arbitration so as to bind the corporate body and it was never one of the purposes of the Arbitration Act to restrict these facilities to Presidency towns or local areas notified as such" and in his Lordship's view the position has not been altered by the passing of the new Indian Companies Act VII of 1913. With reference to the Lahore case, Scroope, J. says: "I cannot therefore agree with the view of Jai Lal, J., in the above case."

We think that it may now be taken to be settled law that the facilities given by s. 152 to Companies for reference are not restricted by s. 2 of the Arbitration Act which limits its application to cases where the subject matter could be the subject of a suit in a Presidency town. Limited companies which would otherwise have been deprived of the facilities for arbitration given by s. 152, Companies Act, in respect of dealings in the moffusil are sure to read this decision with great relief.

Power to apply for copy of judgment.

Section 61 of the Income Tax Act provides that any assessee who is entitled or required to attend before any Income-tax authority in connection with any proceeding under the Act may attend either in person or by any person authorised by him in writing in this behalf. In Basantlal Ramjidas v. The Commissioner of Income Tax, Bihar and Orissa (136 Ind. Cas. 302) the Chief Justice of the Patna High Court has held that a pleader who is authorised to conduct an appeal before an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax is not entitled, in the absence of express authorisation in that behalf, to apply for copies of the judgment of the Assistant Commissioner in that case. "It does not follow," says his Lordship, "that because an agent is duly authorised to conduct the business of the appeal before the Assistant Commissioner he is ipso facto authorised to obtain copies of the Assistant Commissioner's judgment or indeed to perform any act preparatory or incident to the conduct of an appeal." His Lordship holds that it is reasonable and proper for the department to require that any person asking for the copy of the judgment should be expressly authorised in writing in that behalf. With all respect to the learned Chief Justice we think that it is not correct to regard an application for a copy of the judgment as an act preparatory or incident to an appeal. It is surely an act which a pleader has to perform in the conduct of the case itself and authority to conduct a case necessarily confers authority to apply for copies of the judgment given in that case. Again, when the section says 'any person authorised' it does not seem proper to introduce the word 'expressly' into the section, and further, even granting that express authority is necessary, a person who is expressly authorised to conduct a case is expressly authorised to apply for copies of the judgment pronounced in that case. Anyhow, until this case is reconsidered, lawyers practising in courts which are bound by this ruling have to see that the vakalatnamas contain an express authority to apply for copies of the judgment, especially in income-tax cases.

Defendant's Right to Execute Decree for Specific performance.

The interesting question whether the defendant can execute a decree for specific performance against the plaintiff has been recently discussed with reference to principle and authority by Rankin, C. J., of the Calcutta High Court in Heramba Chandra Maitra v. Jotis Chandra Sinha, (36 C. W. N. 172). As the learned Chief Justice has observed it is not a very usual thing for any person to be so foolish as to bring a suit for specific performance, prosecute it to a decree and then change mind and it is not a very remarkable thing that the text books do not contain precedents of so extraordinary a position. But the principle that a decree for specific performance enures for the benefit of both parties seems to have been regarded as a maxim in equity in England and in Baikarima Bibi v. Abderahman (I L. R. 46 Bom. 190) it was held that a decree for specific performance was capable of being executed by the defendant as well as the plaintiff. The lucid judgment of Rankin, C. J., in this case has put the matter beyond all controversy. Whether the defendant should proceed by way of execution or by summons in the same suit is a more difficult question. On this point the learned Chief Justice has expressed the opinion that the definition of the word 'decree-holder' in s. 2, Civil Procedure Code, is quite applicable to the case of the defendant in a suit for specific performance, but his Lordship has left the matter open with the remark that even if the defendant proceeds by way of execution it would be open to the judge to treat the tabular statement as a summons in the suit, where the Court to which application is made is the same as that which passed the decree.

'Appearance' of party.

It has been for long a vexed question whether where a pleader appears on behalf of a party and presents an application for adjournment and on the application being refused retires from the case, the party should be taken as having appeared. On this point the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Patna followed one view and a contrary view was taken by the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts.

So far as the former High Courts are concerned it is now settled that in such cases there is no appearance by the party. The earlier decisions of the Calcutta High Court are confirmed in two recent decisions, namely, Sikandar Ali v. Kushal Chandra Sarma (36 O. W. N. 159) and Sirdar Mal Seraogi v. Jaharmal Chiranji Lal (36 O. W. N. 160). The Allahabad High Court has put its view of the matter beyond controversy so far as the United Provinces are concerned by adding an explanation to O. XVII, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. (See Baldev Singh v. Chhaju Singh, and others, 133 Ind. Cas. 622). The Rangoon High Court has followed the view of the Calcutta, the Madras and the Patna High Courts in preference to that of the Bombay and the Allahabad High Courts: vide Maung Pway and another v. Sayape (I. L. R. 4 Rang. 408). The Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has followed the Allahabad and Bombay rulings.

Such open conflict of views in a matter of such great importance in practice is undesirable and we hope that the legislature will intervene and make the point clear at an early date.

Attestation of will by infants.

The Law Times draws attention to the curious fact that there appears to be no decision on the question whether there is any age limit for a witness to a will, though numbers of wills must have been admitted to probate where at least one of the witnesses was under age. The question was recently raised in Smith v. Thompson, 146 L. T. R. 14, but it was not necessary to decide the question. In the absence of authority or any definite rule on the point we think the only rule that can be applied is, as the Law Times has suggested, the rule as to the competency of witnesses; and an infant who has sufficient intelligence to understand what is being done must be held to be competent to act as witness.

Extracts from Contemporaries.

Attorneys and Solicitors

Though the term "Attorney" is still in use in India it will be interesting to note that for reasons which are not very clear, the term has fallen into disrepute in England. The Law Times contains an interesting note on this subject which we reproduce below:—

Readers of Boswell may recall that on one occasion when enquiry was made regarding the vocation of a certain person, Johnson said that "he did not care to speak ill of any man behind his back, but he believed the gentleman an attorney"; and the old unfounded prejudice was handed down to succeeding generations, so that when at last the "attorney" was absorbed in the "solicitor," Mortimer Collins could write: "A crocodile is not improved by calling him an alligator. Still, the attorney is gone. He used to like to call himself a solicitor—now he can do it with a clear conscience, if he has such a thing," which was rather a cruel hit. While the "attorney" has disappeared, it is odd that the name should still be the designation of the chief law officer of the Crown, while the name "solicitor" should be that given to the second law officer. In court, as everyone is aware, the judges address these dignitaries respectively as "Mr. Attorney" and "Mr. Solicitor."—Law Times.

How Briefs Came.

The Bar has often been likened to a lottery in which one person draws a lucky ticket which means fame, while his neighbour on the same staircase draws a blank. It sometimes seems as if this description were an accurate one, so mysterious are the springs which operate in the distribution of rewards and failures, and so odd are the accidents, or what seem to be so, which lead on to fortune or its opposite. The study of legal biography brings this home to the reader, although it cannot always explain why A has succeeded and B has gone empty away. Chances may come to all, but it depends very largely how these are met whether success or failure is to be the outcome. No reader of the life of Erskine, who eventually became Lord Chancellor, but must have been struck by the circumstance in which his first brief came to him, and the further accident by which he was enabled to address the court when it appeared most unlikely that he would have that satisfaction. The incident is worth recalling. A Captain Baillie, who had been Governor of Greenwich Hospital, had printed and circulated a statement pointing out various abuses in the establishment and reflecting severely upon Lord Sandwich, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and was proceeded against by way of criminal information. Before the case came on Erskine chanced to dine at a friend's table at which Baillie also was a guest. The action taken by Lord Sandwich naturally engaged the attention of those present, and Erskine, who was not then aware of the identity of Baillie, expressed himself with some warmth on the scandalous practices attributed to the First Lord in connection with the management of the hospital. Baillie nudged the person who sat next to him, and asked who it was who had interested himself in his behalf. On being told that it was Erskine, who had just been called to the Bar and had formerly been in the navy, Baillie exclaimed with an oath: "Then I'll have him for my counsel." In due course a retainer was given to Erskine, and that was followed by a brief which, however, was marked with no fewer than four names in front of his own, so that the likelihood of his being able to address the court seemed to be extremely remote. All the four addressed the court at great length; the counsel immediately above Erskine—Hargrave by name—was long-winded and tired Lord Mansfield intensely, but, as Erskine afterwards said: "As my good fortune would have it, he [Hargrave] was afflicted with strangury, and was obliged to retire once or twice in the course of his argument. This protracted the cause so long that, when he had finished, Lord Mansfield said that the remaining counsel should be heard the next morning. This was exactly what I wished. I had the whole night to arrange, in my chambers, what I had to say the next morning, and I took the court with their faculties awake and freshened, succeeded to my own satisfaction (sometimes the surest proof that you have satisfied others), and as I marched along the hall after the rising of the judges, the attorneys flocked around me with their retainers. I have since flourished, but I have always blessed God for the providential strangury of poor Hargrave." The last remark rather savours of what the Germans call schadenfreude; but perhaps it was excusable in a young man who welcomed the opportunity of making a name for himself, and thought of his little children as plucking at his robe, and saying: "Now, father, is the time to get us bread."—Law Times.

A Picturesque Institution.

So the House of Lords has been called although the description is a little wide of the mark in ordinary times. It was once literally true. We are told that well into the last century each peer, in full dress, with stars, garters, and ribbons, on entering the House bowed to every other peer. As a member of the peerage, writing on the subject a generation ago, said, all this is now changed—the peers enter the House with as little ceremony as if it were a club or a theatre, dressed like other people, except on rare occasions, as, for example, when the sovereign opens Parliament in person, when they wear their robes. Another occasion when the House shows colour is when assent is given to Bills by a Royal Commission; each member of the commission is attired in his robes, with his three-cornered hat, which he takes off whenever the clerk at the table, who reads the commission, mentions his name. Still on another occasion the House is treated to a little colour, and that is when a new peer is introduced, or when a peer is advanced a step in dignity, as happened last week, when the Lord Chancellor was introduced with the usual formalities on being created a viscount. The new peer or one who has been moved up to higher rank is attended by two peers of his own degree, one on each side, all in robes and holding cocked hats. In the case of the Lord Chancellor, he was introduced by Viscount Dunedin and Viscount Hailsham, conducted to the Viscount's bench, where he and his sponsors sat down and took off their hats three times to the occupant of the Woolsack; they then proceeded to the table. On such occasion the clerk reads the patent of peerage, the new or advanced peer takes the patent and presents it to the Lord Chancellor or other peer who happens to be presiding in the absence of the Chancellor, and then gets up and shakes hands with him, bustles out, takes off his robes, and reappears in ordinary costume, looking rather shy. The writer already referred to calls this an "alarming ceremonial," as indeed it is, when a man finds himself encumbered with costly robes which he finds a difficulty in managing with ease and dignity. Happily, the occasions for adorning themselves in the robes and cocked hats are comparatively rare.—Law Times.

Recent Legislative Measures.

New Acts.

The Indian Companies Amendment Act I of 1930. The Employers and Workmen Dispute Repealing Act II of 1932. The Wheat Import Duty Extending Act III of 1932. The India Finance Supplementary and Extending Amendment Act IV 1932. The Wire and Wire-Nail Industry Protection Act V of 1932. The Bamboo Paper Industry Protection Act (VI of 1932).

The above five Acts received the assent of the Governor-General on the 5th March 1932.

We have stated the object and purport of these Acts in our previous issues (see 136 Indian Cases Journal Section, pages 7, 21 and 22).

New Bills.

The Indian Trusts Act Amendment Bill No. 21 of 1932.—The Townsend Committee on Co-operation and Royal Commission on agriculture recommended following the precedents of Land Credit Institutions in Europe and America that the Debentures of the Central Land Mortgage Bank should be made trustee securities and the bill is intended to give effect to this recommendation by adding these kinds of debentures in the list of securities enumerated in s. 20 of the Indian Trusts Act.

The Indian Registration Amendment Bill, No. 22 of 1932.—This is a private bill which is intended to remove the inconvenience and expense caused to the public by the fact that Deputy Commissioners of the Punjab who are ex officio Registrars of each District are compelled to remain absent from the office although present at the head quarters.

The Indian Limitation Amendment Bill, No. 23 of 1932.—This is also a private bill proposing extension of the period of limitation for certain suits in view of the present economic depression.

The Indian Trusts Amendment Bill, No. 24 of 1932—The object of this bill which has been introduced by Hajee Abdulla Haroon, is somewhat similar to that of Bill No. 21 of 1932. The Bill proposes that bonds of the Karachi Municipality should also be included in s. 20 of the Indian Trusts Act in the list of approved securities.

The Special Marriage Amendment Repealing Bill, No. 25 of 1932—The Special Marriage Act of 1972 was intended to meet the demand of Brahmos and other Hindu dissenters. Mr. Krishnamachariar who has introduced the bill is of opinion that since the passing of the Act no large section of the country has taken advantage of it, that the Act is a blot on the Indian Legislature and that it should be repealed.

Notes of Recent English Cases.

Banking—Cheque—Signature forged by wife—Husband not informing Bank—Suit by husband against Bank after death of Wife—Estoppel—The plaintiff's wife forged his signature on a large number of cheques drawn on the defendant Bank with whom the plaintiff had dealings and though the plaintiff came to know that his wife had drawn moneys on these forged cheques he did not inform the Bank till his wife died. The plaintiff then brought a suit against the Bank for the amount covered by the forged cheques. It was found that the Bank was careless in honouring the forged cheques. Held by the Court of appeal that though the Bank was negligent, as the Bank had lost its right of action against the wife on account of the husband's failure to inform the Bank until his wife was dead, the husband was estopped from alleging that the signatures were forged and not his own and he could not recover the amount from the Bank. Scrutton, Greer, Romer, L. JJ. Greenwood v. Martin's Bank Ltd., (1932) 101 L. J. K. B. 33; 146 L. T. 32.

Insurance—Marriage settlement—Covenant by husband to pay insurance premiums—Default—Payment by trustees—Right to recover from husband—By a marriage settlement the husband transferred a policy of insurance on his own life to the trustees and agreed that he would not allow the policy to become void and that he would duly pay all the moneys payable for keeping on foot the policy. There was no express covenant to reimburse the trustees any payments made by them though the trust deed provided that the trustees may in their discretion apply the income of the settled funds in making payments for keeping the policy on foot. The husband failed to pay a premium, and the trustees paid it and claimed the amount and the fine paid by them as a debt from the husband: Held, that there was an implied term to reimburse the trustees for payments paid by them, to keep the policy on foot that the claim sounded in damages and the trustees were entitled to recover not merely nominal damages but the entire amount paid by them. McCardie, J. Schlesinger and Joseph v. Mostyn, (1932) 101 L. J. K. B. 62.

SIR T. MUTHUSWAMI IYER

(An Address by SIR ALLADI KRISHNASWAMI IYER, Advocate General of Madras.)

The idea of celebrating the centenary owes its inception to my esteemed friend Mr. V. V. Sreenivasa Iyengar and the function has been arranged under the auspices of the Madras Advocates' and Bar Associations with the sympathetic co-operation and help of his Lordship the Chief Justice and the other learned Judges of this Court. In craving your indulgence for a few minutes to pay my humble tribute to the memory of the great judge that once adorned this Court and whose statue still adorns its premises my only justification is my happening to be the accredited representative of the Bar for the time being.

In the task which I have undertaken I am labouring under this disadvantage that I do not belong to the generation that has seen and known the Judge at work. I am not, therefore, in a position to expatiate upon the great qualities which he displayed while at work on the Bench,—his Socratic method of elucidating the points in controversy, his beautiful summing up in terse language the long and elaborate arguments of counsel, the judicial dignity and bearing which he brought to bear in regard to the proceedings in his Court the unbounded confidence of his colleagues in his guidance and judgment, and his kindly and courteous treatment of the Bar—qualities to which contemporary opinion bears eloquent testimony. I can only give expression to the impressions derived from the reported decisions and his public utterances which form by far the best monument to his deep learning, his profound wisdom and his greatness as a Judge.

SIR MUTHUSWAMI IYER'S CONCEPTION OF A JUDGE'S DUTY.

You are all aware that he fought his way up from small beginnings to the position of a Judge of this Court, the highest position then open to a son of the soil, and his career reminds one of the careers of men like Lincoln and the traditions associated with the White House. When he was called to his high office he felt the hand of Destiny in it. He had a lofty conception of his function as a Judge which permeated his work throughout his judicial career. In the inimitable language of his Convocation Address, "the Court of Justice is a sacred temple; the judges presiding over it are, though men, the humble instruments in the interests of truth and those who enter this holy edifice with unholy thought or desecrate it with unworthy actions are traitors to their God and to their country. Those of you who may rise to the Bench should recollect that the power you may be called on to exercise in the name of your sovereign is according to one of your ancestors a Power Divine."

HIS JUDGMENTS.

During his long career on the Bench, he enriched British Indian jurisprudence in almost every department of law, and the learning enshrined in the law reports of the period is ample proof of it. In evaluating his work, one, of course, cannot overlook the fact that he had the evident advantage of being somewhat in the position of a new explorer, at least in certain departments of law, and he did not suffer from what under particular circumstances would be termed the 'dead weight' of binding judicial precedents, and he had many gaps to fill in the law.

It would not be just to Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer to regard him merely as a Hindu lawyer of great distinction. The reports are all replete with classical and leading judgments of his in every department of law. He was equally at home in dealing with a recondite case on the law of trusts, a complicated question in the law of torts, State rights in regard to property, caste autonomy or quasi ecclesiastical jurisdiction, State responsibility in regard to the wrongs of servants, or in formulating the exact scope of an act of State. In his judgments possibly you might miss the subtlety and over-ratiocination of a Selborne or a Bhaashyam Iyengar or the bold and challenging statement of principle that you find in the judgment of a Macnaughten or a Subramania Aiyar. The balancing of considerations and the weighing of a number of reasons are, if I might say so, both the merit and the weakness of his reported judgments, but there can be no doubt as to the cogency of his reasons and the soundness of his conclusions.

In his work as a Judge, he struck the happy mean between judicial valour and judicial discretion." He did not start with the discontent that all is wrong with the law and he was there to reform the jurisprudence of his country, nor did he set before himself the ideal that it is not the province of a Judge to make the law under any circumstances but only to find and administer it, which if I may venture to say, is in many cases more in the nature of a legal myth than a working rule of judicial administration. If he was against the Judge assuming the role of a social legislator, he was equally against going back to the Vedic or the Smritic period without reference to the custom obtaining in the country and the Hindu Law as accepted by the Hindu community.

He regarded the form and style in which the judgments are couched as important as the substance. He cultivated a chaste style which was free from the vice of unnecessary ornamentation or wearisome repetition. His style bears the impress of an intensive study of the classics of English literature which marked the generation that produced men like Gopal Rao and Ranganatham and that first came under the spell of English literature. The decisions in the Tirupanandal and the Ramnad cases show that he was a master of judicial and historical narrative, which is in its proper setting and which fits in with the determination of the issues that arise for consideration in the case.

HIS ADVICE TO YOUNG LAWYERS.

Though he never practised the profession of law, he was deeply alive to the value and importance of the legal profession in the mechanism for the sound administration of justice. He always impressed upon the profession the nobleness and dignity of their task. These are his words to the alumni of the University: "You should remember, if you desire to rise to professional eminence, that law is both a science and an art, and that your success whether at the Bar or on the Bench will depend on the clearness with which you understand the principles of the science, and on the readiness with which you will pass through a complicated mass of facts in the midst of animated and often eloquent addresses taking in as it were by intuition each fact, referring it to its appropriate principle, and estimating its legal value within a given time. The study of law, as has been well said, is in its highest sense the study of the philosophy of social life. The art you have to practise is one of the noblest; its object is the protection of human interests in all the relations of life and the methods by which rules of decision are deduced must satisfy at once the requirements of legal science and of substantial justice. . . You should never be hasty or impulsive and thereby shut out even the faintest ray of light from forensic discussion. You should never heed any appeal to your passion or frailty, and never allow your attention to stray from legal points of a case either amidst violent declaration or pathetic appeals and always see before you pronounce your decision that the responsibility rests not with you individually but either with the law-giver or with the science of jurisprudence."

HIS PUBLIC ACTIVITIES.

His activities were not confined to his work on the High Court Bench. His advice was sought by the Government on all important proposals for legislation and his minutes on several important Bills reveal a keen grasp of the principles and proper scope of legislation and have been of considerable assistance even in legislation recently undertaken by the Indian Legislatures. He took a keen interest in public and philanthropic movements of this Presidency and was an active member of the University and several educational organisations.

Loyalty to the British throne and connection was a part of religious faith with him. While he was proud of the greatness of his country in the past, he had a clear vision of its future and destined goal. It may be of interest to know that he envisaged the conception of partnership between England and India as the goal of Indian political aspirations and the Balfour formula of the British Empire being the Commonwealth of free peoples. In his own words "even when India is regenerated, I for one think that our relation to Great Britain must be that of a Colonial Constitutional Government affiliated to and in federal loyal union with the present constitution," and he expressed the hope that the two nations will regard each other with that brotherly feeling with which they regarded one another before they left their Caspian home in remote antiquity.

I hope and pray that the memory of this great Judge will continue to animate successive generations of Judges and lawyers. The growth of democracy and the levelling up of the common man being the rightful social objective have not shaken my faith in the belief that the greatness of a country is measured by the number of great men it produces. May this old country continue to produce many more men of that type.

Executor's Right of Retainer against the Crown.

The House of Lords has recently decided an important point relating to an executor's right of retainer, in Jackson v. Attorney-General (173 L. T. 150). In this case Clauson, J., had held that the executor's right of retainer had priority over the Crown's claim for income-tax and super-tax. This decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal (Romer, J., dissenting). The House of Lords has reversed the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal and has held that an executor cannot exercise his right of retainer against the Crown as a preferential creditor for income-tax and super-tax. The principle underlying the decision is that the right of retainer could be exercised under the common law only against debts of equal degree, and in so far as the Bankruptcy laws had given priority to Crown debts they were debts of a higher degree than the executor's, and the right of retainer could not therefore be availed of against such debts.

Power of a Company to grant pensions and annuities.

An interesting question of company law was decided by Eve, J., in In re Lee Behrens & Co. Ltd., (173 L. T. 151). Under its memorandum of association a company had power to make provision for persons in the service of the company and their widows and children. After the death of a managing director, by a resolution of the directors the company executed a deed in favour of his widow agreeing to pay her an annuity of £ 500. The company went into liquidation and the widow lodged proof for the capital value of the annuity. Eve, J., held that such gifts could be made by a company only if (i) they were reasonably incidental to the business of the company, (ii) were bona fide, and (iii) were made for the benefit or prosperity of the company. The claim was rejected as there was no evidence to prove conditions (i) and (iii). The decision was also based on the further ground that, as the annuity was given to one of the body of directors, it could not be valid unless it was specially authorised by the instruments governing the company or by a general meeting. In commenting upon this case the Law Times draws attention to cases on the other side of the line and summarises the position thus: "Put quite shortly the position with regard to all classes and employees seems to be this. Given the power, an enlightened selfishness should guide the company. They should have regard to labour and all other conditions and make payments which will cause the company and its directors to be generally regarded by employees and others as 'decent people to work for.'"

The Law of Restitution.

In Satgur Prasad v. Mahant Harnarain Das (136 Ind. Cas. 108; 36 O. W. N. 461) the Judicial Committee has answered the difficult question whether, when a conveyance is set aside on the ground of undue influence and fraud the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits from the date of the conveyance or only from the date on which the conveyance was avoided. Though the point appears to be a simple one, it raises several difficult questions relating to the law of restitution, and the true interpretation of the definition of 'mesne profits' in the Civil Procedure Code and of s. 65 of the Contract Act. In the first place their Lordships have held, applying the maxim that no man can be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, that as between the purchaser and the person defrauded the possession of the former is wrongful, within the meaning of s. 2 (12), Civil Procedure Code, from the date of the transaction. Secondly, it has been held that a case like this would fall within the terms of s. 65 of the Contract Act. Their Lordships view that there is no difficulty in holding that the words "when a contract becomes void" in s. 65 are wide enough to cover a voidable contract which has been avoided, sets at rest a point upon which there was some controversy in India and much argument before the Board. Their Lordships were further of opinion that, regarding the transaction as one that has passed out of the realm of contract, it fell within s. 88, of the Trusts Act and the purchaser was bound under that section to hold any advantage so gained for the benefit of the plaintiff. The fourth and the strongest ground upon which their Lordships have based their decision is that, apart from these statutory provisions, the plaintiff is entitled in a case of this nature to succeed in his claim upon general principles of equity. Where there is no difficulty in putting the parties back in the position which they had occupied on the date of the document and where there is no proof of undue delay on the part of the plaintiff in bringing a suit he should have an account of the rents and profits from that date, the defendant being entitled to credit in the account for all payments made by him to the plaintiff. The conclusion cannot be otherwise. But the view that the possession of the purchaser is wrongful from the date of the transaction may give rise to some difficulties when questions of limitation or adverse possession arise.

Preliminary issues of fact: A dangerous practice.

Order XIV, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, empowers the Court to frame preliminary issues of law and to postpone the settlement of the issues of fact until after the issues of law have been determined. The rule does not contemplate preliminary issues of fact but a practice seems to prevail under which at times issues which raise questions of fact and which can be conveniently tried before the other issues are framed on a summary taken out for that purpose. The legality of this practice was considered by Beaman, J., of the Bombay High Court in Kabai v. Sir Thukoji Rao Helkar (34 Bom. L. R. 6.) After referring to the corresponding practice of 'demurrer' in England his Lordship says that strictly speaking under O. XIV the Court has no power to frame something in the nature of a preliminary issue of fact. His Lordship further points out that it is a dangerous practice because unless the Judge has before him and present to his mind all the issues which arise he may fail to realise that the particular issue which he has framed really depends on the answer to other issues. We may also refer our readers to the case of Bhimnath v. Jaggur Nath (89 Ind. Cas. 814; 7 P. L. T. 82; A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 674) in which Mullick and Ross, JJ., have condemned the practice of framing preliminary issues of fact. In this case Mullick, J., said that the Court is competent to postpone the trial of issues of fact if the case can be decided on issues of law only, but there was no authority under the Code for postponing the trial of an issue of fact except on the ground of embarrassment. Ross, J., was also of the same opinion.

Admissibility of statements made by accused persons to the Police.

In Syama Maha Patro v. Emperor (Or. App. Nos 705 & 706 of 1931) decided on January 29, (Reilly, Anantakrishna Iyer, and Sundaram Chetty, JJ.) the Madras High Court has struck a bold note of dissent from the views of the Patna, Lahore, Rangoon and Calcutta High Courts upon the important question whether statements made by accused persons fall within the purview of s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code. In view of the fact that four High Courts had taken a different view, Reilly, J., who has written the leading judgment has examined in detail the rulings of these High Courts but after a close examination of the reasonings on which they are based says that he cannot agree with the reasoning in any of them. Reilly, J., refutes the first argument advanced for the contrary view, namely, that based on s. 161, Criminal Procedure Code, by challenging the view that s. 161 applies only to witnesses. With regard to the argument that s. 27, Evidence Act, would be practically repealed if s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, is so interpreted as to include statements of accused persons Reilly, J., without disputing the principle that general provisions do not derogate from special provisions, holds that the proper application of this rule would lead to a contrary result and that the method in which the other High Courts have applied this rule is 'clearly fallacious.' As regards the third argument which has been advanced in support of their view by the Patna and Calcutta High Courts viz., that to bring the statements of accused within s. 162 would be to 'deprive the accused of what so often is a mainstay of a good defence—the right to show that the moment he was challaned he gave the explanation on which he now relies'. Reilly, J., holds that the interpretation put by these High Courts would expose the accused to the risk of most damaging statements made by them to the Police being proved against them and that, if it were justifiable to let the balance of benefit or risk to the accused to affect the interpretation of the section, it would be better for the accused to read the section in its plain meaning. The Nagpur and the Sindh Courts have adopted the view of the majority. Though the weight of authority is heavily against the view of the Madras Full Bench, we think that Reilly, J., is right in his interpretation of s. 162. This view has in its favour the fact that it takes the plain and literal meaning of the words 'any person' uninfluenced by farfetched considerations of doubtful relevancy. Anyhow we await with interest the opinion of the Bombay and the Allahabad High Courts.

The Number of Judges.

In the course of our legal history the number of judges by whom the Courts have been staffed has varied from time to time, although it is curious to observe that little increase has been made in any way proportionate to the increase of the population. In the early days, according to the Comte de Franqueville, the usual number was twelve—that is, four for each of the common law Courts, although occasionally this number was exceeded. Fortescue says that in the King's Bench the number of the judges was sometimes five, and in the Court of Common Pleas the number varied between five and six. James I. fixed the personnel of each Court at five, for the reason that numero Deus impare gaudet; but at a later date the number was again fixed at four, and it stood at this for a long period. In 1830, and again in 1868, the numbers were increased, and by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876 provision was made for two Additional Judges in certain eventualities, but as we all know, the more recent legislation has required that before any additional judge or judges can be appointed if the number of the puisnes in the King's Bench Division amounts to fifteen, it is necessary that there should be a resolution of both Houses of Parliament to the effect that the state of business in that Division requires the Additional judge or judges. It was after this procedure had been followed that Mr. du Parc, the new recruit to the Bench, was appointed.—The Law Times.

Lord Dunedin and the Parliamentary Bar.

In his impression of the Bench and Bar during the last few years contributed to The Times last week, Lord Dunedin tells the story of the interchange of pleasantries between Bidder, Q.C., and Balfour Browne, Q.C., when the former appealed to the Chairman of Committee of the House of Lords to "ask Mr. Balfour Browne to allow me to speak without interruption, his voice worries me," and Balfour Browne's counter stroke with, "Mr. Chairman, would you ask Mr. Bidder not to keep looking this way? his face worries me," which has a certain piquancy. The incident was, we believe, first given publicity, minus the names of the protagonists, by the late Mr. Foote in his charming book, "Pie Powder." Then it got into Balfour Browne's own reminiscences, "Forty Years at the Bar," where Bidder's name is disclosed, but a discreet silence is observed as to the name of his opponent, the comment being added: "There is no record of how these cross-applications were dealt with by the tribunal!" Balfour Browne's book reveals that at the Parliamentary Bar in his time irascibility was by no means uncommon. Of E. H. Pember, Q.C., we are told that on one occasion he was greatly irritated by his client setting him right on some trifling matter. Pember turned upon the client as if he would have rent him, and his annoyance even went the length of some not very complimentary expressions. With the view of throwing oil upon the troubled waters, the Chairman said: "Go on, Mr. Pember." But the interposition was not successful. I "can't go on, my Lord," said Pember, "I hate being corrected from behind." "It reminds him of his youth," cruelly whispered one of the Counsel on the other side!—The Law Times.

Spiritualism and the Law.

While we hold no brief either for or against spiritualism as a cult, we rather welcome the observations of Mr. Justice Humphreys in an action tried last week where the plaintiff was a medium.

The learned Judge said he could see no evidence that the plaintiff earned money in an illegal way. So far as her astrology went she called herself an entertainer, which was what the Judge thought she was. As to the power of communicating with persons who have passed into another sphere, Justice Humphreys said:—

"I say in all business that one has no right to laugh at people who hold these beliefs. They are held by people of the highest standing in this country—scientists and others. One must not make fun of people who believe these things. Holding seances clearly is not illegal."

That there are frauds committed in the name of spiritualism, that there are some dishonest mediums, and that harm is caused by charlatans trading on the credulity of weak-minded people by fortune-telling, is beyond dispute. There remain, however, the conscientious people who believe in a spiritualism which, whether its belief be truth or error, is far removed from all taint of trickery and fortune-telling. These are entitled to be treated seriously and to be regarded as respectable people.—Justice of the Peace.

Current Crime in London.

Students of crime and criminals might look into the current calendar of the London Sessions. The average age of the ninety-five prisoners is twenty-six years. Twenty-eight of them are under twenty-one years of age. And unhappily a good many have appeared in the courts a number of times before, and their reappearance would suggest that they have not derived much benefit from the efforts made to amend them. An encouraging fact is that under five per cent. of the total prisoners are women. This cannot altogether be explained by the fact that sex debars them. Theft, eg, is as easy, if not easier, for women than for men. The fact is that they are more lawabiding citizens. Their work in the home may conduce to that. But it is indeed a matter for anxiety that so many youths and boys seem set on crime. Is the cause laziness, or the spirit of adventure, or crass indifference to moral considerations?

The excuse commonly alleged is want of work. As has been often pointed out by the chairman and deputy chairman that excuse has no legal validity. And on the moral side, the appeal it makes is weak. Even in these days unemployment insurance goes a good way. It is a sad fact that some young people will go wrong in spite of every effort made to help them. They are morally diseased, perhaps beyond hope of cure, as much as some people are similarly diseased physically. In some cases the moral trouble may be associated with physical abnormality. Its treatment, if attempted, calls for prolonged isolation.—Justice of the Peace.

Carlyle and the Law.

The announcement that a new edition of Carlyle's "Reminiscences"—the work which on its first appearance brought down fulminations on the head of Froude, quite unjustifiably, as not a few competent observers thought—is to be included in the forthcoming addition to the Everyman's Library, will excite pleasurable anticipations in the minds of many who, owing to the cost of the original issue and the fact that for some time it has not been easily procurable, have been unable to obtain it. In the sketch of Lord Jeffrey, Carlyle tells us how, when a mere lad, he visited the Parliament House, Edinburgh, and gazed with wonderment on the advocates in their professional garb of wig and gown. One figure of the many whom he saw on that day stood out conspicuous in his memory ever after: this was John Clerk, with "his grim strong countenance, with its black far-projecting brows and look of great sagacity." Clerk was then in the front rank of Scottish pleaders, a man fiercely combative who feared no one and who retained the Doric when it was fast disappearing from the language of the courts. It is possible that to this youthful visit to the Court of Session may be attributed the transient desire that Carlyle had for entering the legal profession. We know that after he had abandoned the idea of entering the Scottish church he dallied with the law; in fact, he read a good deal of legal literature and also attended the lectures of Hume, the nephew of the philosopher, on Scots law; but like so much else with which he intermeddled in his youth, he soon tired of this inclination for the law, and, as he says, "the admired lecturing Hume himself," and lawyers generally, appeared to him "mere denizens of the kingdom of darkness, pointing to nothing but money as wages for all that bogful of disgust." So the legal studies were given up, and the only subsequent connection he had with legal affairs was when he was summoned to act as a juror. But the paper already mentioned remains as a remarkable tribute to the skill of Jeffrey as an advocate, and as a good friend of Carlyle when he had not too many of them. The account of Jeffrey's defence of one Nell Kennedy, charged with wholesale murder, is done in Carlyle's best style—The Law Times

Lord Macnaghten and the Reporters.

No one needs to be told that Lord Macnaghten was a very distinguished lawyer; one has only to read a few of the judgments he delivered to be convinced of this. Not so many, perhaps, are aware, however, that he had also a pretty wit which he could display at times with considerable effect. Only the other day, the present writer, while looking for something else, stumbled again upon an example of this, in which the noble Lord indulged in the playful pastime of pulling the nether limb of the reporters. The passage in question occurs in the well-known case of Keighley, Maxsted and Co. v. Durant (1901) A. C. 240, the decision which laid it down that an undisclosed principal cannot ratify a contract by his agent in his own name in excess of his authority. Lord Macnaghten in his judgment has occasion to examine somewhat minutely the older case of Bird v. Brown, 4 Ex 786 on which great reliance had been placed by Lord Justice Collins in the Court of Appeal. That case, said Lord Macnaghten, "is instructive, I think, and useful, because it tends to shake one's confidence in the infallibility of reports, which always seem to carry the more weight the less opportunity there is of testing their accuracy. Why should an obscure report be taken for gospel merely because it is old? Bird v. Brown was heard by four judges. Only one judgment was given. The Exchequer Reports, attribute the judgment to Baron Rolfe. The Law Journal ascribes it to Baron Parke. The Jurist puts it in the mouth of the Chief Baron Pollock. No one gives it to the fourth judge but then there were only three sets; of reports current at the time. The Weekly Reporter did not begin till later." Having thus thrown doubt upon the authorship of the judgment in question, Lord Macnaghten proceeds to question the correctness in point of law of a paragraph which appears in the Exchequer Reports and in the Jurist but not in the Law Journal. It is all very amusing, but the incident shows that even Lords of Appeal, just like the humble reporters, are not exempt from the liability of making slips; and Lord Macnaghten was not alone when he stated that at the material time there were only three sets of reports covered by the Court of Exchequer. There was the Law Times (Old Series) which reported the case of Bird v. Brown, 14 Law Times (O. S.) 399, and the curious in the matter will find that the report there agrees with that of the Law Journal in attributing the authorship of the judgment to Baron Parke, and further agrees with it in omitting the paragraph which met with Lord Macnaghten's disapproval.—The Law Times.

Lord Dunedin on Judges, New and Old

Lord Dunedin, in his fine article in The Times, after making due allowance for "the natural feeling of awe and respect which one had for the Judges and leading Counsel of one's youth," gives it as his considered opinion that the erudition of the older generation was greater than that of the present; but that the younger generation are more inclined to go straight to the point. It is improbable that our modern Judges would admit their own comparative lack of erudition, or that junior Counsel are speedier than those of their own generation in getting to the point. Yet, on the whole, it is probably true in the main, that estimate of Lord Dunedin's. The Law of so long ago was within reasonable bounds. Erudition was possible in fairly large departments.

Now there are so great a multitude of Statutes, so many amendments of and exceptions to the Common Law and the Statutes themselves; so vast a body of legislation by reference, and so little force in legal and learned technicalities which of old were all important, that Judges are tending more and more to rely on what they believe to be commonsense and less on old formulæ and precedents. No generation of Judges, I am sure, can compare with our own in the faculty or gift of finding the hidden meaning in the obscure clauses of Statutes. The occasion has produced the men; and necessity has once more proved to be the mother of invention.

Our Own Individuality.

Yet, when Lord Dunedin declares that, in his opinion, there was more striking individuality in the older generation, one cannot so readily agree that this was so in any favourable sense. Without mentioning any names, following the principle de mortuis nil nisi bonum, one can say that by all accounts there were some extremely rude, unpleasant and overbearing Judges and leading Counsel of the older generation, and if this was a sign of superior individuality and personality, it is matter for congratulation that they have passed peacefully away—The Law Journal.

Recent Legislative Measures.

Council of State Bills.

Three Bills have been recently introduced in the Council of State. The statement of objects and reasons to the first Bill recites that there is no special provision in the law of India prescribing the procedure to be followed in cases where Courts in British India are required to take evidence for foreign tribunals in civil and commercial matters and that the object of the bill is to lay down the outlines of the procedure to be followed so as to secure a general uniformity in the practice of the Indian High Courts. The procedure which is intended to be laid down is on the lines of that followed in England. Power is reserved to the High Courts to supplement the rules in order to adapt them to their own special needs. New sections are proposed to be added to the end of O. XXVI, Civil Procedure Code, under the heading "Commissions issued at the instance of foreign Tribunals".

In regard to suits relating to public charities and trusts the Local Government had taken the view that under s. 93, Civil Procedure Code, it was sufficient for them to give previous sanction to the Collector or to the Special Officer generally and not in respect of each particular case. It has been held, however, by the Privy Council (Prem Narayan v. Ramcharan, (1932) A. L. J. 182) that the previous sanction must be recorded in respect of each particular suit. As a large number of suits which have been instituted without particular sanction are now pending, Bill No. 2 of 1932, proposes to validate all such suits, and to provide for retrial of claims which may have been dismissed for absence of the requisite sanction.

Bill No. 3, (a non-official Bill) proposes to add to the Indian Life Assurance Companies Act, 1912, a new section to the effect that the whole of the Life Assurance Fund of the Indian Companies should be invested in India, and that Companies having head offices outside India but carrying on business in India should invest in India from their life fund a sum not less than the share of their Indian business. It is also proposed to provide that not less than 25 per cent. of the life fund should be invested in Government Securities as defined by The Indian Securities Act, 1883.

Legislative Assembly Bills, Nos. 26 to 29.

Bill No. 26 is intended to extend the operation of the Salt Additional Import Duty Act, 1931, to a further period of one year. The next Bill, No. 27 of 1932, (the Indian Tariff Wireless Broadcasting Amendment Bill) proposes to provide funds to enable the Government to continue wireless broadcasting in India by increasing the import duties leviable on wireless reception apparatus. The Bill proposes to increase the present duty of 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. Bill No. 28 of 1932 (the Tea Districts Emigrant Labour Bill) amends the law relating to emigrant labourers in the Tea District of Assam in accordance with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Labour. Another Bill to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923 in accordance with the recommendations of the Haj enquiry committee appointed in 1929 to enquire into the arrangements for pilgrims proceeding to the Hajez, has also been introduced.

Notes of Recent English Cases.

Interpretation of deeds—'Minerals'—Whether include sand and gravel—Rules of construction.

The word 'minerals' in a grant of conveyance is capable of restriction or expansion and must be interpreted in each case according to the apparent intention of the parties, local custom etc. This principle applies not only to cases where land has been taken under statutory authority but also to conveyances between private persons.

Principal and agent—'Sole selling agency'—Sale by principal direct—Breach of agreement.

The defendant company who manufactured bricks entered into a contract with the plaintiffs, a firm of merchants, appointing the latter their 'sole selling agents' for the sale of bricks for a period of three years. During the currency of the period the defendant company wrote to the plaintiffs that a certain person who was the director of the defendant company intended to sell all bricks manufactured in the future without the intervention of the plaintiffs, claiming that the company did not lose its right to sell its own bricks provided they were not sold through some other agents. Held, that inasmuch as the defendant company had appointed the plaintiffs as their sole selling agents they (the defendant company) were not entitled to sell either directly or through an agent and therefore the defendant company's letter amounted to a repudiation of the contract and the plaintiffs were entitled to damages for breach of contract. Wright, J., W. T. Lamb & Sons v. Goring Brick Co. (1932) 101 L. J. K. B. 42.

Bankruptcy—Limited partnership—Sole general partner—Mode of proof.

An ordinary partnership is not a legal entity in the sense that a limited company is a legal entity, and the Limited Partnership Act, 1907 does not create a limited partnership a legal entity. Therefore, the method of administering a estate in Bankruptcy where there is an ordinary partnership is to be applied, so far as is possible, in the case of a limited partnership. Where a person was the sole general partner in two limited partnerships and these partnerships were successively adjudicated Held, that the partnerships were entitled to prove in the same way as they would be entitled to prove against an individual in successive bankruptcies, Farwell J., Barnard, in re; Martin's Bank Ltd. v. The Trustee, (1932) 101 L. J. Ch. 43.

Company — Liquidation — Copyright—Author's Rights—Applicability of Bankruptcy Rules.

Section 262 of the Companies Act, 1929, does not incorporate s. 60 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1914 which provides that where the property of a bankrupt comprises the copyright in any work and he is liable to pay to the author of the work royalties or a share of the profits in respect thereof the trustee shall not be entitled to sell any copies of the work except on the terms of paying to the author such sums by way of royalty or share of the profits as would have been payable by the bankrupt and that the trustee shall not without the consent of the author or of the court be entitled to assign or transfer the interest in the copyright except upon terms which would secure to the author his royalties. The rights of the parties in the winding-up of a publishing company should be decided without reference to s. 60 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914. Maugham, J., Health Promotion, Ltd., In re, (1932) 101 L. J. Ch. 58.

Easements—Light and air—Dominant tenament pulled down—Rights of dominant owner.

The plaintiffs' building which was entitled to ancient lights was pulled down and a new building was erected in its place. After the new building had been completed the defendants pulled down their building and began to erect a new building. The plaintiffs sued for an injunction to restrain the defendants from obstructing their ancient lights. There was no proof of the extent of the identity of the old and new windows of the plaintiffs' building but it was admitted that there were pencils of ancient light admitted through the new windows. Held (i) that the mere lack of evidence of an intention by the plaintiffs to preserve their ancient lights was not by itself sufficient to prove an intention to abandon them; (ii) that having regard to the uncertainty as to the exact dimensions of the windows and lights it was impossible to determine whether a nuisance would be caused by the new building which the defendants intended to erect and the plaintiffs were not therefore entitled to the injunction claimed. Farwell, J., News of the World Ltd., v. Allah Fairhead & Sons Ltd, (1932) 146 L. T. 11.

Wit and Humour.

Both Correct.—The suit was for slander, and had assumed the form of a cross-suit for the improper use of the unruly member. Counsel on each side was of the highest standing. All Virginians will assent to this when told that Samuel Taylor was for the plaintiff and Benjamin Wat Kenis Leigh for the defendant. The court being opened and the case being called, the Judge said, "Mr. Taylor, are you ready in this case?" Mr. Taylor replied, "If Jerry Moody is here, I am ready." "Mr. Leigh, are you ready?" "May it please your honor, I am ready if Jerry Moody is here." "Sheriff, call Jerry Moody." The Sheriff went to the door and lustily called thrice for Jerry Moody to come into court. Soon Jerry, a tall, thin, straight man, came forward. The Jury were sworn. Then Jerry was sworn. In his solemn and forcible manner Mr. Taylor said to the witness: "So good as to tell the court and jury what you know about this case." Witness said, "Well, I have often heard the defendant say that the plaintiff was a rogue, a thief, and a liar; and I have often heard the plaintiff say that the defendant was a rogue, a thief, and a liar; and they were the only times I ever heard either of them tell the truth."—Case and Comment.

Not Half Stript.—During the hearing of a case, the Judge was disturbed by a youth who kept moving about in the rear of the court.

"Young man", he exclaimed, "you are making a good deal of unnecessary noise. What are you doing?"

"I have lost my overcoat and am trying to find it," replied the offender.

"Well," said the Judge, "people often lose whole suits in here without all that fuss."—Case and Comment.

Squaring the Circle—Bursting open the door marked "Private," the butcher confronted the local lawyer.

"If a dog steals a piece of meat from my shop, is the owner liable?" he asked the man behind the desk.

"Certainly," replied the lawyer.

"Very well, your dog took a piece of steak worth half a dollar about five minutes ago."

"Indeed," he returned smoothly. "Then if you give me the other half, that will cover my fee."—Case and Comment.

Notes on Current Topics.

Judges' Salaries and the Economy Act.

The keen controversy that prevailed in England on the reduction of Judges' salaries has been temporarily set at rest by the statement made by Mr. Baldwin in the House of Commons that "Nothing has been further from the intention of the Government than to derogate in any way from the special position in which His Majesty's Judges stand by virtue of the Act of Settlement, the Act of 1 George III and later Statutes, or to affect, directly or indirectly, the independence, security or prestige of their high office." The decision of the question whether the National Economy Act which directed the cut in salaries 'in respect of any office in His Majesty's Service, applies to the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Court has, however, been avoided and the cut is to continue, though the constitutional position of the Judges has been recognised.

Imprisonment for debt

While the jails of India are being filled with political prisoners people in England are becoming alarmed at the number of persons who are imprisoned for debt every year. More than three thousand persons are reported to have been sent last year to the Brixton prison alone on this account. This increasing number is attracting the attention of our English contemporaries and creating doubts in their minds as to the wisdom of sending persons to jail and keeping them there for failure to pay debts. The Justice of the Peace observes: "When debtors are committed to prison, and remain there, there is a presumption that the law has failed in its object."

An Unusual Order.

In the recent case of Tuan Man and another v. Chz Som and others decided on the 19th February, (136 J. O. 632) the Judicial Committee has made some important observations on the procedure to be followed by an appellate Court when it remands a case for bringing a party on record. In this case the appellate Court in remanding a case for impleading a necessary party ordered that the suit should stand over for a period to enable the plaintiffs to remedy the defect caused by that person not being party to the suit. If the defect was not remedied within the period, the defendants, the order continued, might apply to the trial Judge for an order dismissing the suit. If the defect was remedied the plaintiffs might apply to the trial Judge for a decree to be made by him in terms which had been set forth in the order of the Court of appeal. Their Lordships said that the order as an unusual one and observed: "It is hardly in accordance with precedent, that a Court of appeal should, after sending a case back to the trial Judge for the purpose of having a necessary party brought before the Court, proceed (before the new party has been joined or heard, and without considering what defences may be available against him) to indicate the order which the trial Judge should make when he tries the case in the presence of the proper parties."

A Salutory Rule of Practice.

We invite the attention of judicial officers to the decision of Mukerji, J., in Ajai Verma v. Baldeo Prasad (16 R. D. 56). In this case Mukerji, J. in restoring to the file certain appeals which had been dismissed for default of appearance without sending for the Pleaders engaged, observes:

"There is nothing to suggest that the two Pleaders who had been engaged in the appeals were ever sent for. As a matter of practice, when there are Pleaders in a case they are always sent for by the court and this is a salutary practice. No doubt, the peon calls out at the door of the court and that is very often sufficient, but when there are Pleaders, the ordinary practice of sending for them should not be discontinued. This practice is followed even in the High Court. In appeals especially, it is not necessary that parties should be present in person when there are constituted agents in the shape of Counsel in court. Counsel would be busy in several courts and it is conducive to good work that they should be sent for."

We may in the connection refer to an important aspect of the matter which the learned Chief Justice of the Patna High Court has forcibly expressed in these terms:—

"No human ingenuity has been able to solve the problem of the administration of justice whereby two cases are liable to come up in different courts at the same time. There is no way of getting out of the difficulty. The profession itself, I know, would welcome any suggestion by which any solution of the difficulty could be found." In the matter of N, a Pleader [116 Ind. Cas. 764; 10 P. L. T. 664; A. I. R 1929 Pat. 153.]

It would be impossible for Pleaders under such circumstances to be always waiting in any particular court and it is only fair that they should be sent for. This is a matter of judicial etiquette and is observed by the Judges of the superior Courts of India. The practice of dismissing cases for default when Pleaders are engaged in another court has also been condemned in strong terms by Mears, O. J. and Young, J., of the Allahabad High Court in Nathu v Babu Ram [I. L. R. 51 A. 758, 119 I. O. 435]. In this case the Subordinate Judge, in dismissing a suit, observed: 'it is their (the clients') duty to attend in time or to engage a Pleader who could attend in time'. Their Lordships said that this was a 'much too narrow view of the matter' and reminded the Subordinate Judge that 'it is the practice of Pleaders to earn their livings in other courts than his.' It was definitely ruled by their Lordships in this case that if a case is dismissed for default under such circumstances without adjourning the case to give time to the Counsel to attend, and the Counsel, on returning from the other court, explains his absence and asks for restoration 'it would be the duty of the Judge to restore the case at once.'

Decree against dead person.

The recent decision of Court of Appeal in Lazard Bros. Co. v. Banque Industrielle De Moscou (1932, 101 L. J. K. B. 65 Scrutton, L. J., Greer, L. J., Slessor, L. J.,) throws considerable light upon the procedure which a court should adopt when it has served a writ upon a dead person or a dissolved corporation and passed a decree in default of appearance. If a person injuriously affected by a judgment by default and not a party to that action desires to set aside the judgment he must apply either in the defendant's name if he is entitled to use it or in his own name by a summons served both on the plaintiff and the defendant to have it set aside. Their Lordships hold in this case that this rule cannot be applied to the case of a non-existent person or defendant on whom no summons can be served and that it is the duty of the court to set aside the judgment on its own motion. "Indeed," says Scrutton, L. J., "in my opinion, if it comes to the knowledge of the court that it has entered judgment in default of his appearance against a man who was at the time dead, or a company which was at the time dissolved or non-existent according to the law of its country of origin, the court is bound, after hearing the parties interested, of its own motion to set the judgment aside. Such a judgment is null and void."

A Bogus Doctrine Exposed

The supposed rule that where a contract between A & B creates a charge on immovable property in favour of C, C is entitled to enforce the charge though he was not a party to the original contract has exploded. The decisions which are cited as authorities for this proposition are Iswaran Pillai v. Tharakan (38 M. 753) and Subbu Chettiar v. Arunachalam Chettiar (53 M. 207; 124 I. O. 55 and the headnotes of these cases clearly enunciate such a rule. Jackson & Pakenham Walsh, J.J. of the Madras High Court have recently, in Suryanarayana Rao v. Basivireddy (1932 M. W. N. 44), traced the origin of this rule and have come to the conclusion that the supposed exception to the general rule is 'absolutely and entirely unwarranted by the judgments in these two cases' and that it has originated from 'pure interpolations in the headnotes.' The two rulings have been laboriously analysed by their Lordships and they have come to the conclusion that 'nothing so crude has ever been ruled by this court.' Walsh, J. who was a member of the Full Bench in Subbu Chettiar's Case says that an error had crept into an obiter remark in that case in consequence of an entirely misleading and incorrect headnote in Iswaran Pillai's case.

Successive Complaints on Same facts: A Full Bench Ruling.

The important question whether, where a complaint has been dismissed by a Magistrate of superior jurisdiction under s. 203, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate of inferior jurisdiction has power to entertain a charge sheet founded on a subsequent complaint on the same facts when the previous order of dismissal has not been set aside, was referred to a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in In re Ponnuswami Goundan (62 M. L. J. 469). Though in 1905 a Full Bench of the same High Court had by a majority decided in Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Goundan [I. L. R. 29 M. 126] that a Magistrate who had dismissed a complaint had jurisdiction to entertain a fresh complaint, the correctness of that decision was challenged in this case. Their Lordships have, however, unanimously re-affirmed the principle laid down in the earlier case and further extended it to cases where the dismissal was by a different Magistrate, even a Magistrate of superior jurisdiction.

The other High Courts of India have also taken the same view [vide 28 C. 211, 36 Cal. 415, 36 A. 129, 92 I. O. 895 (All.); 84 I. O. 838 (Rang.), 87 I. O. 527 (Bom.), 120 I. O. 15 (Lah.)]. In the Lahore High Court it has been held that a second complaint is maintainable even where the order of dismissal has been confirmed by a superior Court (Bhide J. in Alla Ditta v. Karam Bakhsh, 120 I. O. 15). As sections 203 and 403, Criminal Procedure Code, stand, it is impossible to come to a different conclusion. We would, however, invite the attention of the Legislature to the following pertinent observations which their Lordships have made in this case:

"It is curious no doubt that the Code, while empowering superior courts to direct further enquiry into complaints that have been dismissed under s. 203 which would seem to supply a complete and adequate remedy against improper dismissal, should, at the same time, allow a complainant and a Magistrate to dispense with that formality and permit the one to present and the other to entertain a complaint on the same facts as a complaint that has already been presented and dismissed. But that is not our concern."

Unpaid Vendor's rights.

There is some conflict of opinion between the Madras High Court on the one hand and the Allahabad and the Calcutta High Courts on the other on the question whether in a suit by a vendee for possession it is competent to the Court to pass a decree for possession conditional on the vendee paying the unpaid purchase money. The decisions of the Madras High Court are based principally upon the ground that under the Transfer of Property Act the vendee is entitled to possession and the vendor has only a statutory charge on the property. There is no provision for a vendor's lien in that Act and it is not permissible for a court to invoke equitable principles to modify the provisions of the Statute law. The Allahabad High Court, on the other hand, is of opinion that the court may on equitable grounds pass a decree in favour of the purchaser for possession conditional on the payment of the purchase money and direct that in default of such payment the purchaser shall forfeit his right to recover possession. The Calcutta High Court agrees with the Allahabad High Court on the ground that it is undesirable to drive the vendor to file a separate suit to enforce his charge. The view of the Madras High Court that equities cannot be invoked to modify the Statute law receives considerable support from the decision of the Privy Council in Ariff v. Jadunath Majumdar (1931; 33 Bom. L. R. 913). In a recent decision Basa Lingava v. Chinnava (34 Bom. L. R. 427) the matter came before the Bombay High Court. Baker, J. followed the Allahabad and Calcutta rulings. On Letters Patent Appeal the point was discussed in great detail by Patkar and Barlee, JJ., and their Lordships have followed a middle course. They agree with the Madras view that the vendee is entitled to possession and that equities cannot be invoked against this right, but at the same time they agree with the Calcutta High Court that the vendor should not be driven to a separate suit to enforce his statutory charge for unpaid purchase. The correct procedure according to the Bombay High Court is, therefore, to pass a conditional decree for possession but to pass a decree for possession with a declaration that the vendor is entitled to a statutory charge and giving the vendor liberty to apply for sale to enforce his charge if the unpaid purchase money is not paid within a specified date.

Effect of Partition on Widow's right to maintenance.

A point of Hindu Law upon which there seems to be no direct authority has been decided in Bhagavanulu Narasimham v. Venkatasubamma (62 M. L. J. 632). The point at issue in this case was whether when the widow of a coparcener sues for maintenance after there has been a partition, she can enforce her rights against all the surviving co-parceners or only against those who have taken her husband's share. Relying on the principle laid down in Jayanti Subbayya v. Alamelu Mangamma (I. L. R. 27 M. 45) that the widow's right to relief against the family is limited to the value of her husband's share, Waller and Jackson, JJ., have held that the widow cannot enforce her rights against any of the surviving co-parceners except those who have taken her husband's share. Subbarayulu Chetty v. Kamavalli Thayarammal (I. L. R. 35 M. 147) in which it was held that a widow's right for maintenance was enforceable against the whole family and not merely against her late husband's branch of it is distinguished on the ground that there the suit for partition was filed after the suit for maintenance. The decisions relied on by the learned Judges only lay down that the widow's right of maintenance is limited to the value of her husband's share. The matter is not free from difficulty but we think it is not safe to lay down as an invariable proposition of law that where there has been a partition the "widow cannot enforce her rights against any of the surviving co-parceners except those who have taken her husband's share." The equities and circumstances of the case may necessitate resort to the entire co-parcenary estate to secure the widow's rights and a partition to which she is not a party cannot operate as a legal bar or be allowed to prejudice her rights.

Big Silks and Little Judges?

I have heard it said, more than once of late, that at the Common Law Bar the number of leading silks who on their records are entitled to regard themselves as "superior" to some of the Judges shows a regrettable increase. If this be so, and if the reason for their continuance at the Bar is the unattractive remuneration of the Bench, ought not the judicial salaries to be increased rather than diminished; or, alternatively, would it not be advisable for the Government to levy a special tax on eminent Counsel's income from fees above a certain amount? The Law Journal.

Books of Authority

Occasionally one hears a Judge speaking from the Bench in appreciative terms of a textbook on some branch of law; but the recognition of the labours of their writers is scarcely commensurate with the amount of labour involved in the compilation of the works, or the value they possess even for those who are assumed to have all the law in their heads. Textbooks, as is generally known, have no binding authority, and are supposed to be prohibited from being cited in court during the lifetime of their authors. Why they should be regarded as assuming a degree of authority immediately on the demise of their writers has never been satisfactorily explained, if, indeed, it is susceptible of an explanation. We have said that textbooks have no binding authority, and this is true of all modern works, however much they possess of academic distinction; but a few old works seem to enjoy the right to be called authoritative, hence the name "books of authority." What are these? Mr. Fifoot, in his recently published book, English Law and its Background, enumerates them as follows; Littleton's Tenures, Glanvil, Bracton, Coke, and Blackstone. Not all agree in giving this rank to those just named. Sir Frederick Pollock, in his First Book of Jurisprudence, says that "no general description can be given of what constitutes a 'book of authority.' It is a matter of judicial custom and professional tradition Some books which are highly esteemed, and which it is not improper to cite in argument, are still short of having authority in the professional sense; Blackstone is the leading example. Sir Michael Foster's treatise on Crown Law, first published in 1762, only three years before Blackstone's Commentaries, is said to be the last book to which authority in the exact sense is ascribed." The subject is curious rather than practical, for the occasions when older writers are cited, the authors of "books of authority" are comparatively rare. Most practitioners clamour for the latest treatise on the branch of law in which at the moment they are interested, and we hear these cited in court totally regardless of the circumstance that they are not books of authority—The Law Times.

The Old Inns of Chancery.

In early times there had been little difference in the education and discipline of the two branches of the legal Profession, both Barristers and Attorneys being members of the same societies, but in the course of time the Inns of Court began to exclude the nonforensic branch from their rolls. The change, which had been gradual, was complete by the end of the sixteenth century, and it is from that time that personal intercourse with lay clients, which had hitherto been shared, became confined to solicitors, and so completely distinguished the two branches. Gradually the Old Inns of Chancery became monopolised by attorneys, writ clerks, and other minor officials, and when the decay of the Profession occurred in the eighteenth century it was felt more acutely by the less affluent of the Inns of Chancery. Whereas the members of Barnard's Inn had numbered 120 in the days of Queen Elizabeth, they could not muster more than eighteen in the middle of the last century. Two Special Committees reported in the course of the century, and as a result of their findings a scheme was propounded whereby the control of all attorneys and solicitors should be entrusted to one central authority. In 1843 the Master of the Rolls entrusted the custody of the Roll of Attorneys to the newly founded Law Society, and gradually the old societies died out—The Law Times.

Repudiation of Debts.

A Joint debate between the United Law Society and the Hardwicke Society was held last Monday, the 29th February in the Middle Temple Common Room. Mr. George Bull was in the chair. The Hon. Dougall Meston moved, and Mr. R. W. Bell seconded:

"That this country should repudiate its War debts to the United States of America."

Mr. A. Newman-Hall and Mr. A. A. Baden-Fuller opposed the motion on behalf of the Hardwicke Society. There also spoke: Messrs. P. K. Cross, M. V. Rabagliati, D. A. Stride, H. H. West, S. A. Redfern, T. A. Marfers, P. O. Hereward, and J. Harcourt Barrington. Mr. A. Newman-Hall having replied, the motion was put to the House, and there voted for the motion three, and against fifteen. The motion was therefore lost by twelve votes—The Law Times.

Notes of Recent English Cases.

Will—Power to appoint between two persons—Death of one before testator—Effect.

Where power is given by will to appoint between two named persons and one of them dies during the life-time of the testator the power itself is limited because it can be exercised only in favour of the survivor and the will ought to be construed as if the power over the share which might have been appointed to the deceased object had pro tanto lapsed.

Where the donee of a power of appointment has exercised the power for an amount greater than that over which it was given, the appointment is good with regard to the correct amount—(Maugham, J.)—Turner, In re; Hudson v. Turner, (1932) 101 L. J. Ch. 49.

Will—Gift for open air recreation—Validity—Charitable gift.

Where a testator by his will created a trust for providing grounds for open air recreation, such as 'playing fields, parks, or gymnasiums or other plants which will give recreation to as many people as possible.' Held, that the dedication of land to the public for recreation was a charitable object and the will, therefore, created a valid charitable trust. (Maugham J.) In re Sunnyfield, (1932) 101 Ch. 55.

Will—Settled request for up-keep of graves so far as trustees can legally do so—Validity—Rule against perpetuities.

Where a gift was made by will and the testator directed that the trustees should use the income of the fund for the upkeep of graves etc, in a cemetery 'so far as they legally can do so': Held that the provision meant 'so long as the law for the time being permits' and the trust was valid for a period of 21 years from the testator's death. Corporation—Service out of jurisdiction—Dissolution before date of service—Duty to set aside judgment.

If it comes to the knowledge of the court that it has entered judgment in default of appearance against a company which was at the time dissolved or non-existent according to the law of its country of origin the court is bound after hearing the parties interested of its own motion to set the judgment aside. As the Russian Government and the Russian Courts do not recognise the pre-revolution Banks as existing in Russia, British Courts would be slow in granting leave to serve notices of writs or substituted service of writs on the old banks without very clear evidence that they exist, (Scrutton, L. Greer, L. J., Slesser, L. J.) Lazard Bros., & Co., v. Banque Industrielle De Moscou (1932) 101 L. J. K. B. 65.

Torts—Negligence statutory authority—Omission to perform statutory obligations—Liability

The Port of London Authority owned a bridge which was partly a Railway bridge and partly a road and foot bridge and they were under a statutory obligation to maintain and repair it. The public had an unrestricted right of access to the bridge when it was not required to be thrown up for dock traffic. Owing to the non-repair of the bridge by the Authority the plaintiff while walking over the bridge struck his foot against a nail projecting from the footway and fell and sustained personal injuries. In a suit for damages: Held, that the bridge was not a highway and the position of the defendants being that of a person who had a statutory duty to repair, the defendants were liable for the ordinary consequences of injuries which resulted from their negligence. JOURNAL

Notes on Current Topics.

Pre audience of the Acting Advocate General.

It was decided by the Bombay High Court in 1865 (Sausse, O. J., and Westrop, J.) that the Acting Advocate-General had a right of pre-audience when appearing for the Crown but not when appearing for a private litigant. The question how far recent legislation had altered the position was considered by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court (Beaumont, O. J., Rangnekar, J. and Barlee, J.) in In re Pre-audience of the Acting Advocate-General (136 Ind. Cas 793) Mr. Taraporewala, the Acting Advocate-General, contended that under the Government of India Act of 1915, and the Bar Councils Act of 1926, the Acting Advocate-General had the right of pre-audience in all cases. Their Lordships held that notwithstanding the decision of 1865, by virtue of s. 114 of the Government of India Act, 1915, and the Bar Councils Act, 1926, and the amending Act of 1927, the Acting Advocate-General is entitled to a right of pre-audience over all other Advocates in respect of all business, whether for the Crown or of a private nature. With regard to the right itself their Lordships observe that it is not a personal privilege or a privilege based on any preference in respect of Crown business.

It may be noted that though the expression 'Advocate-General' is used only in the three major Presidencies, as their Lordships' ruling is mainly based on the Bar Councils Act and inasmuch as s. 2 of that Act defines 'Advocate-General' as including the Government Advocate where there is no Advocate-General, this ruling will apply to Acting Government Advocates of the other provinces also.

Liability of Dormant Partners.

Under the English Law if a partner not known to be such retires from the firm he cannot be made liable for debts contracted by the firm after his retirement, and apart from the solitary decision of Beaman, J. in Giswani Gorio & Co v. Kalyanji (30 I. C. 884) which has been dissented from in all the subsequent cases, the uniform trend of the rulings of the High Courts of India was to the effect that the law in India is the same. We may refer to Greaves Cotton & Co. v. Purushottam Dharamsi & Co. (5 Bom. L. R. 366), Jwala Datt v. Bansilal (104 Ind. Cas 520); 29 Bom. L. R. 1244 and Bhai Sankar v. Lakshmi Dyeing Works (129 Ind. Cas 538; 32 Bom. L. R. 1031) of the Bombay High Court; to Ramasami v. Kad r Bibi (9 M. 492) of the Madras High Court; David Sassoon & Co. Ltd, In re (100 Ind. Cas 389) of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court; and Hashmat Ali v. Lachmi Narain (75 P. R. 1905), and Bichhia Lal v. Munshi Ram (68 Ind. Cas. 932) of the Lahore High Court. That s. 261 of the Contract Act does not apply to dormant partners was in fact taken to be settled law in Jwala Datt v. Bansilal (104 Ind. Cas. 520) and by the Counsel who argued this case on appeal before the Privy Council. Rankin, O. J. and Buckland, J. of the Calcutta High Court, however, in a recent case Pramati v. Jwala Kar v. Bhagwandas Madan L. (Ind. Cas. 529; 59 Cal. 40) dissented from these rulings and held that a retiring partner would be liable if he does not give notice even though he was not known to be a partner. With all respect to these eminent Judges, it is difficult to find any principle of law upon which legal liability could be founded in such a case and we think that if the Legislature had intended to make such a deliberate deviation from a well recognised rule of the English Law and to extend the ordinary limits of liability to such an extent it would certainly have made the point clearer in s. 264 of the Contract Act.

Their Lordships lay much stress upon the wording of s. 264. But that section after all, merely says that persons dealing with a firm will not be affected by a dissolution of which no public notice has been given. It does not lay down what the rights of such persons are against dormant partners and for ascertaining these rights we have to search the general law of partnership and under this law dormant partners are only liable for debts contracted up to date of their retirement.

Anyhow we are glad to find that the new Partnership Bill which has just been passed by the Legislative Assembly follows the earlier rulings of the Indian High Courts which are in harmony with the English Law and general principles, and that this new ruling of the Calcutta High Court will cease to be law on the introduction of the Partnership Act. (Vide cl. 32 (3) of Bill No. 8 of 1931).

Limitation Act, Art. 123: A conflict set at rest.

Before the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (38 Ind. Cas. 809; 1 L. R. 44 Cal. 379) there was a long series of decisions in India that Art. 123 of the Limitation Act only applies where the suit is brought against an executor or administrator or some person legally charged with the duty of distributing the estate. In the above mentioned case the article was applied by their Lordships to a case of partition though it was argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants, Sir Erle Richards, K. C., that Art. 123 could not be applied as the claim was not one for a distributive share; (see 38 Ind. Cas. 809 at page 811). Since then there has been much conflict in India as to the scope of Art. 123. In some cases it was held that the Judicial Committee had impliedly overruled the Indian authorities (vide 51 I. O. 209; 1 L. R. 43 Bom. 845) but the contrary view was taken in some later cases of the same High Court. In the Allahabad High Court the question was finally referred to a Full Bench in Nurdin v. Umrao (111 I. O. 809; 1 L. R. 51 A. 101) and their Lordships expressed the view that the Privy Council had not in Maung Tun Tha's case overruled the earlier decisions. The matter has now been placed beyond all dispute by the Judicial Committee itself in Ghulam Mohammad v. Ghulam Husain (136 I. O. 454). Their Lordships have, after considering the Indian decisions, stated that it was not intended by the judgment in Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit to overrule the earlier decisions of the Indian High Courts and that these cases should be followed at all events in cases from the Indian Courts. This case shows the danger of departing from a course of decisions in India on the basis of an implied decision of the Privy Council.

Counsel on each side declining to rely on his evidence.

In a recent appeal from the Supreme Court of Mauritius Raymond Lincoln v. Alice Poupinel De. Valance (136 Ind. Cas. 451) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee had the remarkable experience of hearing Counsel on each side declining to rely upon the testimony of his leading witness and seeking to base his case on the evidence of his opponent. In India such instances are not rare and the judgment of their Lordships in this case throws much light upon the procedure to be adopted in such cases. In this case the plaintiffs sued for damages for injuries suffered by the alleged negligence of the defendant's chauffeur in driving the defendant's motor car. The evidence of the two participants in the accident, namely, the plaintiff and the defendant's chauffeur, was not accepted by the Judges who heard the case and was not put forward by either side before their Lordships as reliable. But the plaintiff tried on appeal to base his case on the admissions made by the defendant's chauffeur and on the facts found by the trial court. Their Lordships held that the appellant cannot legitimately invoke for this purpose evidence directed to another and quite different story which has not been believed. In their Lordships' opinion it was dangerous to allow the appellant to establish a new ground of negligence against the defendant's chauffeur on the re-constituted facts as found by the court below and accepted by their Lordships. Failure of the appellant to establish the case averred in his pleadings and spoken to in his evidence would in a case of this nature justify the dismissal of the appeal on this ground alone.

Rights of inferior proprietors of Central Provinces.

The rights in respect of village waste and forest produce are much valued in the Central Provinces and the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lal Indra Shah v. Sheo Sankar (136 I. O. 628) will affect the inferior proprietors of the Central Provinces to a far reaching extent. Their Lordships have held in this case overruling the Judicial Commissioner's decision, that there is no presumption that the inferior proprietors of a village in the Central Provinces are entitled to such rights even though the inferior proprietors of the adjoining districts enjoy such rights. They can only succeed if they show that they have acquired those rights by custom or those rights were granted to them at the time of the sub-settlement. Their Lordships have further held that where the existence of such rights before the settlement is not proved the mere absence of any entry in the wajib-ul-arz prepared during that settlement does not lead to any inference in favour of the inferior proprietors.

Suit by Major as minor.

In Ghasi v. Manga (136 Ind. Cas. 710; 33 P. L. R. 263) a suit was instituted by a next friend on behalf of a person who was described as a minor but who was a major in fact, and during the pendency of the suit an application was made by the real plaintiff to continue the suit as a major. The mistake seems to have crept in "by a slavish following of the recital in a sale deed, possibly by the lawyer engaged" but there was no evidence whatsoever as to how the mistake was made. The District Judge found that the mistake was bona fide and permitted the plaintiff to amend the plaint. On second appeal, Harrison, J., held that it was necessary for the plaintiff to show that he was acting bona fide throughout and refused to accept the finding that the mistake was bona fide as there was nothing to show that due care and attention had been exercised or how the mistake arose. We think his Lordship has taken a too narrow view of the matter and that in the absence of anything to show that the plaintiff had acted mala fide that is, with sinister motive, the amendment should have been allowed. The correct view in our opinion is that expressed recently by Bose, A. J. C., of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court in the case of Sukh Dev v. Yasoda Bai (135 I. O. 409) in which a suit was instituted in the name of a wrong person and an application was made to substitute the right person. The learned Judicial Commissioner said :

"It has been objected on behalf of the defendant that the mistake cannot be called bona fide for it was clearly made without the exercise of due care and caution. I am of opinion that this is not necessary. It is true that in many branches of the law these elements are necessary to constitute good faith..... But, there are also other places where human nature is treated for what it is, and not for what it might and ought to be; where we look to the knowledge a man actually did have, and not what he might have had nor what some other man, deemed reasonable, would have had. There are branches of the law where, though a man was stupid, ignorant and careless, he is still deemed to have acted in good faith provided his blundering was honest..... And this is the rule which has been applied to O. I. r. 10, in Nistarini Dasya v. Sarat Chandra Mazumdar. In my opinion it is the right rule to apply in cases of this kind."

As Bowen, L. J., had said in Cropper v. Smith (1884, 26 Ch. Div. 700) "there is no rule of law that only slips or accidental errors are to be corrected". Mistakes like these almost always arise through the carelessness of somebody and very often it is difficult to prove how they arose. The proper punishment for carelessness in cases of this nature is to order the party to pay the costs of the other side and not to dismiss his suit.

Limitation of application to set aside ex parte decree passed after substituted service.

The provision contained in O. V. r. 20, Civil Procedure Code, that substituted service by order of the Court shall be as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally, has given rise to considerable divergence of opinion on the question whether in the case of an application to set aside an ex parte decree passed after substituted service the period of limitation runs from the date of the decree or when the decree comes to the knowledge of the defendant. We find from the reported cases that four different views have been held, though some of the decisions do not clearly realise this distinction, namely:—

First, that substituted service is due service only for the purpose of proceeding with the suit if the applicant merely shows that service was effected by substituted service. The period of limitation begins only from the date of the applicant's knowledge of the decree. (See Venkatachalam v. Subbayya (105 I. O. 889; A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 655, Srinivasa Ayyangar, J.)

The second view is that substituted service may or may not be due service and if the applicant shows that such service was ordered or obtained on insufficient materials, the service is not due service within the meaning of Art. 164. (See Krishna Pada-yachi v. Sri Vinayakaswamiar 122 I. O. 35; A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 222; Venkatasubba Rao, J. : Ramkishan v. Mula, 69 I. O. 467 (Lab), Ohevis, J.)

A third view is that due service implies knowledge of the claim and even though all the formalities of substituted service have been carried through and service was properly ordered, if the service has not achieved the object of bringing the claim to the knowledge of the defendant, it is not due service. (Gyanammal v. Abdul Husain Sahib, 134 I. O. 1202, Reilly and Ananta-krishna Iyer, JJ.)

The last and the strictest view is that once the Court has ordered substituted service, whether on sufficient or insufficient materials, the service cannot be invalidated by showing subsequently that the order was made on insufficient grounds; (See Shariba Beebis v. Abdul Salam, 110 I. O. 490; 51 M. 860 Phillips and Madhavan Nair, JJ.; Doraiswamy Iyer v. Balasundaram Iyer, 102 I. O. 243; Hansraj v. Narain Singh, 131 I. O. 344)

We have no doubt that the last set of cases take a rather narrow view of the matter and give a finality to ex parte orders passed after hearing one side alone, which such orders are not entitled to. If the Court finds after hearing the other side that it was wrong in ordering substituted service it is difficult to hold that service was still due service. The correct view in our opinion is that which has been taken by Venkatasubba Rao, J., of the Madras High Court in Krishna Pada-yachi v. Vinakaya Swamiar (122 I. O. 35) and Ohevis, J., of the Punjab Chief Court in Ramkishan v. Mula (69 I. O. 467). In Rajagopalachari v. Subrahmanyam (1932) M. W. N. 133, Ourgenvin, J., has drawn a still more subtle difference and holds that in order to show that substituted service was not due service 'it must be established that the applicant for substituted service did not believe or had no reason to believe in his representations, and not that those representations were in fact not well-founded. We do not agree with this view and think that if the court finds that the representations on which substituted service was ordered were not in fact sufficient or well founded, the service is not due service.

An Allahabad Full Bench.

This question was recently referred to a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Bharose v. Ganga Singh, (136 I. O. 609, Sulaiman, A. J. O., Boys and Mukerjee, JJ.). The law on the point is thus lucidly stated by Sulaiman, O. J., "As at the time when the substituted service is ordered the proceedings are ex parte, it would be open to the defendant when he appears later to challenge the propriety of the order and ask the Court to re-examine its fitness. If in view of any additional circumstances which he is able to place before the Court he can satisfy that he was not keeping out of the way and that there was no sufficient reason why the summons could not be served in the ordinary way or that the manner of service decided upon was not fair and just to him he would have discharged the burden of showing that there was no due service." Boys and Mukerjee, JJ., have also taken the same view. We have no doubt that the opinion expressed by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in this case which coincides with that of Venkatasubba Rao, J., and Ohevis, J., is the correct view of the matter and that the Madras and the Lahore High Courts in which there is still a conflict of rulings on this important question will refer the matter to a Full Bench to set it at rest.

Citation of overruled cases.

There is a curious feature in Ghasi v. Manga (136 I. O. 710) to which we may draw the attention of our readers. The cases of Sheorania v. Bharat Singh (20 A. 90) and Ruhul Amin v. Shankar Lal (45 A. 701) which were cited before his Lordship Harrison, J., in this case and which had to some extent influenced his decision had been expressly disapproved by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Wali Muhammad Khan v. Ishak Ali Khan (134 I. O. 26; 1931 A. L. J. 777) and though the Full Bench decision was published many months before the decision of Harrison, J., this fact does not seem to have come to the notice of the Counsel on either side or the learned Judge. Indian case-law is changing so rapidly that without great vigilance it is difficult to be thoroughly up to date. We find from the latest number of the Law Journal of England that a new feature styled "up to the minute case-law" has been introduced in that Journal. This case has impressed upon us the necessity of bringing all Full Bench decisions to the notice of our readers as early as practicable.

Notes on Current Topics.

Case Law.

Mr Justice McCardie is recently reported to have said that if it were open to him he would "wipe out two thirds of these decisions and five-sixths of the dicta". An observation like this coming from a Judge who is reputed to possess an intimate knowledge of case law is bound to set people thinking and a member of the Parliament asked the Prime Minister whether he would consider the desirability of setting up a commission for the purpose of codifying the whole range of English case law. The Prime Minister after consulting the Lord Chancellor replied that he was satisfied that to set up a commission for this purpose would not produce any useful result. The large number of decisions that are being reported and its probable consequences on the administration of justice and the development of the law have attracted the attention of eminent lawyers long before this and evoked strong criticisms of the common law system of precedents. Various remedies have also been suggested, for instance, censorship on reporting, codification, and doing away with case law altogether, but all these proposals have ended in mere academic discussion. Mr. Justice McCardie's remarks and the questions raised in the Parliament have shared the same fate. The truth seems to be, as the New York Law Notes observed sometime back, that the common law is firmly wedded to the system of precedents and it is now too late to think of divorcing this system altogether.

The condition of Indian case law is infinitely worse. Its 'enormous quantity and uncertain quality' have recently called forth certain scathing remarks from Sir Frederick Pollock. The observations that this great jurist has made and the caution he has given deserve the close attention of the Judges of the Indian High Courts and the Editors of Indian law journals and it is their bounden duty to check the 'present disastrous course' that Indian case law is taking. The matter requires notice in greater detail and we hope to return to it later.

New points in appeal.

Points of law involved in a case are often overlooked in the lower Courts and raised for the first time in the Court of appeal, and the appellate Court is then confronted with a difficult situation. The principle by which the appellate Court should be guided in such cases is stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in The Official Liquidator of M. E. Moolla & Sons Ltd. v. Mrs. P. R. Burjorjee (136 I. C. 737—March 3, 1932). In this case the claim was one for damages for breach of contract of an agreement of sale and the appellant for the first time raised in his application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council the question of the non-registration of the agreement. Their Lordships quote with approval a passage from the judgment of Lord Watson in The Connecticut Fire Insurance Co v. Kavanagh (1892 A. C. at p. 480) in which his Lordship said as follows :

"When a question of law is raised for the first time in a Court of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. The expediency of adopting that course may be doubted when the plea cannot be disposed of without deciding nice questions of fact in considering which the Court of ultimate review is placed in a much less advantageous position than the Courts below." 71; 40 A.

After stating 699; 2 U. principle their Lordships held that 415 of the Indian Registration Act what properly construed did not compel the Court to take notice of the non-registration of an admitted document unless, at any rate, such document ought, if treated as effective, be the foundation of a judgment affecting immoveable property comprised in such document. In this particular case, applying the general principle their Lordships refused to allow the appellant to raise the plea as the parties were not agreed upon the facts and there were indications of a course of conduct on the part of the appellant which precluded him from raising new pleas.

In another recent case Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Kirtyanand Singh (136 I. O. 629) the Judicial Committee refused to allow the respondent to raise the plea that the appellants ought to have proceeded in the Court of first instance by way of a suit and not by way of an application on the ground that if it was allowed to be taken at that stage the appellants would be barred by time, though their original application was in time.

A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court recently considered this subject at length in Ram Kinkar Rai v. Tufani Ahir (133 I. O. 428; 53 A 65). In this case their Lordships have laboriously classified the questions which could be taken and those which could not be taken and have laid down certain rules as to when they could be taken and when not. The question does not however seem to us to be one for such classification and cut and dried rules but a matter to be left to the discretion of the appellate Court, which should be exercised with reference to all the circumstances of the case, the conduct of the parties in the lower Courts and the demands of justice.

The Law of Income-tax: Privy Council defines 'Income' and 'business'.

The judgment pronounced by the Judicial Committee (March 14, 1936 I. O. 742) in the appeal preferred by the Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal, from the decision of the High Court of Calcutta in Shaw, Wallace & Co's Case (134 I. O. 899; I. L. R. 58 C. 1153), lays down some fundamental principles of the law of income-tax. The facts of the case, it will be remembered, were as follows:—For a number of years Shaw, Wallace & Co., were the distributing agents of the Burma Oil Company and the Anglo-Persian Oil Company though there was no formal agreement with either company. In 1927 the two companies decided to make other arrangements, the agency of Shaw, Wallace &

Co. was terminated and they were paid a certain sum of money 'as full compensation for cessation of the agency'. The question that had to be decided was whether this sum of money could be taken into account in determining the income of Shaw Wallace & Co. for purposes of income-tax. The High Court (Raijin, C. J., Ghose, J., and Buckland, J.), answered the question in the negative. The decision of the High Court has been confirmed by the Judicial Committee though their Lordships have arrived at the same result on slightly different grounds. Their Lordships have made an authoritative pronouncement in this case on the meaning of the word 'income' which has not been defined in the Income Tax Act:

"Income, their Lordships think, in this Act connotes a periodical monetary return 'coming in' with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The source is not necessarily one which is expected to be continuously productive but it must be one whose object is the production of a definite return excluding anything in the nature of a mere windfall. It is essentially the produce of something which is often loosely spoken of as 'capital.' But capital though possibly the source in the case of income from securities is in most cases hardly more than an element in the process of production."

Again, in considering the meaning of the word 'business' in s. 6 (iv) their Lordships say that, though the words used in the definition of business in s. 2 (4) are no doubt wide, underlying the definition of business there is the fundamental idea of the continuous exercise of an activity. The words "carried on by him" in s. 10, express this central idea and are an essential constituent of that which is to produce the taxable income. It is to be the profit earned by a process of production. Their Lordships held following this line of reasoning, that as the moneys sought to be charged were not the produce, or the results of carrying on the agency of the oil companies but were received as some sort of solatium for its compulsory cessation they were not 'income' within the meaning of the Income Tax Act and were not assessable.

Though the decision of the High Court of Calcutta under appeal has been affirmed, the case of In re Turner Morrison & Co., (117 I. O. 68; 56 C. 211) in which it was held that moneys paid to the managing agents of a company on the winding-up of the company as compensation for the loss of their office were 'receipts arising from business' within s. 4 (3) (vii) of the Income Tax Act, and were not exempted under that clause has been disapproved by the Judicial Committee and this case has to be treated as no longer law.

Decisions on the English Income Tax Acts as precedents.

Before leaving this case, we may invite the attention of our readers to the word of caution which the Judicial Committee have given on the use of decisions on the English Income Tax Statutes. Their Lordships observe: "Again their Lordships would discard altogether the case law which has been so painfully evolved in the construction of English Income Tax Statutes—both the cases upon which the High Court relied and the flood of other decisions which has been let loose in this Board. The Indian Act is not in pari materia; it is less elaborate in many ways, subject to fewer refinements, and in arrangement and language it differs greatly from the provisions with which the Courts in this country have had to deal. Under such conditions their Lordships think that little can be gained by attempting to reason from one to the other, at all events in the present case in which they think that the solution of the problem lies very near the surface of the Act, and depends mainly on general considerations." A similar observation was made recently by the learned Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court (Beaumont, C. J.), in In re Sarsapur Mills, 34 Bom. L. R. 144.

Income-tax on moneys received under insurance policies.

Another important question relating to income-tax which may usefully be contrasted with the decision in Skaw, Wallace & Co's case and upon which there was an acute difference of judicial opinion in the lower Courts was decided by the Judicial Committee in King v. The B. C. Fir & Cedar Lumber Co Ltd. (136 I. O. 863, March 8, 1932). The respondents who were manufacturers and dealers in lumber and lumber products had insured their plant and premises against loss and damage by fire. By policies separate but complementary to the main policies, they were also insured by the same companies against loss of profits resulting from the cessation of business due to fire. As regards the moneys paid under the main fire policies, being admittedly a receipt on capital account, no question was raised; but as to the moneys received under the use and occupancy policies the respondents disputed their liability to be assessed. The Supreme Court of Canada held that moneys paid by way of indemnity for profits not earned but lost, were not profits and that, in the absence of a clear provision of law authorising such a course, there was no warrant for taxing such moneys. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the 'loss of net profits' receipt, was necessarily a revenue receipt of the business, it can be fairly said that it arose from the business of the respondents, and being an income from a business had necessarily to be brought into account for determining the net income of the respondents for income-tax purposes. Their Lordships were of opinion that the Supreme Court had missed the true question at issue. "The real question", their Lordships observed, "was whether the insurance moneys in question constituted 'income' of the respondents within the meaning of the Taxation Act and not whether these moneys were 'profits' of its business. Moneys which are not strictly 'profits' of the business may yet be income of the tax-payer." Even on the question whether the moneys could be properly described as 'profits', their Lordships held following the reasoning of the House of Lords in Giksten & Son, Ltd. v. Green (1928, 2 K. B. 193; 1929 A. C. 381) that the opinion of the Judges of the Supreme Court was not correct. It may be noted that s. 4 (3) (v) of the Indian Income Tax Act, exempts only 'any capital sum received in payment of any insurance policy.....' and that the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee in this case would therefore apply to India also.

Power of Insolvency Court to decide questions of title.

Most of the High Courts have had to deal with the question whether the Insolvency Court has power under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to set aside transfers made by an insolvent more than two years before his adjudication and the preponderance of authority is in favour of the view that s. 4 is wide enough to confer such jurisdiction on the Insolvency Court. Some distinction has been drawn between transfers which are void ab initio or fictitious and transfers which are genuine but intended to delay or defeat creditors. The matter came recently before the Calcutta High Court in Sree Sree Krishna Thakur v. Official Receiver (137 I. O. 492). Mukerji and Guha, J., after discussing the point at some length have agreed with the view of the majority that s. 4 confers full power to deal with all questions of title as between the Official Receiver and a stranger. This again was a case of a sham transaction and is not a direct authority for the view that even in the case of real transfers the Insolvency Court can interfere under s. 4 though the judgment of Mukerji, J., seems to support that view. Guha, J., proceeds on the ground that s. 53 is not applicable at all to cases where a person claiming to be in possession sets up a claim adverse to the insolvent and that such cases fall under s. 4. Whether the Insolvency Court can avoid real transfers effected more than 2 years before adjudication is still not beyond doubt.

Gas mains : whether 'Immoveable property.'

The decision of the Judicial Committee in The Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated v. City of Outremont (136 L. C. 858—February 23, 1932) contains an interesting discussion of the meaning of the expressions 'immoveable property' and 'buildings' and decides a question of far reaching importance to Municipal Corporations. The appellants agreed to supply gas in the respondent City and laid gas mains under the public streets of the City. The gas works of the appellants were situated in the City of Montreal. The question that had to be decided was whether the gas mains lying under the streets were 'immoveable property' and whether the appellants were liable for municipal and school taxes in respect of them. The Quebec Civil Code provided that 'property is immoveable either by its nature or by its destination or by reason of the object to which it is attached or lastly by determination of the law', and that 'lands and buildings were immoveable by nature'. The last three of the four means provided in this definition being inapplicable, the question resolved itself to whether gas mains were immoveable by their nature. Their Lordships held that the term 'buildings' covered constructions such as these gas mains and that these mains must be regarded as immoveable by their nature in the territory in which they were physically situated and were therefore, taxable subjects in the respondent City. In these days of economic depression Municipal Corporations are sure to welcome this decision of the Judicial Committee.

Volenti non fit injuria.

The case of Pidington v. Hastings and others (Times, March 21) reminds us of our college days. The plaintiff, a lady, went to watch a game of polo. While she was sitting in a chair provided for spectators and watching the game a pony got over the fence surrounding the play grounds and struck her and she lost her thumb. She sued the secretary of the club, a member of the Committee and the polo player whose horse hurt her, but unfortunately did not name the persons who had placed the seats where they were. The action was dismissed. The Law Journal in commenting upon this case observes that the very danger of such occurrences casts a duty on those who set the seats at polo grounds and make a charge for them, to secure that the visitors shall be out of the reach of any danger which can reasonably be anticipated and thinks that if the plaintiff had named the persons who had arranged the seats, the question of their negligence would have gone to the Jury.

Acceptance of gifts : Burden of proof.

Under the English Law acceptance of a gift is to be presumed until dis sent is signified and this rule was held applicable to India in Muhammad Abdul Nayeem v. Jhoti Mahton (41 Ind. Cas. 389). The wording of s. 122 of the Transfer of Property Act is not quite consistent with such a presumption and the ruling in 41 Ind. Cas. 389 was doubted by a Division Bench of the same High Court (Patna) in Jamuna Prasad v. Sheorati Kuar (78 Ind. Cas. 469). In a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court, Anandi Devi v. Mohan Lal (1932 A. L. J. 335), Sulaiman and Young, J.J., had to consider the question. In their Lordships' view the provision contained in s. 122, that if the donee dies before acceptance the gift is void, makes it impossible to hold that there is a presumption of acceptance operating immediately upon the gift, whether known or unknown to the donee. The preponderance of authority is thus clearly against the view that the English rule applies to India. In Provinces like the Punjab where the Transfer of Property Act is not in force, the question must still remain open.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1—Order allowing plaintiff to withdraw suit—Revision, competency of.

Where a plaintiff is allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh one, if the Court has given a considered decision that there is a formal defect in the plaint and that if the plaintiff is not permitted to withdraw the suit with permission to bring a new suit he will be denied justice, the order allowing withdrawal cannot be challenged in revision under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code. Buta Singh v. Hardit Singh (2), Bisheswar Ahir v. Brijra Misser (12) and Kamta Singh v. Bhagwan Das (13), distinguished. Lal Chand Mangal Sen v. Behari Lal Mehar Chand (1), and other cases referred to.

Petition for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Chiniot, dated the 9th July, 1931.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and M. C. Mahajan, for the Petitioner.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Mr. Balwant Rai, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff brought a suit praying for an injunction restraining the defendant from building on a certain piece of land. Before issues were framed he put in an application asking for permission to withdraw his suit with liberty to institute a fresh one. He said that it had come to his knowledge that the defendant had actually finished his building and contended that this constituted a formal defect. Permission was granted, the trial Court giving a definite finding in a long and reasoned order to the effect that there was a formal defect and that the suit as it stood was bound to fail on account of such formal defect. The plaintiff was allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh one.

From this order the present application for revision has been presented and Mr.

Badri Das has taken a preliminary objection that under s. 115 read with Lal Chand Mangal Sen v. Behari Lal Mehr Chand (1) no such revision lies as there has not been any wrongful exercise of jurisdiction or failure to exercise jurisdiction or material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. The question is not new and there is considerable divergence of authority thereon. The petitioner relies on Buta Singh v. Hardit Singh (2), Saif Ali v. Chiragh Ali (3) and Ishar Das v. Lal Singh (4), all Lahore cases, as also on Mahabir Prasad v. Mohammad Ali Khan (5), Mahendire Ram v. Singi Lal (6), Pundalik v. Chandrabhan (7), Punjushet v. Motiram Budhu (8) and Palikanji Chettiar v. Krishna Iyer (9), the latter rulings being of Madras, Bombay and Nagpur Courts.

On the other side Mr. Badri Das relies on several rulings of the Allahabad High Court, Jhunku Lal v. Bisheswar Das (10), Ratan Lal v. Mohamad Hamidullah Khan (11), both Division Bench rulings, Bisheswar Ahir v. Brijra Misser (12) and last of all Kamta Singh v. Bhagwan Das (13). He also relies on Bansi Singh v. Kishun Lal Thakur (14) and Sant Singh v. Mubarak Singh (15) as explaining the very limited powers of the High Court on the revision side. The Privy Council authorities on the point are Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh (16) and Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (17). Ishar Das v. Lal Singh (4) and Saif Ali v. Chiragh Ali (3) are both earlier than Sant Singh v. Mubarak Singh (15). It is true that both Ishar Das v. Lal Singh (4) and Buta Singh v. Hardit Singh (2) definitely refer to and disagree from Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (10). The question to me appears to be whether the Court, in deciding however wrongly and however whimsically, [to borrow an expression from the Privy Council judgment of Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (17)] that there is a formal defect, can be said to be exercising its jurisdiction with material irregularity. If the word "discretion" be substituted for "jurisdiction" the whole aspect of the question changes and this is in effect what Counsel for the petitioner wishes me to do. In my opinion the Court exercised jurisdiction in the first instance when it entertained the application, it exercised jurisdiction throughout the proceedings and finally it did so when it decided the matter. Had it not decided the matter, as in Kamta Singh v. Bhagwan Das (13), it might be said that there was a failure to exercise jurisdiction, but where it decided it in terms, I do not think that it is within my powers to consider whether the decision was right or wrong. Bisheshwar Ahir v. Brijra Misser (12) lays down that if the Court has not stated whether there is a formal defect or not and has given permission without doing so, the High Court will go into the question on revision. The rider to this appears to me to be that if the Court has stated that there is a formal defect the High Court will not go into the matter. The decision may be erroneous in law or fact, but the alleged error does not create a question of jurisdiction. I think it is possible to distinguish this case from Buta Singh v. Hardit Singh (2), for there the Court did not hold in terms that there was a formal defect but merely that the plaintiff had failed to plead a certain ground or basis for his claim. It did not go on to say in so many words that this constituted a formal defect though it treated the failure as such a defect. Here there is a definite finding that there is a defect and the giving of that finding is the exercise of jurisdiction. I cannot see how it can be said that the grounds on which it is attacked by Mr. Shamair Chand, amount to anything more than an allegation that mistakes have been made in law and fact in coming to that conclusion and I find that the words 'material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction' are entirely out of place as describing the function or activity of the Court in exercising its discretion or in deciding that it will do so. It is as if a man had a license to shoot and it were contended that he acted in contravention of his license because he did not shoot straight. The Court is given discretion by O. XXIII, r. 1. It has used it, says Mr. Shamair Chand, wrongly or unwisely or perversely. Perhaps it has, but not without jurisdiction. Whatever the reasons for the alleged mistake and however grievous that mistake may be, I do not think that O. XXIII, r. 1 has been transgressed in any way.

I hold, therefore, that where and if the trial Court gives a considered decision that there is a formal defect in the plaint, and that if the plaintiff is not permitted to withdraw the suit with permission to bring a new suit he will be denied justice, that decision cannot be challenged on revision as not coming within the scope of s. 115, Code of Civil Procedure.

The petition for revision is dismissed with costs.

Petition for Revision of an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 23rd of March, 1931.

Mr. Arjan Das, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. L. Kapur, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—In March and April 1930, a plot of land belonging to the minor, Gurbakhsh Singh, was given on lease to one Mit Singh who is said to be a brother-in-law of the minor's guardian, Arur Singh. The Subordinate Judge, holding that Mit Singh was merely a benamidar for Arur Singh, has called upon the latter to deposit the lease money in Court.

The question for determination is whether the Court can enforce the payment of the money by a summary remedy or should refer the minor to a regular suit. Now, the only provision of the law, which has some bearing upon the question, is that contained in s. 34 of the Guardians and Wards Act, which authorises the Court to direct the guardian to pay into the Court the balance due from him on the accounts exhibited by him. It has, however, been held by the Calcutta High Court in Jagan Nath v. Mahesh (1) that the 'balance due' means the balance due as shown by the guardian in his accounts, and not the balance found by the Court on an examination of the account, and that the payment of this latter balance cannot be enforced under s. 45. The same view has been taken by the Madras High Court in Hari Krishna v. Govindarajulu (2). On the other hand, the Allahabad High Court has expressed the opinion that the 'balance due' does not mean the balance shown by the guardian to be due from him in the accounts exhibited by him, but the balance which is found by the Court to be due from him upon the basis of a true and just account, and the Court can enforce the payment of the balance so found due, by means of the procedure prescribed by s. 45, and is not obliged to refer the minor to a regular suit; vide, Sita Ram v. Gobindi (3).

It is unnecessary to choose between the two views enunciated above, because it is not disputed that no accounts were exhibited by the guardian on the basis of which the money was found to be due from him. Indeed, the amount was not recoverable from the guardian in his capacity as such. The claim made against him can be sustained.

ed only on the basis of a contract or a quasi contract, and such claim cannot be enforced by a summary remedy.

I accordingly hold that the order of the trial Judge directing the applicant to deposit the money in Court was without jurisdiction and must be quashed. I accept the application for revision and direct the respondent to pay the costs incurred by the applicant.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 35, 36, 40, 41—Application for discharge of guardian—Power to go into accounts, and compel payment of amount found due—Proper procedure.

On an application under the Guardians and Wards Act for the discharge of a guardian the Court has no power to enquire into the correctness of the account submitted by the guardian and compel him to pay the amount found due by the Court. This can be done only by a suit under ss. 35 and 36 of the Guardians and Wards Act. Bathina Subbaram Reddi v. Ganesam Pattabhirami Reddi (2), followed. Sita Ram v. Govindi (1), dissented from. [p. 4, cols. 1 & 2.]

Miscellaneous First Appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujrat, dated the 14th February, 1931.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Chaudhri Nazir Hussain, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellant Fakir Muhammad was appointed guardian of the minor Sultan on the 30th March, 1920. He was called upon on the 1st of August, 1924, to declare what was the income from the minor's property and when he had done so, the Judge ordered that there was no necessity to put in annual accounts as the income was very small.

On the 28th January 1929, Fakir Muhammad applied to be discharged from the guardianship stating that he had enough work of his own and that the minor had ceased to live with him. The Judge, by order dated the 21st of February, 1929, directed the guardian to file an account of the income and expenditure before he could be discharged. This was done although he had been previously excused from doing so on the ground that the income was insignificant. The guardian put in a statement of account showing an expenditure of Rs. 3,244. On the 12th of April, 1930, the Judge accepted the guardian's resignation, directed the accounts to be sent to the Tahsildar for scrutiny and it was added that the question of the guardians' discharge would be gone into on receipt of the Tahsildar's report. The Tahsildar reported that the income was Rs. 2,277 for all the years in question. The Tahsildar also reported that prima facie the expenditure appeared to be correct. The Judge has now written a long order to the effect that Rs. 1,385 are due by the guardian to the minor and that he will be discharged only on his paying that sum for which he was given a month's time. Against this decision the guardian has appealed.

It seems to me that this is an order passed under s. 40 of the Guardians and Wards Act and that therefore an appeal lies under s. 41 (h). I accept the appeal for the following reasons:—

It has been laid down by the Calcutta and Madras High Courts that a Court should not hold an enquiry under the Guardians and Wards Act into the correctness of the accounts put in or determine what amount was really due by the guardian to the minor as the whole scheme of the Act provided for matters of this kind being disposed of by way of a suit by the minor or his next friend against the guardian and not by way of proceedings under the Act. Only one of these authorities, namely, Bathina Subbarami Reddi v. Ganesam Pattabhirami Reddi (1) need be referred to for this proposition. It is also said there that under s. 41 (4) the Court is not bound to declare the guardian discharged from his liabilities and so is not bound to make an enquiry into the correctness of the accounts filed by him. The Allahabad High Court has taken a contrary view: see Sita Ram v. Govindi (2). The question does not appear to have come directly before this Court.

In my judgment the Court must take the accounts as they are put in, but it need not discharge the guardian from liability. He was properly discharged from the office of guardianship under s. 40 but that does not mean that he must also be discharged from his liabilities under s. 41 (4). In this case as the Court has not found that the accounts put in are correct, it should have refused to discharge him from his liabilities to account to the minor, but it has no power to compel him to pay the sum of Rs. 1,385 into Court on behalf of the minor. That can be done only by a suit under the provisions of ss. 35 and 36 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

There is another reason in this case why I think that an order should not be made that the guardian should pay the sum referred to into Court and that is that the evidence is very summary on either side. I would be very loath to declare the guardian liable to the extent indicated on such evidence.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below directing the guardian to pay Rs. 1,385 into Court and substitute for it an order that the guardian be discharged from his office but not from his liabilities. I make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 151—Court-sale—Judgment-debtor leasing premises after sale—Power of executing Court to issue prohibitory order to judgment-debtor and tenant.

Where, subsequent to a Court-sale but before the confirmation of the sale, the judgment-debtor leases the premises sold, the Court has inherent power under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, to issue a prohibitory order to the tenant and the judgment-debtor restraining them from paying the rent and receiving the rent, respectively. Sukhdeo Das v. Rito Singh (1), referred to.

Petition for Revision from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Simla, dated the 27th October, 1929.

Mr. Nawal Kishore, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Prem Nath, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The Simla Banking and Industrial Company Limited obtained a decree against Khan Bahadur Abdul Ahad of Simla on the 9th July, 1924. In execution of that decree a house named 'Dixie' in Simla was attached and brought to sale. The sale was held on the 26th Jun 1929 and the property was knocked down to one Banwari Das as the highest bidder. The 16th of August 1929 was fixed for further proceedings in the matter. On the 27th July, 1929, the auction-purchaser, Banwari Das, put in an application in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Simla, in which it was pointed out that the applicant was the auction-purchaser of the premises sold, i. e., the house named 'Dixie', that no objection whatever had been filed to the sale and that as thirty days had elapsed the sale would have to be confirmed. It was further pointed out that subsequent to the sale, on the 7th of July 1929, the judgment-debtor had leased the premises sold and had realised a portion of the rent which, in accordance with the practice in Simla, had to be paid in advance. Banwari Das alleged that the rent in its entirety would be due to him inasmuch as, on confirmation of the sale, his right, title and interest in the property would take effect from the date of the sale itself, i. e., the 26th June 1929. He, therefore, prayed that the case should be heard that day i. e., the 27th July, or on the following Monday the 29th July, instead of the 16th of August.

The Senior Subordinate Judge passed an order on this application to the effect that he was unable to hear the case before the date fixed, but that, if the applicant paid in the necessary process-fees, prohibitory orders would issue to the judgment-debtor and the tenant. Banwari Das paid in the necessary process-fees and prohibitory orders were actually issued. Ultimately the tenant paid the remainder of the rent into Court.

The judgment-debtor through his agent objected to the course adopted by the Court urging that the prohibitory orders issued were ultra vires. This objection was dismissed by the Senior Subordinate Judge on the 27th October, 1929, whereupon this petition for revision was filed on behalf of the judgment-debtor, and I have heard Mr. Nawal Kishore at length in support of it.

It has been urged that the prohibitory orders could not have been lawfully issued under O. XXI, r. 46, and that they also could not have been issued under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, a contention that appears to be correct and has been admitted to be so by Mr. Prem Nath for the respondent who has contended, however, that the order is covered by s. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 151 merely recognises the inherent powers of a Court to make such orders as the ends of justice might require. In Sukhdeo Das v. Rito Singh (1), it was held that a Court could, under this section, direct an auction-purchaser, in a case where he had paid the purchase-money and subsequently withdrawn it from the Court on the sale being set aside, to pay back the money into Court on the sale being confirmed in appeal. In my judgment the Court would be justified in protecting the interests of an auction-purchaser when justice required that to be done and, therefore, an order of this nature could lawfully be passed under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code.

It is true that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge referred to no section or rule of the Civil Procedure Code in his order directing the issue of the prohibitory orders. As his order could not be covered by either s. 47 or O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code, I think it can and must be held that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge acted in the exercise of his inherent powers which have been recognised by s. 151, Civil Procedure Code. An order under this section is not open to appeal and in the present case I am unable to see any reason whatever for interfering in revision.

The petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 306, 307—Jury trial—Disagreement between Judge and Jury—Duty of Judge—English and Indian Law—Reference to High Court—Power to interfere where verdict is not perverse or manifestly wrong—Criminal trial—Medical examination, necessity of—Investigation, delay in, effect of.

The absence of an early medical examination in the case of crimes of violence must be regarded as a very unsatisfactory feature of the prosecution case. [p. 6, col. 2]

It is not proper to abandon an investigation and resume it after some days, and a delay of this kind may cause serious prejudice to an accused person by giving time to the witnesses to bring their evidence to harmony, by making identification less certain and by interfering with the preparation of the defence. [p. 7, col. 1.]

As lies on the prosecution to prove the case against the accused, if this has not been done it is not legitimate to draw any inference against the accused based on a criticism of the defence. [p. 7, col 2.]

In a trial by Jury the position of a Judge in India differs from that of a Judge in an English Court who is merely an instrument for passing a sentence or directing a release once a verdict is given. In India under the mandatory provisions of ss. 306 and 307, Criminal Procedure Code, the Judge must make up his mind whether he agrees or disagrees with the verdict and in the latter case form an opinion on the necessity for the ends of justice of submitting the case to the High Court. Ramdas Rai v. Emperor (1), commented upon. [p. 8, col. 1.]

Where a case has been referred under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, it is the duty of the High Court after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury to acquit or convict the accused. It is not necessary that the verdict should be perverse or clearly or manifestly wrong. Emperor v. Lyall (2), Emperor v. Annada Charan Thakur (3), referred to.

Case referred by the Sessions Judge, Lahore, with his No. 1063, dated the 22nd May, 1931.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Behari Lal and Daulat Ram Kalia, for the Respondent.

Monroe, J.—The facts of this case as alleged by the witnesses for the prosecution are briefly as follows. On the 12th of November, 1929, five boys, Kehar Singh, now aged about 13, P. W. No. 2, Jogindar, now aged 8, P. W. No. 5, Rajindar Singh now aged 8, P. W. No. 6, Sher Mohammad, now aged 10, P. W. No. 3 and Gulwant, now aged 7, P. W. No. 4, were going home from Bibiwala School shortly after 4 p. m., to get to their homes at Joganand village. They had to cross a bridge over the canal and as they approached the bridge they saw an Englishman who had a bicycle resting at the bridge; he seized Kehar Singh, P. W. No. 2 and Sher Mohammad, P. W. No. 3, each by the neck and driving the other three boys in front of him brought all five to some bushes close by; Sher Mohammad then ran away; the accused made the other four boys take their trousers off and then committed sodomy on them severally and successively during the next few minutes; Sher Mohammad called out and the accused hearing the cries dismissed the boys; the cry attracted two persons Bhagwan Singh, P. W. No. 10 and Sant Singh, P. W. No. 7; the accused ran to his bicycle and rode away. Each of the four boys who was maltreated states that he told his parents on his return home; Sher Mohammad states that he went home and told no one.

For purposes of identification other witnesses have given evidence for prosecution, namely Santa Singh, P. W. No. 7, Bhagwan Singh, P. W. No. 10, Kishna, P. W. No. 11, a boy of 12 years, and Khair Din, P. W. No. 12. All of these persons are alleged to have seen the accused at or near the place of occurrence. Their evidence is discussed later.

The accused was accordingly charged under s. 367 of the Indian Penal Code and was tried before the Sessions Judge and a Jury at Lahore and on the 11th of May, 1931, the Jury by a majority found the accused guilty, though the learned Sessions Judge believes that the verdict of the Jury was considered and honest, he considers that the case against the accused was not proved and he has accordingly referred the matter to this Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The learned Sessions Judge has examined the evidence in his judgment and states that he has come to the conclusion, first, that it has not been shown that anyone committed any of the offences with which the prisoner is charged and, secondly, that, on the assumption that the offence has been committed, the identification of the accused as the person who committed the offence has not been effected.

The four boys, Kehar Singh, P. W. No. 2, Gulwant, P. W. No. 4, Jagindar, P. W. No. 5, and Rajindar, P. W. No. 6, the subjects of the actual offence are witnesses for the prosecution and their evidence, is in part corroborated by Sher Mohammad, P. W. No. 3, who, by reason of his running away, was not actually present during the whole period when the accused was with the other boys.

Fazal Karim, P. W. No. 9, the Head Constable in charge of the case did not immediately on the making of the report have the boys examined by a doctor. To anyone putting faith in the description of the offences as given by the boys such an examination would at once have suggested itself as an obvious means of having that story corroborated. The value of an early examination in connection with crimes of violence is so well-understood in this country that the absence of such examination in the present case must be regarded as a very unsatisfactory feature.

The record shows that there is no material difference in the several accounts of what happened, but after a careful consideration of the details of the actual commission of the offence I have come to the conclusion that the story as related is not credible. While it is almost certain that some incident took place in which one or more of these boys and a man, probably a European, took part, imagination has operated in the complication of the story told by the boys to such an extent that it is not, in my opinion, possible to come to any definite conclusion about what did actually take place. It is remarkable that though four of the boys state that they told their respective parents of the incident not one of these parents made a report to the Police, nor did Bhagwan Singh, P. W. No. 10 or Santa Singh P. W. No. 7, both of whom state that they were present immediately after the incident. The First Information Report was in fact made on the 13th of November on what, in urging that it should be neglected, the learned Counsel for the prosecution very properly described as third or fourth hand evidence. I, therefore, agree with the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge when he says, "I am not able to find that the offences with which the prisoner has been charged were committed by any body, though as already stated I think that some extraordinary incident did occur."

The investigation of the case and the identification of the accused now come to be considered. The date alleged for the offence is the 12th of November, 1929. The Police received information on the 13th and the Head Constable, P. W. No. 9, commenced his enquiry on the 13th or 14th. He abandoned it after two days and did not resume it again until the 26th of December. A delay of this kind causes serious prejudice to an accused person. It gives time to witnesses, even those who may not actually be dishonest to bring their evidence into harmony. It tends where identification is necessary to render it less certain and, above all, it may interfere with the preparation of the defence. An accused person who is charged shortly after the commission of an offence may then have no difficulty in recalling what he was doing at the time of the offence and may have the advantage of the fresh recollection of the persons in whose company he may have been at that time. Few people whose life is not a monotonous routine could always recall what they had been doing at a particular moment six weeks previously. The long delay in the present case seems to have afforded to Soba, the father of Kehar Singh, P. W. No. 3, an opportunity for discussing the identity of the accused with some of the witnesses who took part in the identification.

When on the 26th of December the Head Constable, P. W. No. 9, resumed his activities he again went to Joganand village and "picked up" Sher Mohammad, P. W. No. 3, Kehar Singh, P. W. No. 2, Khair Din, P. W. No. 12, Santa Singh, P. W. No. 7, Sita Ram, P. W. No. 13, the School Master at Bihiwals, and Bhagwan Singh, P. W. No. 10, or he sent a constable to bring these persons to Bhatinda where the accused lived. He makes both statements. He took these persons to the Bhatinda Qasba where the Railway Officials of the station were collected for sports. It is significant that he does not mention that Soba Singh, father of Kehar Singh, was also of the party, especially in the light of the evidence of Sher Mohammad who in speaking of the visit to the Qasba says "Soba Singh, father of Kehar Singh, also picked him (i.e., the accused) out because he had seen him before". The evidence of Kehar Singh himself is to the same effect; he says "my father told me many times that he had seen the prisoner before". Two witnesses, Sher Mohammad, P. W. No. 3 and Khair Din, P. W. No. 12, testify to the presence of Kishna, P. W. No. 11, in this party, though the Head Constable himself does not mention him. It is curious that so many persons should have been collected by the Head Constable at the scene of the arrest and that Soba Singh who had no first hand connection with the occurrence should have been allowed to interfere.

[His Lordship after discussing the prosecution evidence as to identification and holding that it was worthless proceeded as follows]:—

On the view that I take of the case it is unnecessary to discuss the evidence of defence in detail. Like the rest of this case it is not satisfactory but as it lies on the prosecution to prove the case against the accused, and this has not been done, it would not be legitimate to draw any inference against the accused based on a criticism of the defence.

The learned Counsel for the prosecution, who frankly admits that the whole investigation of this case is very unsatisfactory, has, nevertheless, urged on this Court that the Sessions Judge would have been well-advised to accept the verdict of the Jury. As I understand his argument, it is that there is some special sanctity attaching to the verdict of the Jury, both when the verdict is unanimous and when it is that of a majority, but this is clearly not the law as the unequivocal wording of the sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure which deal with the matter shows. Section 306 (1) provides that "when in a case tried before the Court of Sessions, the Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict of the Jurors or a majority of the Jurors, he shall give judgment accordingly" and s. 307 (1) provides that "if in any such case, the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the Jurors or of a majority of the Jurors on all or any of the charges on which any accused person has been tried and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of such accused person to the High Court, he shall submit the case accordingly, recording the grounds of his opinion." The mandatory nature of both sections should be noted. A duty is cast on the Judge of considering the verdict. He is not like a Judge in an English Court, an instrument for passing a sentence or directing release once a verdict is given. He must make up his mind whether he agrees or disagrees with the verdict and in the latter case form an opinion on the necessity for the ends of justice of submitting the case to the High Court. There is a note at page 727 of Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure which appears to support the contention of the learned Counsel: the heading of this note commences "Reference should be made only when the verdict of the Jury is manifestly wrong". This statement read alone is, in my opinion, misleading and in its literal sense unwarranted by the words of the Code. Read with qualifications, it could no doubt be justified; and if the remainder of the heading referred to is given full weight, it appears that the words "manifestly wrong" are, in effect, qualified; the heading continues "and not in every case of doubt nor in every case in which a view different from that of the Jury can be entertained." This heading is quoted from the judgment in Ramdas Rai v. Emperor (1) which is cited in the following note. The note states that in this case the Jury acquitted the accused and that the Sessions Judge disagreeing with the verdict referred the case to the High Court. A perusal of the case itself shows that what actually happened was that the accused were convicted and the Sessions Judge sentenced each of them to nine years' imprisonment, remarking that while he disagreed with the verdict, it was a reasonable one and he accepted it without hesitation. There was accordingly no reference to the High Court under s. 307 (1) but an appeal by the accused against his conviction on the ground (inter alia) that the Judge could not convict the accused because of the provisions of s. 306 (1). It, therefore, appears that the comments on the effect of s. 307 (1) were obiter: the condition that the Judge should be clearly of opinion that for the ends of justice a reference was necessary was not fulfilled.

In the present case the Sessions Judge not only disagrees with the verdict of the Jury, but after an examination of all the evidence finds that the prisoner has not been proved to have committed any of the three offences with which he has been charged. It is not in accordance with general principles of the Criminal Law, much less is it consonant with the ends of justice that a person against whom an offence has not been proved should be convicted and punished for it. In my opinion, the Sessions Judge forming the view that he did, had no option but to refer this case under s. 307 (1).

The case having been referred it is the duty of this Court after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury to acquit or convict the accused. In the Emperor v. Lyall (2), it was contended on the authority of several reported cases that the High Court was bound to act in accordance with the unanimous verdict of the Jury, unless it was shown to be perverse or clearly or manifestly wrong. The learned Judges pointed out that since these decisions had been given the terms of s. 307 had been altered to their present form. We have here a probable source for the obiter dictum in Ramdas Rai v. Emperor (1), but, be that as it may, Prinsep and Stephen, J.J., laid down that in the case of an acquittal it is not necessary for the prosecution to show that the opinions of the Jury are perverse or clearly and manifestly wrong as was held in the cases cited to them which were decided before the law was amended in 1896 and expressed as it now stands. In Emperor v. Annada Charan Thakur (3) Casperez, J., said "it would have been an obvious disregard of duty to have thrown out this reference merely because it might be argued upon the face of the charge to the Jury that the verdict was not altogether an unreasonable one". If s. 307 requires a commentary, it may be found in these cases, with which the dictum in Ramdas Rai v. Emperor (1) is not consistent.

I have considered the entire evidence and I have endeavoured to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury. For the reasons already given I find that the case is not proved and I would acquit the accused.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Magistrate handing over judicial record to person to be examined as witness—Impropriety—Ground for transfer.

It is highly improper for a Magistrate or his officials to allow the judicial record of a pending case to be removed from the Court and handed over to a person who is to be examined as a witness in the case. [p. 9, col 2; p. 10, col. 1.]

An incident like this is such as to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not have a fair and impartial trial and is a sufficient ground for transfer. [ibid.]

Petition for transfer of the case from the Court of the Magistrate, First Class, Sialkot.

Mr. Chiranjiva Lal, for the Petitioner.

Order.—This is an application for transfer of a case under s. 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code, pending against the petitioner in the Court of Syad Nisar Qutab, Magistrate First Class, Sialkot, to a Court of competent jurisdiction in another district.

Various allegations were made in the application and the affidavit filed in support thereof, but the only one which requires consideration is that contained in para. 7. It appears that the main defence of the petitioner was that the case was a false one and had been started against him at the instance of the Superintendent of Police of Sialkot District, whose displeasure the petitioner had incurred, by reason of his failure to comply with the Superintendent's wishes not to hold a certain meeting. For the defence a number of witnesses, including the Superintendent of Police were called. Most of the defence witnesses had been examined on the 6th of October, 1931, and the case adjourned to the 23rd, when the Superintendent of Police and the remaining witnesses for the defence were to be examined. It is alleged in the affidavit that on that date when the case was called at about 11 A. M. the judicial record was not forthcoming in the Court. The Reader stated that the record had been sent for by the Superintendent of Police and that it had not been returned to him. "At this", it is alleged. In the affidavit "the petitioner's Counsel protested against the sending of the record to the Superintendent of Police and asked under whose authority the judicial record had been sent to a witness before his examination in Court. To this objection of the petitioner's Counsel the learned Magistrate made no reply. After waiting for about half an hour the Naib Court brought the record and handed it over to the Magistrate. The Naib Court admitted in Court that the file had been sent for by the Superintendent of Police as he wanted to examine the depositions of the defence witnesses that had been recorded at the previous hearing of the case." A copy of this paragraph was sent to the Magistrate for remarks and in reply he has not denied the allegations in the affidavit as to what actually happened in Court on the 23rd of October, 1931. The Magistrate states that the file had been taken away by the Naib Court before he came to the Court and that on enquiry it was stated that the "Naib Court had taken it away for the Superintendent of Police." The Magistrate further states that "he made enquiry from the Reader and he told me that when he demanded the file of this case from the Ahlmad, the latter stated that it had been taken away by the Naib Court for the Superintendent of Police."

From what has been stated above, it is clear that the main allegation made in para. 7 of the application is correct. It is hardly necessary to point out that it was highly improper for the Magistrate or his officials to allow the judicial record of a pending case to be removed from the Court and handed over to a person, who was to be examined as a witness in the case. It is possible that this was done without a proper appreciation of the consequences and any intention to prejudice the defence. But, at the same time, there can be no manner of doubt, that the incident is such as to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not have a fair and impartial trial in his Court. I must, therefore, in the interest of justice, withdraw the case from the file of the learned Magistrate.

I can, however, find no adequate ground for transferring the case from the District. I have no reason to believe that there is no Magistrate in the Sialkot District, who will not deal with this case fairly and properly simply because the 'Superintendent of Police is taking a keen interest' in it or that he has been cited as a witness. At the same time, I think the case should be tried by a Senior Magistrate and, in my opinion, the proper person to try it is the District Magistrate himself. If, however, he cannot find time for the case in view of his other duties, or if he has held any consultations about the facts of the case with the Superintendent of Police in his executive capacity or has otherwise dealt with it extra-judicially, he will, in that event, send it to the file of Lala Daulat Ram Budhwar Additional District Magistrate.

The petition is partially accepted and the case transferred to the Court of the District Magistrate, Sialkot, for disposal in accordance with the directions given above.

Petition partially accepted.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)—Compensation—Landlord and tenant—Apportioning of compensation.

In apportioning compensation between the landlord and the tenant the Court ought to proceed on the principle of ascertaining what is the value of the interest of landlord on the one hand with which he has parted and that of the tenant on the other and to apportion the compensation money between them in accordance with those values. Dinendra Narain Roy v. Tituram Mukerjee (1), followed. [p. 11, col. 1.]

First Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 13th July, 1931.

Mr. Satin Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. L. Puri, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against a decision of the District Judge of Gurdaspur made under the Land Acquisition Act, apportioning compensation awarded for compulsory acquisition of land. The appellants are the lessees and the dispute is as to the proportion in which the compensation should be divided between them and the lessor. The total compensation awarded for the land was Rs. 1,115 out of which the appellants have been given Rs. 250, the remaining Rs. 865 having been given to the respondent.

It appears that Ganesha, respondent, by means of a registered lease dated 21st December, 1915, leased in perpetuity 109 kanals 9 marlas of land to the appellants on a fixed annual rental of Rs. 130. The lease expressly says that the tenancy has been created for cultivation in perpetuity. The rent is fixed and is not capable of enhancement. The only right of the lessor is to receive the rent fixed and on failure of payment thereof to eject the lessees. The District Judge has held that the tenancy is to exist only during the lifetime of the lessor. There is, in my opinion, no justification for the assumption which, as I have already stated, is opposed to the express conditions of the registered lease. It is true that subsequent to the registration there have been some disputes between the lessor and the lessees but it has not yet been held by any competent Court that the lease is not binding on the lessor and nothing has been urged before me on the question.

With regard to a statement alleged to have been made by Hakim Singh, one of the appellants, before the Collector that the lease was for the lifetime of Ganesha it must be remembered that the statement was followed by a claim for the whole of the compensation. The statement of Hakim Singh should in my opinion be construed to mean that Ganesha had no interest in the land and it did not amount to an admission that on the death of Ganesha the lease would terminate. An allegation was made before me that a suit had been brought by the alleged son of Ganesha to set aside the lease. If such a suit is pending then it is obvious that whatever decision is given in this appeal must not affect the rights of the plaintiff in that case. It may be mentioned that the appellants are the reversioners of Ganesha and in the absence of the alleged son would inherit the proprietary rights in the land on his death. The District Judge has found that the annual proportionate rent of the land acquired comes to about Rs. 2-8-0 and that the interest of the appellants, the lessees, is about Rs. 10 per annum. This is how he describes the situation:

"the money value of the usufruct of the land by the lessees would not ordinarily be more than Rs. 10 per annum."

This being so the question is what is the correct proportion in which compensation should be divided between the two parties. The District Judge has held that

"assuming that Ganesha would live for about 25 years more the loss of the usufruct to the lessees would not exceed Rs. 250," and has, therefore, granted the lessees R. 250. This, in my opinion, is not the correct way of looking at the case considering, as I have found above, that the lease must be treated as a permanent lease on a fixed rent. In Dinendra Narain Roy v. Tituram Mukerjee (1), the learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court after reviewing the previous cases of that Court on the subject remarked as follows:

"I think the Court ought to proceed on the principle of ascertaining what is the value of the interest of the zamindar on the one hand with which he has parted, and that of the tenant on the other and to apportion the compensation money between them in accordance with those values."

I venture to say that this is the correct method of deciding a case like the present.

The District Judge has found that the value of the usufruct of the land acquired to the appellants is Rs. 10 a year out of which the respondent Ganesha is paid Rs. 2-8-0. On this calculation the sum of Rs. 1,115 should be awarded as follows:

The appellants Rs. 836-4-0 and the respondent Rs. 278-12-0. A provision must however further be made that the amount awarded to the appellants shall not be paid to them unless they give security to the satisfaction of the District Judge that in case the lease in their favour is held to be invalid on the suit of any reversioner including the alleged son of Ganesha, then they would refund the amount paid to them to the reversioners entitled to succeed to Ganesha's estate on the latter's death. The parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

No appeal is competent against a decree which is in accordance with an award even when the validity of the reference itself is impugned. Balkishen v. Sohan Singh (1), Miran Wali v. Hira Nand (2), Muhamad Valli Asmal v. Valli Asmal (6), Nidamurthi Krishnamurthy v. Gargiparthi Ganapathilingam (7), Lutawan v. Lachya (8), Hari Shankar v. Ram Piari (9) and *Suraj Singh v. The intention of the Legislature is to give finality to the decision of the trial Court on all objections to the award, and to restrict the appeal to the solitary case in which the decree is at variance, or not in accordance with the award, and, even, then to confine its scope to that part of the decree which differs from the award. [p. 13, col. 2.]

The doctrine of ejusdem generis is used only for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the Legislature and if it can be seen from a wider inspection of the scope of the legislation that the general words, notwithstanding that they follow a particular word, are nevertheless to be construed generally, effect must be given to the intention as gathered from a larger survey. [p. 12, cols. 1 & 2.]

First Appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 31st of December, 1927.

Messrs. Mehr Chand Mahajan, Mukand Lal Puri and Shamboo Lal Puri, for the Appellants

Messrs. Faqir Chand, Chandra Gupta and Muhammad Amin, for the Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decree based upon an award. The award was made in a suit brought for the recovery of a certain sum of money against the firm of Rala Ram-Walaiti Ram. According to the allegation in the plaint two persons, namely, Walaiti Ram and his son, Kulwant Rai, were the only partners in the firm, but Kulwant Rai, though served with summons, absented himself from the Court, and the case was defended by his father, Walaiti Ram, who described himself as the "managing proprietor of the firm known as Rala Ram Walaiti Ram". After several adjournments, the plaintiffs, and Walaiti Ram purporting to act as the "proprietor of the firm known as Rala Ram-Walaiti Ram", entered into an agreement to refer the case to arbitration, and applied to the trial Court for an order of reference. Thereupon, the Court made an order to refer the dispute to the arbitrator nominated by the parties, and the latter, after receiving all the evidence produced before him, pronounced his award directing the defendants to pay Rs. 5,621-9 to the plaintiffs.

Two applications were made to set aside the award, one by Walaiti Ram, and the other by his son who, after absenting himself for more than a year, came forward to raise the objection that, as he was not a party to the agreement to refer the dispute to arbitration, the order of reference as well as the award was invalid. To avoid delay in the disposal of the case, the plaintiffs decided not to proceed against Kulwant Rai, with the result that his name was removed from the list of the defendants. The trial Judge then adjudicated upon the objections preferred by Walaiti Ram and after overruling them, dismissed his application. The learned Judge consequently pronounced judgment according to the award, and it is against the decree, which followed upon that judgment, that the present appeal has been brought by the firm through Walaiti Ram.

Now, para. 16, sub-para. (2) of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code provides in express terms that no appeal shall lie from a decree based upon an award "except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award". It is, however, contended by the learned Advocate for the appellants that the law giving finality to the award pre-supposes a valid reference and does not prohibit an appeal in a case in which the award proceeds upon an order of reference which in itself is invalid. He challenges the validity of reference on the ground that Kulwant Rai was a party interested in the suit and, as he did not sign the agreement to refer it to arbitration the order of reference should be held to be invalid. It is conceded that there are several judgments of this Court which enunciate the proposition that no appeal is competent against a decree which is in accordance with an award, and that the fact that the validity of reference is impeached does not take the case out of the ambit of this rule, vide inter alia, Bal-kishen v. Sohan Singh (1) and Miran Wali v. Hira Nand (2). The learned Counsel, however, asks us to re-consider the question because the contrary view has been expressed by the Calcutta High Court and also by a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court. The judgment in Durga Charan Debnath v. Ganga Dhar Debnath (3), by Graham and Mitter, JJ., is no doubt, an authority for the rule that an appeal lies where there is no valid reference to arbitration. The question was thereafter examined by the Calcutta High Court in Golnuri Bibi v. Abdus Samad (4) in which, while Mitter, J., adhered to his previous opinion, his colleague, Mukerji, J., dissented from him and adopted the rule laid down by this Court.

It is to be observed that, prior to the enactment of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, there was a divergence of judicial opinion on the question of whether an appeal would lie from a decree based upon an award, when the award itself is invalid. This controversy was, however, set at rest by the Code of 1908 which enlarged the scope of the grounds for setting aside the award by inserting the words "or being otherwise invalid" in para. 15, sub-para. (1), cl. (c) of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. The award can now be challenged, not only on account of irregularities in the procedure of the arbitrator, but also on the ground that it was made by a person who had not been properly appointed to act as arbitrator. This amendment of the law shows that the Legislature intended that all objections to the award should be determined by the Court which made the reference, and that if that Court overrules the objections, including the one impeaching its validity, the decree based upon such award should not be open to an appeal. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, however, restrict the scope of the words "being otherwise invalid" by applying the doctrine of ejusdem generis and hold that the invalidity of a reference is not an objection ejusdem generis with those specifically mentioned in cl. (c) and cannot, therefore, be made a ground of attack under that clause. It is evidently assumed that the invalidity of reference can be raised independently of any provision in the Schedule, and that the decision of the Court upon it can be attacked on appeal.

It must be remembered that their Lordships of the Privy Council made it clear in their judgment in Ghulam Khan v. Mohamad Hassan (5), that no appeal lay against a decree passed in accordance with an award made in the course of litigation, and they emphasized the principle of finality attaching to such decree. It was after that pronouncement that the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 was enacted, and the addition made to para. 15, sub-para. (1), cl. (c), was intended to give finality to a decree based upon an award, irrespective of the nature of the objections advanced against the award. It was accordingly provided that all objections should be urged before the Court dealing with the award, and that its decision thereupon should not be challenged in appeal. An objection to the validity of an award includes an objection impeaching the reference upon which the award is founded, and the latter objection comes within the purview of cl. (c). There is no cogent reason for distinguishing the one from the other, for the purpose of finality attaching to the decision of the Court upon the objections.

The doctrine of ejusdem generis cannot, in my opinion, be invoked to restrict the full and natural meaning of the phrase "or being otherwise invalid." Ordinarily, a general word receives its natural meaning but, a general word, which follows particular and specific words of the same nature as itself, may take its meaning from them and may be presumed to be restricted to the same genus as those words. It is, however, clear that this rule of construction is used only for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, and, as observed by Maxwell in his book on the Interpretation of Statutes, 7th Edition at page 288, "the restricted meaning which primarily attaches to the general word in such circumstances is rejected when there are adequate grounds to show that it has not been used in the limited order of ideas to which its predecessors belong. If it can be seen from a wider inspection of the scope of the legislation that the general words, notwithstanding that they follow particular words, are nevertheless to be construed generally, effect must be given to the intention of the Legislature as gathered from the larger survey." Now, the history of the law on the subject of appeal in cases of arbitration under the supervision of the Court points to the conclusion that the Legislature intended to give finality to the decision of the trial Court on all objections to the award, and to restrict the appeal to the solitary case in which the decree is at variance, or not in accordance, with the award, and, even then to confine its scope to that part of the decree which differs from the award.

The rule laid down by this Court that no appeal is competent even when the validity of the reference is impugned coincides with the view expressed by the Bombay High Court in Muhamad Valli Asmal v. Valli Asmal (6), and by the Madras High Court in 25 Ind. Cas. 583 [Nidamurthi Krishnamurthy v. Gargiparthi Ganapathilingam (7)]. The same view was adopted by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Lutawan v. Lachya (8) and was affirmed in Hari Shanker v. Ram Piari (9) and Suraj Singh v. Phul Kumari (10). Our attention has been invited to the judgment in Tej Singh v. Ghasi Ram (11) where a reference to arbitration was made on the application of only some of the parties to the suit, and the question arose whether a person, who did not join in submitting the dispute to arbitration, was entitled to prefer an appeal against the decree of the trial Court made in accordance with the award. Ashworth, J. answered the question in the negative and held that the High Court could deal with the matter in revision. His colleague, Mukerji, J. was, however, inclined to favour the right of appeal but preferred, "not to decide whether an appeal would lie", because he agreed with Ashworth, J. that the High Court had jurisdiction to take up the matter in revision. It is not clear how the High Court could entertain an application for revision, if an appeal lay in the case. As expressly provided by s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court can be exercised only in a case in which "no appeal lies thereto". Reliance is placed also on the judgment in Mahadeo Prasad v. Badri Das-Ram Sarup (12) where Mukerji, J. expressed the opinion that the phrase "or being otherwise invalid" does not include the question whether there was or was not, a valid reference to arbitration, and that an application for revision would lie on the ground of the invalidity of the reference. This judgment cannot, however, be claimed as an authority for allowing an appeal in a case in which the validity of the reference is challenged.

The above survey of the case-law leaves no doubt that the preponderance of judicial authority is clearly in favour of the view that no appeal lies from a decree made in accordance with an award, and that it is immaterial whether the validity of the award is challenged on the ground of the illegality of the procedure of the arbitrator or on account of the invalidity of the reference which constitutes the foundation of his authority. This view receives support from the history of the legislation on the subject and from the rule attaching finality to a decision based on an award made under the supervision of the Court.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan for the appellant, however, argued that an appeal lies in this case because the decree granted by the trial Court is at variance with the award. The only variation mentioned by the learned Counsel is that while the award makes the "defendants" liable for money, the decree is against the "firm Rala Ram-Walaiti Ram through Walaiti Ram". The award, when examined as a whole, however, shows that the expression "defendants" was intended to apply to the aforesaid firm, and there is, therefore, no divergence between the two documents. Nor can the appellant Walaiti Ram, who claimed to be the sole proprietor of the firm, consider himself aggrieved by the alleged variation, which according to him, had only the effect of exempting his son from liability.

The result of the above discussion is that no appeal lies from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, nor is there any valid ground which would justify the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (b)—'Declare', meaning of—Document acknowledging existence of previous mortgage—Registration, necessity of.

The word 'declare' in s. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act, indicates something more than a mere statement of existing facts and implies a declaration of will to cause a change of legal relationship in respect of the property concerned. Therefore, a document which merely acknowledges that a previous mortgage exists unredeemed cannot be said to declare a charge on the land mortgaged and as such is not compulsorily registrable.

(Case-law discussed.)

Second Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Shahpur, at Sargoda, dated the 22nd February, 1928.

Messrs. M. L. Puri and Balwant Rai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondents.

Coldstream, J.—On 18th March, 1911, Hukam Chand, the first defendant in the suit from which this appeal arises, mortgaged some land to Radha Kishan Singh, Ram Kishan Singh and Harkishan Singh by registered deed for Rs. 1,000, the principal to be repaid with interest after two years. On the 14th March, 1925, four days before the period of limitation for a suit to recover the debt by sale of the land would have expired, the mortgagor and mortgagees agreed to execute a document that would extend limitation. In pursuance of this agreement the mortgagor Hukam Chand wrote out a statement drafted by a lawyer Pandit Moti Ram to the effect that the land concerned was under mortgage by deed dated 18th March, 1911, that Rs. 180 on account of principal and the same amount on account of interest had been paid by Hukam Chand to the mortgagees and that the property would remain under mortgage for the unpaid balance of the debt. The document which is Ex.

P. 3 in the case was signed by Hukam Chand but was not registered.

In August, 1926, Radha Kishan Singh instituted a suit to recover Rs. 2,295 6-0 upon the mortgage deed, impleading the two other mortgagees as defendants (one of these, Ram Kishan Singh, subsequently became a plaintiff in the suit). The plaintiff contended that the payment of Rs. 3 recorded in P. 3 and the acknowledgment made in that document by Hukam Chand saved limitation under the provisions of ss. 19 and 20 of the Limitation Act.

The suit was resisted by Hukam Chand who claimed a set-off arising out of a transaction recorded in an unstamped unregistered deed which had been lost. He also pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. He denied the actual payment of Rs. 3 recorded in P. 3 and contended that this document could not be used for the purpose of extending limitation because it had not been registered as required by s. 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act.

The trial Court dismissed Hukam Chand's counter-claim on the ground that the transaction alleged could not be proved by oral evidence. On the point of limitation it found that no money had passed on the 14th March, 1925, the record in P. 3 for this payment, being fictitious, and that therefore, the plaintiffs could not rely upon s. 20 of the Limitation Act. At the same time it held that the document, P. 3, though not registered, was admissible for the purpose of extending limitation and that the acknowledgment, of the debt made in it brought the suit within time so far as the plaintiffs sought relief from the mortgaged property. The plaintiffs were granted a preliminary decree accordingly.

On appeal the District Judge, in whose Court the only point disputed was that of limitation, agreed with the first Court's finding that the payment recorded in P. 3 was fictitious but differed from the trial Court regarding the admissibility of the document, holding that this was an instrument which operated to declare an interest in land of the value of more than Rs. 100 and, therefore being unregistered could not affect the property mortgaged.

The suit having been thus dismissed on the ground of limitation the mortgagees, Radha Kishan Singh and Ram Kishan Singh, preferred the present appeal.

The finding that no money was paid as stated in the document P. 3 is final and cannot be attacked in second appeal.

It is not disputed that the claim of the plaintiffs to recover their loan from the person of the mortgagor and his property not covered by the mortgage is barred by limitation. The only point on which issue is joined before us is whether the acknowledgment in writing of the 14th March, 1925, can be used to extend limitation under s. 19 of the Limitation Act for a suit to recover the charge from the mortgaged property.

Mr. Puri for the appellants argues that the document does no more than admit the existing fact of the mortgage, and as it creates no definite change of legal relation to the property, it does not fall within the scope of s. 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act and is, therefore, available for the purpose of extending limitation although unregistered. In support of his argument he relies strongly on the Privy Council judgment Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (1) where at page 236* it was remarked that their Lordships agreed with the Allahabad High Court that "an acknowledgment of liability only extends period of limitation within which a suit must be brought and does not confer title and it is not a thing done within the meaning of s. 6 of the General Clauses Act." In this connection he has cited also Ranganayaki Ammal v. Virupakshee Rao Naidu (2) and Sakha Ram Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji (3). He has also drawn our attention to a number of rulings in which admissions in subsequent deeds that mortgages existed have been held to extend limitation, such as Nando Kishore Lal v. Ramsookhee Koor (4), Khushalo v. Behari Lall (5), Mugni Ram v. Gurmukh Roy (6), Jageshar Singh v. Bir Ram (7), Majmundar Hira Lal v. Ichhalal Desai (8), Narsilal Chaturbhuj Das (8), Dharma v. Balmakund (9) and Sanwal Das v. Ali Mahdi (10).

In reply Mr. Mehr Chand contends that in none of these judgments was there any decision on the point now directly in issue, namely, whether an unregistered instrument executed (as this document P. 3 was admittedly executed) for the purpose of extending limitation for a suit to enforce payment of a debt of more than Rs. 100, charged upon land, will affect the mortgaged property in the manner intended, that is to say, extend the period of liability of the property for the debt and so increase the charge of interest upon it. He relies upon the wording itself of s. 19 of the Limitation Act and Faki v. Khotu (11) upon which judgment the learned District Judge has based his decision.

It is well established by the rulings cited by Mr. Puri as well as many others that an acknowledgment of a simple money debt made in a document such as a compulsorily registrable mortgage-deed may extend limitation for a suit to recover that debt although the deed is not registered and cannot affect the property to which it relates. This is all that is laid down in Khushalo v. Behari Lal (5). Similarly in Nundo Kishore Lall v. Ramsookhee Kooer (4), the suit was to recover a money debt subsequently acknowledged in a conveyance. Mugni Ram v. Gurmukh Roy (6) disposed of a case of the same kind, the debt sued for having been admitted in a subsequent mortgage-deed. The receipts in favour of Government referred to in Majmundar Hira Lal Ichhalal v. Desai Narsilal Chaturbhuj Das (8) were executed before the Registration Act was passed. In Sanwal Das v. Saiyad Ali Mahdi (10) the acknowledgment was apparently contained in a list attached to a conveyance deed and it is not shown whether the deed was or was not registered.

The judgment of the Lahore Chief Court, Muhamad Khan v. Jai Sukh (12), relied upon by the trial Court dealt with a case in which the acknowledgment pleaded was of a simple money debt, while Chunder v. Wazira (13), also referred to by the trial Court, gave no decision with reference to s. 19 of the Limitation Act, the suit being dismissed because the mortgage-bond on which it was based was unregistered. In Jageshar Singh v. Bir Ram (7) a Single Bench judgment of the Oudh Court dealing with a mortgage for Rs. 75 only the question of the necessity of registration was not before the Court and the judgment does not show whether any of the acknowledgments relied upon related to a charge of more than Rs. 100. Presumably the conveyance of 22nd April, 1913, referred to in the judgment was a registered instrument. Nor does Dharma v. Balmakund (9) help the appellants. The admission relied on was found to be ineffective to extend limitation. It was an entry in a Settlement Khewat and as such would in any case be exempted from registration under s. 19 of the Registration Act, a fact apparently overlooked in Mr. Rustomji's Commentary on s. 19 of the Limitation Act to which Mr. Puri has referred us.

The only ruling cited by Mr. Puri in which an acknowledgment of a charge of more than Rs. 100 on immovable property, made in a unregistered document, was held to save limitation under s. 19 of the Limitation Act is Anant Ram v. Inayat Ali Khan (14). We have examined the record of this case (Civil Appeal No. 2517 of 1915) and found that the charge sought to be enforced was Rs. 800. But in that case the question now under consideration was not raised and the fact that the bond containing the acknowledgment was unregistered was not noticed.

Lastly, as regards the words quoted by Mr. Puri from Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (1) it need only be remarked that they must be read as applying to the facts of that particular case. The acknowledgment put forward in that case was held ineffective for reasons not connected with the Registration Act and the remark on which Mr. Puri relies related to the effect of s. 6 of the General Clauses Act.

It must be conceded that Mr. Mehr Chand is correct in his contention that none of these rulings decides the exact point before us.

It cannot now be disputed, that the word "declare" in s. 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act must be read to indicate something more than a mere statement of existing facts, and to imply a declaration of will to cause a change of legal relationship in respect of the property concerned, a proposition for which the two judgments, Sakha Ram Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji (3) and Ranganayaki Ammal v. Virupakshee Rao Naidu (2) relied on by Mr. Puri are not the only authorities.

We have to see whether the document P. 3 purports or operates to make such a declaration. I do not think that it does.

(11) 4 B. 590.

(12) 88 P. R. 1880.

(13) 17 P. R. 1881.

(14) 2 Lah. L. J. 549.

This view is consistent with that taken in Sakha Ram Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji (3) where it was pointed out that an acknowledgment of liability in a form other than a receipt does not require registration and that cl. (b) of s. 17 (1) of the Registration Act does not comprise an acknowledgment. The Limitation Act does not extinguish rights and titles but prevents their enforcements by legal process. The document P. 3 made no change in the legal relation to the property charged. It merely admitted that the mortgage of 1911 existed unredeemed. Such an acknowledgment of debt cannot, I think, be said to purport or operate to bring into operation a charge upon the mortgaged land which had not been created by the mortgage-deed itself.

The Bombay ruling of Faki v. Khotu (11) was upon facts not on all fours with those of the present case. The instrument under consideration there was being used, in the opinion of Melvill, J., as evidence of title and the document itself appears to have been one which did as a fact express a will to alter title and to make a change in the nature of the executant's possession. I do not think that the judgment intended to lay down broadly that an admission extending limitation must be registered if the liability admitted is of a value of more than Rs 100 and is a charge on immoveable property. If it had this intention I am not prepared, in view of the principles stated above, to follow it here.

Mr. Mehr Chand has attempted to find support for the lower Court's decision in the discussion at pages 1058 and 1059* of Mani Ram Seth v. Rupchand (15) and in a number of decisions of this Court purporting to be based upon the conclusions laid down in that judgment. His argument is that the instrument P. 3 interpreted in the light of the remarks made there by the Privy Council must be held to imply a promise to pay and, therefore, in itself to create a charge. But the question before their Lordships in that case was merely whether the particular form of acknowledgment which they were considering satisfied the requirements of s. 19 of the Limitation Act and what was laid down by them ultimately was simply this that s. 19 requires only a definite admission of liability and says nothing about a promise to pay. In the present case it is not disputed that the instrument P. 3, if admissible, although not registered contains an admission which will extend limitation.

For all these reasons I am of opinion that the document P. 3, did not require registration and I would, accordingly, accept the appeal and setting aside the judgment appealed against, restore the decree of the trial Court with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 21, O. XLI, rr. 27, 28—Jurisdiction—Trial of case by Court not having local jurisdiction—Interference in appeal—Appeal—Additional evidence—Remand—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 25—Consideration—Promise to pay debt of his deceased brother.

Where a case has been decided by a Court having not territorial jurisdiction, its decision will not be set aside on that score unless it is shown that a failure of justice has resulted from the trial of the case at the wrong place. [p. 18, col. 1.]

Where a party had a free hand in summoning of witnesses in the Court of first instance, the case cannot be remanded in appeal for giving him a further opportunity to produce evidence simply because his Counsel in appeal considers the evidence of certain witnesses to be essential. [p. 18, col. 2.]

One G. M. died issueless and was succeeded by N. C. his brother and S. his widow. The deceased owed some money to the plaintiff, N. C. after going into the accounts of the deceased with the plaintiff struck a balance containing a stipulation to pay interest. Plaintiff sued N. C. for recovery of his debt and the latter pleaded want of consideration:

Held, that the burden of proving absence of consideration lay on N. C. which he had failed to discharge. [ibid.]

Held, further, that the plaintiff by accepting the signature of N. C. and his undertaking to pay the amount due on the accounts discharged G. M.'s estate from liability and that was a sufficient consideration to sustain an action against N. C. [ibid.]

Messrs. N. C. Pandit and M. C. Sud, for the Appellant.

Lala Badri Das, R. B. and Lala Ajit Parshad, for the Respondent.

Broadway, Offg. C. J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by one Dal Singh a jat of Singhwala in the Ferozepore District against Nihal Chand, son of Daulat Ram, a Bhabra, and (15) 33 O. 1047.

*Pages of 33 O.—[Ed.]

Musammam Saman widow of Gopi Mal, for the recovery of Rs. 17,392-9 3 being the principal and interest due on bahi accounts, the accounts having been started by Gopi Mal, the deceased brother of Nihal Chand and husband of Musammam Saman. It is alleged that after death of Gopi Mal without issue Nihal Chand and Musammam Saman came into possession of Gopi Mal's estate as his heirs and that Nihal Chand had himself on two separate occasions after the death of Gopi Mal gone into Gopi Mal's accounts, acknowledged their correctness and struck balances undertaking at the same time to pay interest. Nihal Chand while admitting his relationship and the fact that he had signed the acknowledgments in the account books, as alleged, pleaded (1) want of jurisdiction in the Ferozepore Courts, (2) want of consideration and further denied that he had undertaken to pay the interest.

As a result of the statement made by the plaintiff the suit against Musammam Saman was withdrawn or dismissed and the case proceeded against Nihal Chand who stoutly contested it. In the end the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim in the full with costs. It is against this decree that Nihal Chand has preferred this appeal through Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit who has taken us through the record.

On the question of jurisdiction Mr. Badri Das for the respondent drew attention to s. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code and pointed out that even assuming that the Courts at Ferozepore had no jurisdiction to try the case, it had not been shown that any failure of justice had occurred in consequence of the trial in that District. On being asked to explain in what way there had been any failure of justice Mr. Pandit was unable to say more than that the case had not been properly enquired into. Now a reference to the record shows that all the witnesses that the defendant-appellant sought to produce were produced and examined. The trial Court obviously allowed the appellant every latitude and it was only when the defendant and his Counsel had completed the defendant's case that a statement was recorded to the effect that the defendant's case was closed. In these circumstances it seems to me clear that there has been no failure of justice in consequence of the trial having been held at Ferozepore. Further on the record itself it seems to me that the Ferozepore Courts had jurisdiction. Gopi Mal undoubtedly lived in the same village as the plaintiff. The defendant Nihal Chand owned property in that village and as the heir to Gopi Mal will succeed to the property which is situated in that village. The Dabwali Mandi where they carried on business is only about three or four miles away and I see no reason to doubt the statements of the witnesses led by the plaintiff-respondent who say that Nihal Chand has a residence both in the village of Singhewala and Dabwali Mandi.

Mr. Pandit then urged that certain witnesses who might have been examined were not examined and asked for a remand for their examination. At this stage this prayer cannot be granted. The defendant Nihal Chand had a free hand in the summoning of witnesses and his not having considered it necessary either to go into the witness-box himself or summon witnesses which appear to Mr. Pandit to be necessary is no reason for giving him a further opportunity to produce evidence.

It was next urged that there was no consideration so far as Nihal Chand was concerned. There can be no doubt that the onus of proving that there was no consideration rested on the defendant-appellant and it is clear that he has failed to discharge that onus. The plaintiff had a claim against Gopi Mal's estate which apparently was under the control of Nihal Chand and Musammam Saman. By accepting Nihal Chand's signature and undertaking to pay off the amount due on the accounts, the estate of Gopi Mal was discharged from liability which was doubtless the reason why his widow's name was struck off the list of defendants as soon as Nihal Chand appellant had admitted having struck the balances. Finally, it was urged that Nihal Chand was not liable to pay interest. Here again the entries which were admittedly made by Nihal Chand contained an undertaking to pay the interest, the interest then being annas twelve instead of rupee one per cent.

In my judgment the appeal fails and I would, therefore, dismiss it with costs.

Persons accused of an offence cannot be convicted upon the evidence of an approver unless the connection of each of the accused with the crime is proved by independent corroborative evidence. [p. 24, col. 2]

Evidence of an isolated instance of association, by itself, is not of much corroborative value, unless it is combined with other evidence of the same nature or of a nature showing an even more intimate connection between the accused. [p. 25, col. 1.]

There is much difference between association at a suspicious place which in itself points to two persons having met for some sinister purpose and natural association which in itself raises no suspicions by itself. [p. 25, col. 1.]

It is not proper to record a confession in a Police Station or during the night. If the matter is urgent and the surroundings have to be accepted as unavoidable, exceptional care should be taken to observe very strictly the directions prescribed by the rules for recording confessions. Failure of the Magistrate recording a confession to question the accused in order to satisfy himself that the accused was making the confession voluntarily is a radical and fatal defect which cannot be cured by s. 533, Criminal Procedure Code. [ibid.]

The fact that the Magistrate was satisfied from observation that the accused was making the confession voluntarily does not dispense with the necessity of questioning the accused. Farid v. Emperor (1), followed. [ibid.]

Criminal Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 9th September, 1931.

Messrs. C. Bevan Petman, B. R. Puri, J. N. Aggarwal, Mehr Chand Mahajan, Amin Chand and Partap Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, The Government Advocate and Messrs. Qalandar Ali Khan and J. W. Fairlie, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—On the 23rd December, 1930, an attempt was made by one Hari Kishen to shoot His Excellency the Governor of the Punjab at the Lahore University Convocation. The Governor was wounded and one of the shots fired killed Sub-Inspector Chanan Singh, who was in attendance. Hari Kishen was captured on the spot, tried and sentenced to death. Three men Durga Das, Chaman Lal and Ranbir Singh have been committed to the Sessions, tried and sentenced to death for conspiracy with Hari Kishen and one Wasanda Ram, who has turned approver, to murder His Excellency and for murdering Chanan Singh in pursuance of the conspiracy. In his judgment the learned Sessions Judge has described the death of Chanan Singh as being in consequence of that conspiracy and not "in pursuance thereof". Great stress has been laid on the difference in the wording. In our opinion the difference merely amounts to laying stress on the objective as opposed to the subjective aspect of the crime.

The question to be decided is whether there was such a conspiracy, and, if so whether the three appellants before us took part in it.

The evidence consists of:—(1) The statement of the approver. (2) The general corroboration of that statement consisting of witnesses produced to show that he remembers what happened and tells the story straightforwardly and truthfully. (3) Corroboration against each individual as supplied by witnesses who connect the particular individual with the commission of the offence.

We take the approver's story first and then proceed to examine the corroborative evidence under both heads. Wasanda Ram, who is 19 years of age, was a student of the Sanatan Dharam College in the year 1929. He describes himself as politically minded and in December, 1929, he attended a meeting of the Indian National Congress on the bank of the Ravi and there discovered the existence of a Students' Union. He took preliminary steps to join this body but never completed the necessary formalities. In spite of this he attended some meetings at one of which he met a man Durga Das who gave his name as Mr. Khanna of the D. A. V. College. Later, this man gave him a list of books which he advised him to read. In March he met this man again and noticed that he was with a person whom he subsequently learnt to be Ranbir Singh. At the end of the summer term he went to his home in the Lyallpur District and says that one day in August he came to Lahore in consequence of his having seen an advertisement in the Tribune calling for candidates for a clerkship which had been inserted by one Bhagwan Singh Contractor. In the afternoon of this day he happened to meet this man Durga Das near the Museum and on this occasion Durga Das revealed to him the existence of an organisation of revolutionaries, to which he himself belonged, and described to him how the members belonged to three different groups differentiated by their duties and activities. This meeting, therefore, was a crucial incident and formed the starting point of Wasanda Ram's connection with the alleged conspiracy. On returning to Lahore in September he first lived in the College Hostel and in October moved out and went to the Pawitar Hotel and shared a room with one Attar Chand. A few days later he met Durga Das again by accident and told him that he had left the hostel and was living in the hotel and Durga Das then paid him a visit. At the time of this visit Durga Das explained to him that he would like him to live in a more secluded place and accordingly he and a friend Mul Raj went to Muhalla Ram Nagar near Raj Garh, a suburb of Lahore, and took two rooms and paid a month's rent. After staying there 15 or 16 days they moved and went to Rama Cottage. They took rooms from Ram Nath, the son of Ram Lal, landlord, and did not pay rent in advance. Mul Raj fell sick and left on the 10th of December and on the 19th Wasanda Ram met Durga Das again and took him to this house. Durga Das presented him with a Rs. 10 note, told him to pay the rent out of it and that he wanted to leave a bomb, a revolver and cartridges with him and that very evening came to the house and left these articles. He then told him that he would bring a man to him the next day and wished him to stay at home to receive him. While this conversation was in progress the landlord Ram Lal passed by and the approver thought it a good opportunity to pay him his rent. He took Rs. 8 out of a box, in which he kept his money, and paid the landlord Ram Lal in the presence of Durga Das. This box was in the inner of his two rooms. The following afternoon Durga Das brought a man whom he called Ram Lal and actually was Hari Kishen and told Wasanda Ram to look after him and make all the necessary arrangements for his food. Next morning, the 21st of December, and this is the point where the conspiracy was first revealed in its entirety to Wasanda Ram, Durga Das and Ranbir Singh came to the house, greeted Hari Kishen affectionately and told Wasanda Ram that it had been decided to attempt the life of the Governor at the Convocation, which would take place on the 23rd. That afternoon Durga Das returned, showed great nervousness at having seen a man Shanti Parkash, who also lived in Rama Cottage and was reassured by Wasanda Ram. Again that night Durga Das came alone to Rama Cottage and handed over to Hari Kishen the revolver, with which the murder was actually committed, and some cartridges. He told Wasanda Ram to buy clothes for Hari Kishen and gave him some money. He also told him to take Hari Kishen in the morning to the gun outside the Museum and to hand him over to Ranbir Singh, who would be there. At 7 o'clock the next morning Wasanda Ram took Hari Kishen to the gun, met Ranbir Singh and was told by him that his duty was done and he would go away. As a matter of fact he still had to buy clothes for Hari Kishen and this he proceeded to do and ordered a coat, a shirt and a pagri to be made for him. The tailor, who made these articles and procured the cloth for them was one Bansi Lal who has been produced and bears out the main incidents in the story. Wasanda Ram then returned home and was joined by Hari Kishen at 11 or 12 o'clock. That afternoon, while they were sitting in Rama Cottage, Ranbir Singh arrived with a camera. The landlord Ram Lal was on the spot sitting outside the house with some friends named Barkat and Hakim, who had come to pay him a visit. Shanti Parkash, the lodger, was also at home. Ranbir Singh took several photographs of Hari Kishen and there was some conversation between him and the landlord about a chair and a tea-poy, which were required for the camera to stand on. A further incident is described consisting of the landlord having gone into his room and brought out a photograph of a family group of his own and shown it to them. On the following morning Wasanda Ram fetched the clothes and to complete his dress he gave Hari Kishen a salwar of his own after cutting out the Dhobi mark. While Hari Kishen was present Durga Das came and produced an invitation card for the convocation and told the approver to write the name of Mr. Mohammad Yusaf upon it, which he did. Durga Das then gave Hari Kishen his instructions, told him to leave the house at half past ten and go to University Hall by a round about way and gave him some small change in case he should want it to pay for a tonga. He told Wasanda Ram to make a bundle of the clothes and of the revolver, the bomb and the cartridges which had been given him before and to take them to the "Milap" Office that day. This Wasanda Ram did. The bundle was taken over by Ranbir Singh. Wasanda Ram then packed his trunk and went to the Railway Station and so on to his home in the Lyallpur District. On the 28th the Police arrived and on the 6th and 7th January he made his confession before a Magistrate which forms the basis of this case.

The learned Sessions Judge has attached exceptional value to the statement of this approver. He was much impressed by the manner in which he gave his evidence. He believes him to be a truthful and conscientious witness but realises that this does not dispense with the necessity of corroboration. He thinks him a misguided youth who was led astray by the glamour of martyrdom. He finds that on realising his mistakes he honestly tried to atone for his folly and to tell a candid and truthful story of all that he knew. We may say at once that we have not been very favourably impressed by this man's evidence. In view of the corroboration, which will be examined later, we do find that he took part in the conspiracy, that the story is on the whole true, that he did afford an asylum for Hari Kishen and, more especially that the story about the purchase of clothes is true and that he did write the name of Mr. Mohammad Yusaf which now appears on the invitation card used by Hari Kishen. It is unnecessary to examine or to refer to the corroboration of details of the story by evidence regarding such incidents as the purchase of sweets by Wasanda Ram and the contradiction, which exists, as to whether he ate them all himself or took some back to his guest. Nor do we propose to examine the contradictions as to the number of meals eaten by him and Hari Kishen and the place where they ate them and whether in company or alone. We are satisfied that the approver did arrange for the necessary meals and his statement is borne out by the Hostel Cook and the scullion. We find that the approver was one of the most important members of the conspiracy though he was only told of it in its entirety or indeed of its main features at a very late stage. He provided the lodging and food for the principal active agent. He bought his clothes and arranged for his food.

The corroboration falls under two heads:—

(1) General Corroboration.

(2) Special corroboration connecting each of the accused with the conspiracy.

The first shows or is meant to show that the man is truthful and has a good memory. Holding it proved that this approver was an active conspirator, we may, I think, confine ourselves to five portions of branches of the corroboration under this head. These are the details of the visit to Lahore in August, 1930, the movements of the approver in October, November, and December and his change of lodgings, the clothes incident, the card incident, and the camera incident. The first affords a test of very peculiar value because there can be no question of the approver being mistaken or having forgotten about it. It formed according to him, an interlude which broke the monotony of the long vacation and, further, it was the point at which his true initiation began and was followed by the uneventful remainder of the vacation. The story is that some time in August he came for a day to Lahore from his home in the Lyallpur District, stayed there the whole of the day and returned at night. He says that he came in answer to an advertisement, which had appeared in the Tribune and in the hope of getting employment. After doing or rather failing to do his business, at about 4 p. m. he met Durga Das outside the Museum and had a conversation with him at which he was told of the revolutionary organisation to which he, Durga Das, belonged himself and how the members were of three categories. He had read an advertisement in the Tribune inserted by one Bhagwan Singh offering employment to a clerk on Rs. 50 a month and saying that the successful candidate would have to deposit Rs. 600 security. No name was given but only a number. He says that he discussed the matter with his father and his family and received no encouragement. Later he changes this detail and says that he only consulted them later as to the advisability of seeking such employment. The advertisement called for applications to a certain number 2617. He answered the advertisement but not to the number advertised and received a reply from one Bhagwan Singh of Muhalla

Sathan. He then waited until his father was away from home, took Rs. 200 from what he calls the family funds and went to Lahore. Bhagwan Singh, who appeared as a witness, says that he never received any application for the post and this is borne out by the evidence of the clerk from the Tribune Office who says no letter arrived which necessitated the checking of the name and address of the inserter of the advertisement. On reaching Lahore Wasanda Ram set out to find Bhagwan Singh's house, went to the Muhalla and made enquiries. He could not have done so had he not received an answer to the letter not addressed to the advertisement number. Eventually he reached the street in which Bhagwan Singh lives, did not go right up to the house but entered into conversation with a man sitting in a shop next door, questioned him, and was told that one Bhagwan Singh who lived in the house was in the habit of inserting advertisements in the papers. The shop was that of a petition-writer. This information so discouraged him especially when combined with the fact that the appearance of the house, which he did not attempt to enter, was mean and poor, that he went away and dropped the matter. A most improbable story—not impossible but improbable. If it was worth his while to come all the way to Lahore in search of his employment and to take Rs. 200 without his father's knowledge, one would expect him to have followed the matter up a little further. And why Rs. 200? Granted there was no more available, why take more than sufficient for his expenses if he would not get the Rs. 100? and why should the fact that the house only had two stories frighten him? The detail as to the frequency of Bhagwan Singh's advertisement is somewhat shaken by the evidence of a clerk in the Tribune Office, who says this was the only advertisement ever inserted by Bhagwan Singh. He says that he did not write to the given number. How then did he address his letter for at the time he admittedly did not know the name Bhagwan Singh. Both Bhagwan Singh and the clerk of the Tribune Office say that no reply was received to the advertisement and the clerk should remember as the address, if intelligible at all, would have required the checking of the particulars of No. 2617. This is only the beginning of the trouble.

The Sessions Judge followed up this part of the story by sending the approver with a Magistrate down to the City to see if he could point out the house. There is a flat contradiction between the Magistrate's evidence and that of the approver as to whether he pointed out the shop, at which he had made enquiries, or identified the man, who was sitting in the shop as the person from whom he enquired. The Magistrate is quite clear that all that he did was to point out the shop and is supported by his note made at the time. Now the tenant of the shop has been produced as a witness, being one Faqir Chand and it is disclosed in his evidence that he only took it four months before giving evidence and several months after the incident of August, 1930. Before he took the shop it was occupied by a grocer. It is true that he had another shop in August, 1930, four or five shops further down the street and not next door to the house of the advertising contractor. Before he was sent to the City with the Magistrate the approver positively stated that the house pointed out to him as being that of Bhagwan Singh bore the number 2617. As a matter of fact the number of the house in the Municipal Registers is 1655 and it is not shown that this number is any where exposed to view. The mistake might have been unimportant, were it not that 2617 is the number given in the advertisement in the Tribune by Bhagwan Singh. Then the approver was questioned in Court by the Sessions Judge; he was shown the advertisement but the number had been covered so that he could not see it. On the following day he made this positive assertion, thus showing that he had remembered or discovered in the interval what was the number given in the advertisement and, believing quite wrongly that this was the real number of the house and not realising that it was merely the advertisement number, he deliberately manufactured the detail of there being a number on the house and described how he had seen what did not exist. On every single point, therefore, on which there could be a contradiction, there is one, and the only grain of truth appears to be that Bhagwan Singh inserted the advertisement in the Tribune. The approver has avoided giving details, which could be checked regarding the appearance of the house as when he says that it may have had one or two stories. If it impressed him so unfavourably as to make him return without going any further in his enquiries, he would remember more. Any doubt that might remain as to the truth of this story is set at rest by a later statement of the approver himself on page 56 of the record when he says: "I remember I went to my village, as quickly as I could, as soon as the summer holidays of 1930 opened. I cannot now say whether in those summer holidays, there was any occasion or any other business that brought me to Lahore. I returned to Lahore at the end of the holidays for the term (i. e. the 17th September). Nothing could be clearer than this and the explanation obviously is that at the time he made this statement he was trying to explain away an accidental mistake regarding a certain poster. He said that he had seen it at his village before coming to Lahore in September. This he could not have done as the poster was not printed until the 10th of October. Being constitutionally incapable of saying that he had made a mistake, as so many witnesses are, he was struggling from the terrible position and blundered by telling the truth on the infinitely more important point of whether he had come to Lahore at all during the vacation. His mind being distracted at the moment from the consequences of the admission he was making and being centered upon the importance of avoiding the admission of having forgotten or mistaken the wholly unimportant detail as to where he first saw the poster he told the truth, which was that he did not come to Lahore between the dates of leaving at the beginning of the vacation and returning to it at the end. The various improbabilities taken together amount to the improbability of the story of the search for Bhagwan Singh's house being truth and this statement further establishes that regarding this incident the approver is deliberately lying and also establishes that it was not in August that he was initiated and that he did not then meet Durga Das. The Government-Advocate would have us hold that the statement about not coming to Lahore must be a mistake because the approver's attention was not drawn to the consequences of his reply. It is just because his mind was distracted by the poster incident and he failed to realise the consequences of his reply that we attach such peculiar value to it. We have elaborated this incident as we consider it of immense importance and that it proves that the approver is not to say the least of it a very truthful man. We believe that he did see the advertisement, that it was fixed in his memory by the fact that he discussed its attractions with his father. The rest is a clumsy fabrication.

The next point is that of the movements of the approver in October, November and December, and how and why he changed his quarters. The story is that, after living in the hostel in September, the approver moved first to Pawitar Hotel. This is uncorroborated. From Pawitar Hotel he went to Ram Nagar Muhalla and together with his friend Mul Raj rented two rooms from a Sikh clerk from the 2nd or 3rd November and paid a month's rent in advance. Durga Das came to see these lodgings and desired him to find a more secluded place. He moved accordingly on the 19th or 20th of November to Rama Cottage. The Sikh clerk, Jagdev Singh has been produced and does not bear out the story in its entirety, in fact contradicts it on the important detail of the duration of the stay. This man says the two men came, took two rooms, paid the money in advance, and so far as he remembers they stayed a month. He was not questioned as to whether he had refunded anything as due to them when they left, but he does say that they paid one month's rent and no more. The evidence in support of the approver's version of this intermediate incident does not rebut the criticism which has been launched against the details of the stay at Rama Cottage, the story being that the approver and his friend went on the 19th of November, and the friend Mul Raj fell sick and left on the 10th of December. On the 19th of December when exactly a month's rent was due, nothing having been paid in advance, Wasanda Ram paid Rs. 8 to Ram Lal landlord and Durga Das was present when the money was paid. This story is attacked by pointing out many contradictions as between the story told by the approver and the story of Ram Lal, which latter story is further contradicted by the internal evidence of a note book produced to support it. This man Ram Lal is perhaps the most unsatisfactory witness in the whole case, which is very unfortunate, as his evidence is of considerable importance. He has not only contradicted himself but contradicted the approver on almost every possible detail, as for instance where the box was stored out of which the money was brought, who his tenants were—and this is the point on which he must have known the truth—whether the house was empty when Wasanda Ram and his friend came, when Jawahar Lal, another tenant, left and what he was paid for rent and for electric light. He gives evidence regarding this stay of the approver and his friends in Rama

Cottage and he also gives evidence of what is described as the camera incident, and the story told about the camera and the visit of Ranbir Singh is as unsatisfactory as that about the tenants and the rent. It is not proved, apart from the approver's story, that Wasanda Ram went to Rama Cottage on the 19th of November as opposed to the 10th December. The evidence led in support of the details of the portion of the approver's story is wholly unreliable and proves nothing whatsoever. It has, therefore, been correctly claimed by Counsel for the appellants that the story of Wasanda Ram's wanderings and the details of his arriving and staying in Rama Cottage are in no way borne out. They may be true or they may not but they are not corroborated. He did stay in Rama Cottage and was there in December. More cannot be said with certainty.

This leaves the incidents connected with the purchase of clothes, the preparation of the invitation card and the camera incident. It is established that the name of "Mr. Mohammad Yusaf," which appears on the card, was written by Wasanda Ram and this does certainly establish the truth of his story on this point and the fact that at this stage of the proceedings, the 23rd morning, the approver was taking a very important part in this conspiracy. It is proved that acting on information received the Police set about checking invitation cards which had been collected after they had been handed in by persons attending the Convocation on the 23rd and discovered this particular card bearing the name "Mr. Mohammad Yusaf", which they had reason to believe had been handed in by Hari Kishen. The fact of the preparation of this card and its being handed over to Hari Kishen was subsequently established by the statement of the approver and the evidence as to his handwriting.

As stated above it is established beyond any doubt that Wasanda Ram did purchase clothes for Hari Kishen. He says that he did so on instructions from Durga Das. There is a curious detail about these clothes which has not been brought out. The salwar, which Hari Kishen was wearing, had been given him, so the approver says, by himself, it being one of his own. The dhobi mark had been cut off. At a search of his room, not the first search, a salwar was discovered. It was produced as Ex. P-9 but no evidence was led to show that it was of similar texture, make or cut, to the salwar worn by Hari Kishen on the 23rd of December. This was perhaps due to an oversight and is immaterial, as no further evidence was required to establish that Wasanda Ram did take an active part in the last stage of this conspiracy.

The evidence as to the camera incident is most unsatisfactory and nothing is proved least of all the identity of Ranbir Singh as a man who came carrying the camera. Four witnesses have all failed to identify him. In addition, there are contradictions on every detail as to whether Ram Lal was present when the photograph was being taken, as to the borrowing of a chair and tea-poy and as to the handing round of a photograph of a group of Ram Lal's family. Ram Lal says himself that he did not see any photographs being taken. As to the story of the production of the family group and its being handed round for inspection, the story of the borrowing of the tea-poy and the chair the witnesses may have forgotten the details but the fact remains that they contradict each other throughout, that the stories told are not consistent and none of them is established.

The corroboration, therefore, of the approver's story as a whole rests on the incident of the purchase of the cloth and the incident of the preparation of the card P. B. These both show that he played his part in the conspiracy, but it is certainly not established that he deserved to be described as an exceptionally truthful and reliable witness, nor is it shown that the usual corroboration, which is required in a case of this nature, can be whittled down or dispensed with. On his own showing the approver was far from frank in the matter of disclosing the real name of Mr. Khanna which he says he knew perfectly well but concealed as long as possible.

We now come to the cases of the individual accused and, as against them, it is settled law that additional corroboration is required connecting them individually with the actual commission of the offence. It is unnecessary to quote any authority on this point. Prudence requires that the connection of each individual with the crime should be proved and corroborated by independent evidence, the real point being that precautions must be taken against the possibility of substitution. A story may be meticulously true in every detail with the all important exception that the name of A has been inserted instead of the name of B. The correctness of the story is not affected by the all-important change.

Against Durga Das the prosecution relies on two witnesses Ram Lal and Shanti Parkash and these have been produced to show that Durga Das met Wasanda Ram, the approver, at Rama Cottage and further that he met him on another occasion at the same place. Ram Lal states that on the 19th of December, he saw Durga Das in Wasanda Ram's room when Wasanda Ram paid him the rent. We have already explained that it is not established by the independent evidence led for the purpose that a month's rent was due at the time and the note book produced by Ram Lal far from supporting him throws further doubt on the matter. There are several contradictions in the stories told by the approver and Ram Lal as to the details of this incident such as the place from which the money was taken. We can place no reliance on Ram Lal's evidence and we find this incident unproved. Shanti Parkash deposes that he saw Durga Das on a bicycle near a charpoy on which the approver was seated on the 21st, outside Rama Cottage. This incident is not mentioned by the approver and at best can only prove that on the 21st Durga Das met Wasanda Ram. It is contended with great force that even if both the incidents were established by unassailable evidence, they would prove nothing more than association on two occasions when Durga Das was seen at Rama Cottage in the company of Wasanda Ram, Rama Cottage not being, in any sense of the word, a secret meeting place but the house in which Wasanda Ram had his lodgings. Shanti Parkash himself says that others used to come to visit Wasanda Ram and before the Committing Magistrate he picked out another man Surindra Kumar as being one of them.

There is all the difference in the world between association at a suspicious place which in itself points to the two persons having met for some sinister purpose, and what may be called natural association which in itself raises no suspicions by itself. It is true that Hari Kishen, the murderer, stayed at Rama Cottage when he came to Lahore. It is true that Wasanda Ram approver was his host, provided him with a room and arranged for his meals. This does not establish that any meeting between Wasanda Ram and X or Y at Rama Cottage even just before the arrival of Hari Kishen was necessarily connected with the visit of Hari Kishen. It is evidence of association and is of considerable value if combined with other evidence of the same nature or of a nature showing an even more intimate connection between the two men. By itself it amounts to very little and inasmuch as we have rejected the rent incident and the evidence of Ram Lal, it is one isolated instance of association. Without the approver's story Durga Das is merely X or Y as described above. The approver's story cannot be invoked to establish the importance of this incident while in its turn this incident is used to establish the truth of the approver's story. There is no corroboration of the nature required as against Durga Das. It would be unsafe to convict him on the uncorroborated story of the approver who is certainly no better than the ordinary run of such men. We accept Durga Das's appeal and acquit him.

Chaman Lal is a school boy, aged 19, and until March, 1930, had been a student of the National High School at Peshawar. He is the son of Lala Ganga Bishen and the grandson of Rai Sahib Lala Buta Mal, a prominent landlord of Mardan. He is a cousin of Hari Kishen. Acting on information received, the Police arrested him at Mardan on the 24th December the day following the outrage. On the morning of the 25th he was taken before Khan Bahadur Abdul Hamid Khan, who granted a remand and the same night at 9 o'clock he made a confession recorded as P. 2. This he retracted on the opening day of the committal proceedings—the 30th of January. The case against him rests on this retracted confession and certain corroboration which, it is said, establishes the truth of the confession. This evidence is led to show that on the 15th of December he left Nowshera, which is the junction for Mardan, by the 3 p. m. train and came to Lahore, that he returned to Nowshera by the Frontier Mail on the 17th, arriving on the 18th; that on the 19th he again left Nowshera in company with Hari Kishen and arrived at Lahore on the 20th and returned from Lahore on the 22nd, the day before the murder. There are also two important letters.

In the first place, Counsel attacks his confession as having been made in an improper place at an improper time, as having been made without the necessary precautions being observed by the Magistrate, as having been recorded as a narrative instead of answers to questions put by the Magistrate, as having been recorded in English instead of Urdu, and finally as not being corroborated on any material point.

The facts are that a messenger was sent to the Magistrate, who is a retired District Judge, that he went to the thana at once, arriving there at 9 at night on Christmas day, that he took the accused into the thana compound and recorded his statement in the open, that he warned the accused and explained to him that the statement would be used against him and that he should only say what he wished to say. He did not tell him that he was a Magistrate and he did not satisfy himself by questioning him whether he was making the confession voluntarily, although he states quite definitely that he was satisfied by observation that the man was making a voluntary statement. Counsel has drawn our attention to the rules and orders on the subject and points out that the confession should have been recorded in the day time in Court and that the omission of the Magistrate to point out to the accused that he was a Magistrate and to question him as to the voluntary nature of the confession are fatal defects. The confession had to be recorded at the beginning of the Christmas Holidays and it was, therefore, obviously impossible, unless a Court could be opened for the purpose, to have it done in a Court. At the same time it would certainly have been more prudent and would have rendered the whole proceedings less open to attack, had some other place than the thana compound and some time other than nine o'clock on a winter night been selected. If it be granted that the matter was urgent, that the surroundings and the general atmosphere had to be accepted as unavoidable, exceptional care should have been taken by the Magistrate to observe very strictly the prescribed directions. He did not do so for Counsel is right in saying that his failure to question the accused as to his making the confession voluntarily is a radical and fatal defect, which cannot be cured by s. 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This has been laid down time and again and more especially in Farid v. Emperor (1). The Magistrate says that he satisfied himself and it was from observation that he came to the conclusion that the confession was voluntarily made. This is not enough. Counsel would have us go further and accept the view expressed in Emperor v. Panchkari Dutt (2) to the effect that the questions put and answers elicited in making the preliminary enquiry must be recorded. This we have already declined to do in 133 Ind. Cas. 55 [Abdul Ghani v. Emperor (3)] and we adhere to the view there expressed and repeat that provided the Magistrate satisfies himself by putting questions and hearing answers, that the prisoner before him is making a voluntary confession, it is unnecessary for him to record the questions and answers, and it is sufficient if he complies with the letter of the law. If he fails to make a note at the time he can subsequently establish when called as a witness that he did so satisfy himself.

The Magistrate says that he noticed when this man was brought to him earlier in the day for a remand that he was likely to make a confession. It is not clear how the Magistrate came to this conclusion as he did not question him, but if he was right, it would have been natural for the man to be questioned there and then. We need not elaborate the crucial point which is explained at length in Farid v. Emperor (1). Observation and questioning are not the same thing. The law is absolutely imperative. It is by questions that the Magistrate must reach his conclusion. He did not do so. This is a fatal and incurable defect.

Apart from this defect, the confession has been attacked on the ground that, as opposed to raising suspicion—and very grave suspicion—it proved nothing conclusively, and the corroboration is challenged as not establishing as it purports to do, the correctness of the dates given. Four witnesses have been produced, of whom Jai Dial has been specially relied on and accepted as trustworthy. He gives evidence to the effect that they saw Chaman Lal in Lahore on the 20th morning. There is also evidence as to the departure of Chaman Lal and Hari Kishen from Hari Kishen's village and from Nowshera junction.

Great reliance has been placed upon P. 27, a letter admittedly written by Chaman Lal to his father and found in his father's house. Counsel contends that this may be a suspicious document, which it certainly is, but says that it corroborates no portion of the confession and that it is not shown by the prosecution when it was written though it is argued that the contents lead to an inference that it must have been written in December, 1930. Further there is a letter written by Ranbir Singh's father to Ohaman Lal's father. This corroboration, if accepted in its entirety, does not prove the guilt of Ohaman Lal and merely raises a grave suspicion against him. We are, therefore, of opinion that on account of the radical defect in the method of recording the confession, the guilt of Ohaman Lal is not established and we accept his appeal and acquit him.

This brings us to the case of Ranbir Singh. Against him the evidence consists of the retracted confession of Ohaman Lal, the statement of the approver and the corroboration afforded by the evidence of Ram Lal, Barkat and Hakim as to the camera incident. It is shown, and it is not denied, that this young man was a friend and relation of Ohaman Lal and that they knew each other and their parents corresponded. As we have found the confession of Ohaman Lal to be inadmissible, it follows that no use whatever can be made of it against Ranbir Singh. The evidence, therefore, is reduced to the statement of the approver and the corroboration of the witnesses of the camera incident.

This incident, if established, is of great value as proving a meeting between the three men, the approver, Ranbir Singh and Hari Kishen. There are three witnesses of whom two—Hakim and Barkat—have been rejected by the Sessions Judge as they failed to identify Ranbir Singh in the identification parade and in the Committing Magistrate's Court and we agree with the view taken by the Sessions Judge. There remains Ram Lal. We have explained above that he is a most unsatisfactory and unreliable witness, that he contradicts himself on almost every detail to which he testifies and that he and the approver further contradict each other. He further successfully identified Ranbir Singh at the identification parade but failed to identify before the Committing Magistrate and he did identify him before the Sessions Judge. At the identification parade it is shown that Ranbir Singh was the only person wearing glasses. Before the Committing Magistrate he had removed his glasses and Ram Lal failed to pick him out and he did pick out one Amba Parshad as being Ranbir Singh. The identification before the Sessions Judge is of no value as he admits that he had seen him outside before entering the Court. The evidence, therefore of Ram Lal against Ranbir Singh is of no practical value except in so far as it corroborates the approver vaguely as to the general story that a man came and took a photograph of Hari Kishen. It is not shown who that man was. This fact in itself unsupported by further evidence from any reliable witness is not of any practical value. The approver's story remains uncorroborated in any detail which connects Ranbir Singh with the commission of the offence and he must, therefore, be acquitted.

We accept the appeals of all these men, Durga Das, Ohaman Lal and Ranbir Singh and acquit them.

Criminal Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jullundur, dated the 18th February, 1931.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Government-Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—Four men, Jamala, Feroz, Surjan Singh and Mehr Khan have been convicted under s. 401, Indian Penal Code, of being members of a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing thefts and have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, Jamala to four years, Feroz his brother to two years, Surjan Singh to five years and Mehr Khan to four years. They have, in addition, been tried separately for having taken part in the commission of various crimes as members of the gang, such crimes constituting the activities for which the gang was formed. Jamala has been convicted of committing two offences under s. 411, Indian Penal Code, and one under s. 457; Feroz of committing two offences under s. 457 and Mehr Khan of committing one offence under s. 411.

All have appealed and the first point to be decided is whether it is established that there was such a gang in existence associated for the purpose of habitually committing offences, or, to be more precise, burglaries and operating in the area known as the Doaba of Jullundur. Six men were sent up for trial altogether of whom two have been acquitted. The gang is said to have consisted of these four and the approver Nabi Bakhsh. Two men Surjan Singh and Nabi Bakhsh approver are residents of the neighbouring District of Amritsar, the other three Jamala, his brother Feroz and Mehr Khan are residents of Jullundur. Between November, 1929, and April, 1930, sixteen burglaries are said to have been committed or attempted in this area near the village of Nawanpind where the three Jullundur men lived. Out of these, nine were reported and seven were merely attempts where no serious damage was done. Regarding three, all committed in the village of Alawalpur at the end of December, in March, 1930, and on 4th April, 1930, property stolen was actually recovered and it has been found as regards the four appellants, that Jamala was in possession of property stolen on three occasions, Feroz his brother of property stolen on two, Surjan Singh of property stolen on two and Mehr Khan of property stolen on one.

I have been taken through the record and have heard Mr. Mohsin Shah on the point of whether the evidence establishes the requirements of the section and proves that there was a gang associated for this purpose. At first the Police were unable to discover any clue but eventually Surjan

Singh, who was arrested in the Amritsar District in connection with another case, gave them the clue which led them to unravel the whole case. The approver confessed first on the 14th September and was followed by Jamala on the 13th October, Mehr Khan on the 18th and Surjan Singh on the 27th. It appears, however, that the approver had made a statement earlier though it was not recorded as a full confession, which led to many other discoveries and the arrest of his companions.

Out of the sixteen burglaries said by the approver to have been committed by the gang, nine were reported to the Police. In the first two, Jamala was the only companion of the approver, and a question arises of whether it can be said that the gang reached its true existence at this stage. From then onwards sometimes three, sometimes four including the approver, are shown to have taken part in the burglaries; and that these burglaries were actually committed is supported by the evidence of the owners of the houses, whether they actually made a report or not. The activities fall roughly in two halves between the middle of December, 1929, and the end of December, after which there appears to have been a lull, and then again from the middle of February to the beginning of April. The accused appear to have been inspired by the hope of obtaining a pardon and their confessions are certainly admissible, and valuable evidence, although retracted against themselves, whatever their value may be considered to be as against the other accused.

Taking the first group which includes the greater number of the burglaries reported, Jamala, Mehr Khan and Surjan Singh all corroborate the approver's statement as against themselves and describe the burglaries. Taking the second group, namely, the burglary at Jalla Singh and three attempts at Mangal Manaur, that at Jalla Singh is not mentioned by any of the accused and there is no corroboration of the approver's story. Surjan Singh and Mehr Khan have mentioned two attempts at Mangal Manaur and Jamala one only. There is further corroboration of the three main burglaries at Alawalpur reported on the 26th December, 1929, 29th March, 1930, and 4th April, 1930, which is supplied by the recoveries of part of the stolen property from the houses of these three men, Jamala, Mehr Khan and Surjan Singh. Taking all this evidence together I think it is established that a gang was in existence of which the more prominent members were Jamala and the approver Nabi Baksh, that it operated in this area of the Jullundur Doaba and that its members were associated for the purpose of committing burglaries and in pursuit of their common object they did commit some nine burglaries and attempted to commit seven more between November, 1929, and the beginning of April.

The next question is whether it is proved conclusively that the four appellants were the members of this gang. So far as Jamala, Mehr Khan and Surjan Singh are concerned, it is, I think, conclusively proved by the evidence of the approver, corroborated as it is throughout by various incidents and various details and the independent evidence of the owners of the houses in which the burglaries were committed or attempted, by the retracted confession of Jamala and the recovery of stolen property, that Jamala took a most prominent part in the activities of this gang. He was not actually present in person in the dacoity at the house of Mathra Das on the 29th March, 1930, but he was found in possession of part of stolen property. His confession corroborates the story told by the approver, property was recovered from his house which had been stolen in each of the three Alawalpur burglaries and he has, I think, been rightly convicted under s. 401. The same applies to Surjan Singh. His own confession corroborates that of the approver, property was recovered from his house which had been stolen in two of the Alawalpur burglaries and has rightly been convicted under s. 401. The same again applies to Mehr Khan. He is shown by the approvers' statement and his own confession to have received part of the stolen property in the first burglary at Alawalpur. He is not shown as having been concerned in any way in the two latter burglaries there; and if it were not for his own retracted confession, it might, I think, be said that while there is sufficient corroboration to establish his guilt under s. 411 as regards one burglary, there is not sufficient evidence to establish his membership of the gang. His own confession, however, though retracted, is of considerable value as against him and I think that taken with the approver's statement which it bears out throughout, it shows that he took part in many attempts and many burglaries during these four months. I think, therefore, that he also has been rightly convicted of being a member of the gang.

The case of Feroz remains. He is the brother of Jamala. He is shown in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge as having confessed himself. This, however, is not correct. All that he did was to admit that he was approached with a view to his joining in some burglaries. He lives with his brother Jamala and there is no doubt that stolen property was recovered from the house in which he lived. The approver says that a double share was given to Jamala for himself and Feroz but this is not corroborated in any way, though Counsel for the Crown contends that the fact of his living jointly with his brother is corroboration. He had an ekka which he plied. The Sessions Judge has used the confession of the co-accused, Jamala and Mehr Khan as against this man Feroz. These confessions have been retracted. There is no doubt that the confession of a co-accused is admissible but it is only in peculiar circumstances that it has any value whatsoever. I have been referred by Counsel for the Crown to Partab Singh v. Emperor (1). All that this ruling lays down is that the evidence is admissible. In that case the appeal was accepted. Counsel further relies upon Emperor v. Kehri (2), Ataya v. Emperor (3), Jawan v. Emperor (4) and Karam Singh v. Emperor (5). These rulings lay down the same rule that the evidence of a retracted confession is admissible against a co-accused and also go further and say that it is practically of no value unless there be independent corroboration, the last ruling Karam Singh v. Emperor (5) explaining that the corroboration must connect the particular accused with the commission of the offence. In other words, it appears to me that the case must be to all intents and purposes complete without the retracted confession of the co-accused before it can be used and that confession may almost be described as superfluous or useless. The same rule has been laid down in Devendra Bhattacharya v. Emperor (6), Yasin v. Emperor (7) and Moyez Sardar v. Emperor (8). The earliest of these rulings Yasin v. Emperor (7) puts the matter very clearly. It is obvious that a retracted confession should carry practically no weight as against persons other than the maker. It is not made on oath; it is not tested by cross-examination and it is denied by the maker himself, who thus lied on either one or other of the occasions. The very fullest corroboration would be necessary in such a case for more than would be demanded for the sworn testimony of an accomplice on oath. That corroboration, as explained in Karam Singh v. Emperor (5), must connect the accused with the commission of the offence. In this case as against Feroz all we have is the statement of the approver, the confession of two co-accused and the recovery of property from his brother's house, which can only be held to be tantamount to recovery from his own if the retracted confession of Jamala his brother be accepted as full and sufficient corroboration of the approver's story. Applying the test laid down, the retracted confession of Jamala is for this purpose almost valueless and in its turn it is not corroborated except by the tainted evidence of the approver. I find, therefore, that no case has been established against Feroz and that it is not proved that he was a member of the gang. So far as the retracted confessions as a whole are concerned in this case they are corroborated and are of value as against all the accused other than those making them, excepting always Feroz, but they are quite unnecessary and superfluous inasmuch as the approver's statement is fully corroborated by independent evidence and the confessions of each accused in turn when used against himself. As against Feroz they are valueless.

The sentences passed are four years in the case of Jamala, five years in the case of Surjan Singh and four years in the case of Mehr Khan. I uphold the sentence in the case of Jamala. He is shown to have taken a prominent part in the activities of this gang. I also uphold the sentence in the case of Surjan Singh who has two previous convictions under Chap. XVII. I reduce the sentence of Mehr Khan to three years' rigorous imprisonment for he is not as deeply implicated as Jamala. I accept the appeal of Feroz and acquit him.

In addition to the convictions under s. 401

each of the four appellants has been separately tried for separate offences said to have been established by the evidence. Jamala has been convicted and separately sentenced once under s. 457 and twice under s. 411 for having taken part in the 3rd burglary at Alawalpur and having received part of the stolen property from the 1st and 2nd. Similarly, Surjan Singh has received two separate sentences of two years under s. 457 for taking part in the 2nd and 3rd burglary at Alawalpur and Mehr Khan has been convicted separately and sentenced for receiving stolen property of the 2nd burglary at Alawalpur.

Technically the offence of being member of a gang associated for the purpose of committing burglaries is different from that of actually taking part in them, but looked at from a practical point of view, however much the gang might wish to commit burglaries and however close the association might be and well organised the arrangements, unless the activities materialise into actual burglaries or attempts at burglaries no one will be any the wiser or take any action, and where the main and all-important corroboration against the accused and the main evidence to establish their membership of the gang consists of the evidence that they took part or received some of the proceeds of these three burglaries, I think, to give them separate sentences comes perilously near to infringing the principle of "nemo debet bis vexari". While, therefore, I think the sentences are strictly legal I do not think they are equitable, running consecutively as they do, and I think the soundest thing will be to make them concurrent. I do so.

Feroz has been convicted twice under s. 457 apart from the conviction in the gang case on the strength of property recovered from the house, which he shared with his brother. I need not repeat what I have said in the gang case but for the reasons there given I accept the appeal of Feroz and acquit him of both charges under s. 457.

I should like to take this opportunity of pointing out that the net result of this long case is that the three men whose convictions are upheld got very much the same sentences as they would have got for the substantive offences and all the time and trouble, not to mention the vast sums expended, have been wasted. In the Sessions Court the gang case took over a month to try and very nearly the same length of time to commit. The appeal took three days in this Court. There seems to be a fatal attraction about conspiracy and gang cases, and it is perhaps not always realized how difficult it is to prove them. Speaking generally the Police would usually be well advised to proceed with the substantive cases and to leave the gang case alone.

Appeal partly accepted.

Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act (VIII of 1925), ss. 2 (9), 7—Udasis, whether Sikhs—Sikh Gurdwara—Proof of dedication by Sikhs, necessity of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Prior decision in scheme suit, whether operates as res judicata

Where the Division Bench decided the nature of an institution in a suit under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, and in a subsequent proceeding under the Sikh Gurdwaras Act the Tribunal had to decide the question as to whether the institution was a Sikh Gurdwara according to the statutory definition to be found in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925, with which definition the Court was not concerned in the previous suit:

Held, that the previous decision did not operate as res judicata. [p. 31, col. 2.]

Where it is not proved that an institution was established by Sikhs for the purpose of public worship it cannot be declared a Sikh Gurdwara in a petition under s. 7, Sikh Gurdwaras Act. [p. 32, col. 1.]

Udasis are not Sikhs within the meaning of that term as defined in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act. Ram Prasad v. Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee (1), followed. [p. 32, col. 2.]

First Appeal against a decree of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, Lahore, dated the 18th June, 1928.

Messrs. Sheo Narain and Bhagat Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Har Gopal, for the Respondents.

Broadway, J.—By a Notification No. 634, dated 1st April, 1926, the Punjab Government published a petition duly made under s. 7, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925, relating to a Gurdwara described as Dharamsala Diwan Hukman Singh alias Sadhu Ram Wali and asking that it should be declared a Sikh Gurdwara. As a result of this, certain interested persons lodged a petition duly made under s. 8 of the said Act praying that the said Dharamsala should be declared not to be a Sikh Gurdwara. This petition was sent to the Gurdwara Tribunal and, after a careful enquiry, it was held by a majority of the members of the said Tribunal that the petition under s. 8 should be granted and a declaration was accordingly given as required by that section. Against this decision the Shromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and the Committee of the Gurdwara Sadhu Ram Wali Dharamsala at Lahore have preferred this appeal.

It appears that the nature of this institution had been decided by a Division Bench of this Court on a suit instituted by certain "Singhs" under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code. That decision had been in favour of the respondents before us and a copy of this Court's judgment was attached to the petition under s. 8. It was urged that this decision operated as res judicata in the present case. This question was decided unanimously on the 16th November, 1927, by the Tribunal when it was held that that decision did not operate as res judicata. The reasons given are to be found at page 8 of the printed book and, whatever may be said as to the first two reasons, in my judgment the third reason is sufficient to render the view taken by the Tribunal justified. There can be no doubt that what the Division Bench had to decide in the former suit is different from what has to be decided in the present proceedings. The question as to what is a Sikh Gurdwara has to be decided by the Tribunal and by ourselves according to the statutory definition to be found in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925, with which definition this Court was not concerned in the previous suit. I would, therefore, hold that the doctrine of res judicata does not apply in the present case.

That this institution is an old one is admitted by both sides. It may also be conceded that in the early days of its existence it was known as Hukman Singh's Dharamsala. It is clear however that in recent years it is really known by the name of Sadhu Ram Wali. It is also clear from the evidence that from its very inception the Mahants have been Udasis and that succession to the Mahantship has been from Guru to Chela, the appointment being confirmed by the Udasi Bhik and the installation ceremonies being performed under its auspices.

For the appellants it was contended that Diwan Hukman Singh was a Sikh known as a Phatband and that he had been a farmer of taxes under Maharajah Ranjit Singh. His family is now represented by his great-grandsons Brij Lal Singh and Nau Nihal Singh. It is clear from the record that this family has never had any concern with the management of this institution or the property attached to it. The jagir which the institution holds, was granted by the then ruling power to Santokh Das and has been confirmed to his successors. Oharanjit Singh, the father of Nau Nihal Singh, through his mother Musammatt Malan, brought a suit for partition against Brij Lal Singh, and in the plaint reference was made to a Dharamsala in Lahore which was said to be wakf and, therefore, not liable to partition. In the plaint it was set out that this Dharamsala had been declared wakf by Bhagat Singh, father of Oharanjit Singh and Brij Lal Singh. Some years later, Oharanjit Singh is said to have issued a notice to Jairam Das, then Mahant, threatening certain action if the said Jai Ram Das did not furnish accounts and take proper order with the property. The original of this notice is not forthcoming and what purports to be a copy of it has been placed on the record. This is not dated and appears to be in the handwriting of one person. Its genuineness has been attacked and it is difficult to say whether such a notice was ever sent. It is clear, however, that Oharanjit Singh never followed it up and its value is exceedingly small. It shows, however, that it was addressed to Jairam Das as the Mahant and the institution is not referred to by the name of Diwan Hukman Singh, but merely is described as a Dharamsala situated in the Sheranwala Gate.

Mr. Sheo Narain for the appellant has contended that the mention of this Dharamsala in the partition suit already referred to, and this notice coupled with the statements of Nau Nihal Singh, Brij Lal Singh and Musammatt Malan, as to what they had been told by their ancestors is sufficient to prove that this institution had been established by Diwan Hukman Singh, a Sikh living in the time of the Sikhs, and that, therefore, it is only reasonable to suppose that the institution was one which falls within the definition in s. 16 (2), (iii), Sikh Gurdwaras Act, and that it should be held that it had been used for public worship and was used for such worship by Sikhs. On the other hand, it has been urged with considerable force that, while it is now sought to show that Diwan Hukman Singh had established this institution such tradition as exists in the family is to the effect that it had been made wakf by Hukman Singh's grandson Bhagat Singh, who was to all intents and purposes a Hindu, as admittedly he wore the sacred thread, as did his son Brij Lal Singh. It was further contended that the whole history of this institution clearly showed that from the time of Santokh Das, in whose name the jagir was originally granted, to the present time, this institution has been under the control and management of Udasis without any interference or assistance on the part of Hukman Singh's family. It was further pointed out that, although the Adhi Granthi was kept on the premises and was paid due reverence to, the main objects of worship were the Samadhs of Santokh Das and his successors. Mr. Hargopal, therefore, urged that the view taken by the majority of the members of the Tribunal was correct and that the appeal should be dismissed. As the judgment of the learned President of the Tribunal is a careful and detailed one, I do not think it necessary to discuss all the evidence in detail. The evidence, oral and documentary, has been very carefully examined by us, and I agree in holding that the evidence led by the appellants is insufficient to prove that this institution was established by Diwan Hukman Singh. There is evidence on the record to show that some property was acquired by Puran Das and Sadhu Ram for this institution. The management and control has been and is in the hands of the Udasi Sadhas. There can be no doubt that the Samadhs of the past Mahants are the objects of worship and I agree with the majority of the members of the Tribunal in holding that it has not been proved that this institution was established for use by Sikhs for the purpose of public worship.

There remains the question as to whether Udasis are Sikhs within the meaning of that term as defined in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act. This question was argued at length before us during the course of the hearing of the Manak appeals: Ram Prasad v. Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee (1), and in this case the same arguments were adopted. We have decided this question against the appellants and it follows, therefore, that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Johnstone, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 307—Trial by Jury—Reference by Judge—Power of High Court to interfere, whether unlimited—Interpretation of Statutes—Plain language.

On the assumption that a Sessions Judge will not make a reference under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, unless he thinks that the verdict is manifestly wrong, the duty of the High Court in dealing with the reference is confined to considering whether the opinion of the Judge is supported by evidence. [p. 33, col. 2; p. 35, col. 2.]

Per Waller, J.—The observations in Veerappa Goundan v. Emperor (1) should not be construed in such a manner as to limit the discretion of the High Court in disposing of a reference under s. 307. [p. 33, col. 2.]

Per Pandalai, J.—There is nothing in Veerappa Goundan v. Emperor (1) which does violence to the language of s. 307 nor anything which is either inconvenient or unsuitable to Indian conditions. The discretion of the High Court in disposing of references is by no means unlimited: Veerappa Goundan v. Emperor (1), commented upon. Solomon v. Bitton (2), and Emperor v. Ramchandra Roy (3), referred to. [p. 35, col. 2.]

The proper method of construction of a Statute is to interpret its language as it stands uninfluenced by considerations of what the law may be elsewhere [p. 33, col. 2.]

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Trichinopoly, in Case No. 25 of 1931.

Messrs. V. L. Ethiraj and K. Aravamuda Ayyangar, for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Waller, J.—This is a reference under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code. Fifteen persons were charged before the Sessions Judge, Trichinopoly with dacoity. The Jury acquitted one of them and convicted the rest. The Judge thought that acceptance of their verdict would involve a grave miscarriage of justice and has recommended that it be set aside. A Full Bench of this Court has in Veerappa Goundan v. Emperor (1), held that the Jury is primarily the tribunal to find the facts and that it is not for the High Court to interfere with the verdict of a Jury unless it is unreasonable. Mr. Ethiraj has pressed us most urgently not to put too narrow a construction on this ruling. It is not, of course, for us to criticize it, but I think it advisable to correct two statements made in the course of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. The first is that the rule laid down in Solomon v. Bitton (2)

"is enshrined in an even more definite form in the Indian Statute, so far as appeals are concerned."

It is not. Solomon v. Bitton (2) was a case of an application for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. In India, there is no appeal on the facts, but only on points of law. The second is that the Calcutta High Court has inclined preponderantly to what may be described as the English view. That is no longer correct. The latest Calcutta case on the point is Emperor v. Ramchandra Roy (3). Cuming, J., observed that the decisions

"seemed to vary from the extreme view that the High Court should be very reluctant to interfere with a verdict of a Jury to the view that the High Court in dealing with those references is to be guided by the plain words of the Code."

and then went on to say:

"Speaking for myself, I have always thought that I am upon far firmer ground, if I adhere to the strict words of the Code and do not attempt to interpret the Code in the light of the practice in other countries where the law and conditions are different."

That is, of course, the proper method of construction, as their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have pointed out more than once, to interpret the language of the Statute as it stands, uninfluenced by considerations of what the law may be elsewhere.

Now, what is the rule that has been propounded in Veerappa Goundan v. Emperor (1). It is this. On the assumption (which is, I may remark, entirely justified) that Sessions Judges will not make references unless they think that the verdicts are manifestly wrong, the duty of the High Court, in dealing with such a reference, is confined to considering whether the opinion of the Judge is supported by the evidence. To the rule so stated no exception can be taken, but I venture to express a hope that some of the observations in the judgment will not be construed in such a manner as to limit the discretion of the High Court in disposing of these references. All Judges of mufassil experience realize how important it is that the High Court should not allow itself to be influenced by a sort of conventional respect for the verdict of a Jury. The weaknesses and peculiarities of Jurors and assessors are notorious. They will acquit or find extenuating circumstances in the clearest cases of murder; in cases of dacoity, they are far too ready to convict. It is scarcely too much to say that a Maraver charged with dacoity before a Tinnevely Jury has a very slender chance of being acquitted. Another reference has just been argued before us from that district, in which a large number of Maravers have been convicted of dacoity despite the strenuous efforts of the Judge to secure their acquittal. I have had myself to reject appeal after appeal on the ground that no questions of law were involved, although I felt that the verdicts were clearly wrong and that the Judges ought to have made references under s. 307.

In this instance, the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the verdict is plainly unjust and I think that, on the evidence, he is right. The Public Prosecutor concedes that there are some curious features about the case and that the best that can be said of it is that it is on the borderline. Briefly the facts alleged are these. The first two accused owed P. W. No. 18 a considerable sum of money. He sued them and got a decree on a compromise by which the balance of that sum was to be paid in two equal annual instalments; the first of which became payable on 4th August 1930. An offer was made by the debtors to give two pairs of bullocks and a cart in part payment and to deposit the balance in cash. Prosecution Witness No. 10, P. W. No. 18's son, accordingly went to the village on 9th August accompanied by P. Ws. Nos. 11 to 15. The bullocks were inspected by P. Ws. Nos. 11 and 12, who said that they were not worth as much as the debtors thought. They were at once assaulted and the other witnesses tried to escape. They were overtaken however and brought back. Pen, ink and paper were produced and accused No. 1 ordered P. W. No. 10 to write out a receipt. Prosecution Witness No. 10 refused, whereupon accused No. 1 drew a sword and threatened to cut him. Prosecution Witness No. 10 then wrote a receipt for the whole sum due minus a certain rebate and accused No. 1 took it. An alarm was raised and the accused made off. The receipt in question is Ex. E and it is dated 24th July.

It is in a perfectly clear and steady hand and certainly was not written under the circumstances alleged by P. W. No. 10. His story is, in this respect, quite post-terous. His hand was, he says, so shaky as the result of the treatment he had received that he was, at first, unable to write properly. When, however accused No. 1 threatened to cut him, his hand recovered its steadiness and he was able to write. If his nerve was so shaken by a slight assault, a threat to murder him would scarcely have restored it. This goes to the root of the case. If it is obvious that the receipt could not have been written under the circumstances alleged, the whole story goes. It is certain that something happened and possible that no money passed and that the receipt was got hold of by unfair means. As the Sessions Judge observes, there is no smoke without a fire and it was probably on that ground that the Jury convicted. The manner in which the accused, most of whom were unknown to the witnesses, were identified was farcical. The identification was made in the presence of a Police Officer alone after nightfall by the aid of a hurricane lantern. The names of the accused had been supplied by P. W. No. 16 and it is impossible to attach any value to an identification so conducted. The presence of P. W. No. 16 is one of the most suspicious features in the case. Among the accused are several Pallars.

The prosecution case appears to have been that four of them were in accused No. 1's service and the rest were brought in for the purpose of helping. The evidence of P. W. No. 16, who is very obviously on bad terms with all the accused, makes several things perfectly clear. One is that none of the Pallars was in the service of accused No. 1; another that, if any Pallars were present, they would not have been helping the Goundens, but opposing them. Some time ago the wife of P. W. No. 16's first cousin P. W. No. 17 eloped with a Pallar. She was outcasted and the Goundens dismissed all the Pallars who were working for them. That being so, it is most unlikely that any Pallar would have come to help accused No. 1. When P. W. No. 10 made his complaint to the Police, he mentioned P. W. No. 16 as the man who could name all the accused Goundens as well as Pallars. Apparently he had arranged with the witness that he should give evidence against his enemies the Goundens and implicate the Pallars whom he and P. W. No. 17 hated. It seems to me practically certain that the Pallar accused have been falsely implicated. With that finding goes another large part of the story. It is unnecessary to say any more. It is quite likely that something improper has been done in relation to Ex. E, but I do not believe the story of extortion told by P. W. No. 10 and his witnesses. I would accept the reference, set aside the verdict and acquit the accused.

Pandalai, J.—I think the verdict should be set aside and the accused acquitted on the ground that the story of dacoity told about the preparation and handing over of the receipt Ex. E is so unreasonable that no Jury should have accepted it. An examination of the document shows that it was written in a firm hand in the writer's usual style with nothing to show that it was not prepared at leisure and at ease. No man of prudence will accept the story that it was prepared at midday while the writer was exposed to the sun in a field as a result of violence or threat of violence. But in my opinion the accused had only themselves to thank for the view the Jury took of their conduct. They asked the Jury to accept the view that the receipt was prepared in the complainant's village in Telungaratti on 24th July and obtained by accused No. 1 on payment to P. W. No. 10 Govindasami Chetty of Rs. 2,500 in cash. This was, if possible, still more absurd than the story of the dacoity. I believe myself that the receipt at Villaiparapatti the village of accused No. 1 on 9th August, P. W. No. 10 having been lured there on promise of payment and that it was obtained from P. W. No. 10 by the accused by some trickery and without paying money. Prosecution Witness No. 10 and his companions thus outwitted in a village where they could get no help, went away and sent for P. W. No. 10's father and as a result of consultation lodged a case of dacoity. We are not concerned with the effect of the receipt in the Civil Court where the petition for satisfaction of the decree filed by the accused is pending. But I agree that the accused should be acquitted.

I guard myself against saying anything to cast doubt on the reasoning or result of the decision in Veerappa Goundan v. Emperor (1) not only because it is binding on this Bench and I have to follow and apply it even if I did not agree with it, but also because I see no reason to doubt its soundness. Two propositions are involved in that decision. The first, which is assumed for the purpose of the decision, is that a reference should be made by a Sessions Judge under s. 307 only in cases where in his view the verdict of the Jury is perverse, unreasonable or altogether second, which is expressly decided, is that on a reference under s. 307, High Court will not retry the case as if there had been no trial but will confine itself to the question whether the Judge's opinion of the verdict, i. e., that it was perverse or unreasonable or altogether against the weight of evidence is correct. If it was correct the Jury's verdict will be set aside but if it was not, the verdict will stand even if it be one which the Court if it had to decide the case for itself in the first instance will not arrive at. In short, the Jury's verdict will be given by the High Court the same weight (the "due weight" spoken of in s. 307) which the trying Judge should have given to it, and the Judge's opinion will be given by the High Court the weight (the "due weight" spoken of in s. 307) which it should have as that of the presiding officer of the Court to whom is entrusted the duty of seeing that justice does not suffer by the forms of law. In other words the High Court will give to each branch of the Court the weight which is due to it when acting within its own function and will see that neither encroaches on the function of the other. The Jury's verdict will be upheld within the possible differences of opinion of reasonable men on the same evidence, but not beyond. The Judge's disagreement with the Jury will be affirmed only when it is based on the Jury having given a verdict which, being perverse, unreasonable or against the weight of the evidence, should not have been given. Understood in this way I can see nothing in Veerappa Goundan v. Emperor (1) which does violence to the language of s. 307 nor anything which is either inconvenient or unsuitable to Indian conditions.

I understand my learned brother as not disapproving of the limit necessarily set on the powers of the Sessions Judge's reference by the requirement that he ought not to refer a case unless he considers the verdict manifestly wrong nor on the powers of the High Court by the requirement that it is confined to considering whether the opinion of the Judge as to verdict being manifestly wrong, is supported by the evidence. If so, I respectfully think that the discretion of this Court in disposing of these references is by no means unlimited and that is all the Full Bench decision means. I agree to the order proposed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 112—Presumption of legitimacy, nature of—Proof of access, effect of—'Access', meaning of.

Under s. 112, Evidence Act, when a child is born during lawful wedlock there is a presumption to start with in favour of legitimacy; in other words, that the husband had intercourse with the wife at the time when the child must have been conceived. That presumption is a rebuttable one and may be rebutted by showing non-access; but once access of, or intercourse by, the husband is proved, no evidence will be allowed to show that the child is not the child of the husband. [p. 37, col. 2; p. 38, col. 1.]

(Case-law discussed.)

The word 'access' in s. 112 means sexual intercourse not mere opportunity of access. [p. 37, col. 1.]

Second Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Vellore, in A. S. No. 36 of 1926

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Ayyar and B. C. Seshachala Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. S. Sivakaminathan and C. Gopalan, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal raises a question regarding the construction of s. 112, Evidence Act.

Defendant No. 8 is the wife of one Kuppathai Mudali and defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are her sons. The plaintiff disputes their legitimacy alleging that defendant No. 8 was living in adultery. The point to be decided is, whether defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are the legitimate sons of Kuppathai. The findings of fact which, this being a second appeal, I must accept, are that Kuppathai married defendant No. 8 about 1876, but discarded her in 1881 owing to some suspicion about her chastity, that he then married a second wife and lived at a place called Govindanpadi, whereas defendant No. 8 left for Kilachur, a village within two miles of that place. There she was residing and the Subordinate Judge thinks that she was having immoral relations with some person. Defendant No. 3 was born in 1891 and defendant No. 4 in 1898. It is not found that Kuppathai did not have opportunities of access to his first wife; on the contrary, the evidence seems to indicate that he had them. In regard to the period to which reference must be had, the evidence no doubt is very vague; but Kuppathai in 1902 purchased for her some property and in 1905 executed a document settling some lands on her and on her children. In this Kuppathai describes the boys as the sons of defendant No. 8. I may remark in passing that the learned Subordinate Judge thinks that these words strongly support the contention that the children are illegitimate. There are other passages on which the Judge relies, to which I need not refer. Later in the same year, and again in 1906, Kuppathai bought for her some more property. The evidence also shows that he allowed the boys to visit him and took some kind of interest in them, though what precisely its nature was it is difficult to say. In 1909 he executed a writing repudiating the children as illegitimate. That was attested by several persons including one Rasappa, a brother of defendant No. 8. This man has not been cited as a witness although defendant No. 8 admits that they have been on friendly terms. What led to this repudiation the evidence does not clearly show; but it is suggested that it was some members of his caste that induced Kuppathai to take this step. This was followed in 1915 by a deed which he executed revoking the settlement of 1905. Then there was an open quarrel which led to various proceedings in Courts, where the legitimacy of the boys was asserted by the one side and disputed by the other. I have forgotten to mention that in 1909, about the time when Kuppathai repudiated the boys, he married a third wife. He having died in 1918, his second and third wives sold a part of his estate to the plaintiff, who thereupon has brought the suit. It is in this way that the question of the legitimacy of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 has been raised. The Subordinate Judge, differing from the trial Court, has decided the point against them. Their Counsel has not succeeded in showing that his findings, so far as they are questions of fact, can be attacked in second appeal. I have referred in this judgment to those facts alone which bear on the question, whether Kuppathai had opportunities of access to his wife or not. That being the important point with which I have to deal, as I shall show presently, I do not propose to refer to the other facts on which the Subordinate Judge relies. The question, as I have said, is what is the effect of s. 112, Evidence Act?

According to that section the fact that a child was born in lawful wedlock is 'conclusive proof' that it is the legitimate son of its mother's husband. If the section had stopped there, the presumption would be an irrebuttable one, what is termed presumptiones juris et de jure. But the section does not end there, for then follows a clause beginning with the word "unless" which reads thus:

"Unless it can be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when he could have been begotten."

The effect of the section taken with that clause therefore is that the presumption is not an irrebuttable one, though the words "conclusive proof" (defined in s. 4) are used. The section itself enacts how that presumption can be rebutted. It can yield only to positive proof of want of access—whatever the word "access" may mean. If that access is proved, nothing further remains; the presumption rebuttable in the first instance becomes at once irrebuttable. This is the effect of s. 112. That there are two distinct presumptions, differing in kind from each other, is sometimes lost sight of, and that has led to some confusion. With these remarks, let me now turn to the meaning of the word "access." If that means "opportunity of access" the plaintiff must fail, for Kuppathai, I have said, had such opportunity. If, on the other hand, it means sexual intercourse, I am afraid I cannot disturb the Subordinate Judge's finding in Second Appeal. In my opinion, there can be no possible doubt on the authorities that the word means sexual intercourse. That was declared after great deliberation to be the law in the Banbury Peerage case (1). It was there pointedly stated that access in this connexion means sexual intercourse and nothing short of it. Now the learned Judges go so far as to use the word "access" in the sense of sexual intercourse to distinguish it from non-access or non-generating access. The expression "opportunities of access," is also found used by the Judges as something different from actual intercourse. The effect of the Banbury Peerage case (1), may be thus summed up. The presumption of legitimacy arises from the birth of a child during wedlock, but that presumption may be rebutted by evidence that such access did not take place between the husband and the wife as by the laws of nature it is necessary, for the man to be in fact the father of the child. It is not the opportunity of access that matters, but sexual intercourse. The presumption in favour of legitimacy is also thus expressed:

"Where a child is born in lawful wedlock sexual intercourse is presumed to have taken place between husband and the wife."

This presumption, in whatever way it may be stated, is, as pointed out, a rebuttable presumption, a presumption that may be rebutted by counter evidence showing non-access.

Then comes the question, Where does the other presumption to which I have referred to, presumptiones juris et de jure come in? Now let us turn to the next leading case on the point, Morris v. Davies (2). The Lord Chancellor (in the House of Lords), after stating that the presumption that in the case of husband and wife, sexual intercourse took place can be rebutted, goes on to observe:

"If sexual intercourse be proved, that is, if the Jury or the Judge trying the question of fact be satisfied that sexual intercourse took place between husband and the wife at the time of the child being conceived, the law will not permit an enquiry whether the husband or some other man was more likely to be the father of the child."

This is the point of distinction. If access or sexual intercourse is proved, the presumption to be drawn becomes an irrebuttable one. The point is brought out very clearly in the following passage from the judgment of Swift, J.

"Any woman may, and some do, have sexual intercourse with more than one man in the course of a law hours, and if a woman has within the period during which conception must have taken place had connexion with more than one man * * * the law presumes that if one of those men is her husband, the child is his * * * However many men she has had connexion with nothing can bastardize the child unless non-access of or non-intercourse by the husband can be proved; Warren v. Warren (3), at page 112."

In the words of Alderson, B [in Cope v. Cope (4)] the law will not, under such circumstances, allow the balance of the evidence as to who is most likely to have been the father. In short, there is a presumption to start with in favour of legitimacy; in other words, that the husband had intercourse with the wife at the time when the child must have been conceived. That presumption is a rebuttable one and may be rebutted by showing non-access; but once access of or intercourse by, the husband is proved, no evidence will be allowed to show that the child is not the child of the husband. The circumstance that the wife had intercourse with several at that time makes no difference. It is confounding these two presumptions, when the law is being stated, that leads to difficulty; but as regards what the law on the point is, there can be, as I have said, no doubt.

Then the further question arises: What is the kind of evidence that is required to rebut the presumption of legitimacy, in other words, the presumption that the husband had intercourse with the wife, which should have made him the father of the child? That presumption is a very strong one, but the strength of it would vary with the circumstances of each case. The Aylesford Peerage case (5) furnishes a striking instance, where it was held that the presumption of legitimacy was rebutted. The facts are, the lady eloped in 1876 and a deed of separation was executed in 1877. From the time of the elopement till the birth of the child in 1881, the mother lived in a state of adultery with Lord Blanford. The husband and the wife, no doubt, were at the same time, during the critical period when the child might have been conceived, at different houses in London. In those circumstances the question was raised, whether the presumption was rebutted. It was answered in the affirmative. Lord Blackburn goes so far as to say that although the marriage tie remained undissolved, the facts stated having been found, no presumption can arise, that the husband had cohabited with his wife. But it seems to me, having regard to s. 112, Evidence Act, it is unnecessary to go so far. The presumption must be drawn under that section, though, on the facts proved, it may become attenuated. In Hitherington v. Hitherington (6), where an order was made under s. 4, Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, authorizing a wife to refuse to cohabit with her husband, it was held that from the time of such an order:

"all the presumption which exists in the case of married persons as to access and the legitimacy of children is reversed."

Again, I may point out that it is not necessary for us to go so far. The case shows, that while normally the presumption is strong, in certain cases it is not quite so strong. The last mentioned case is approved in Andrews v. Andrews (7). In the case to which I have referred, Morris v. Davies (2), the husband and wife agreed to separate and afterwards lived apart, but within such distance as afforded them opportunities of sexual intercourse. On the facts, it was held that the presumption of law in favour of the legitimacy of a child begotten and born of the wife during the separation, was rebutted. It is unnecessary to multiply cases. The short question is: Has the learned Judge correctly applied these principles? He is wrong in stating that there was judicial separation between Kuppethai and his wife. Such a conception is foreign to the Hindu Law. The statement, that in the case of children born after such separation, there is no presumption that they are legitimate, is, as I have said, also open to exception. But have these errors vitiated his judgment? In the weight of the evidence, he has not been influenced by his somewhat inaccurate statement of the rule of presumption. Indeed, the case was a difficult one to try, but all the facts were considered by the Judge. It may be, on the evidence, another Judge may come to a different conclusion, but that is no reason why I should disturb the finding in second appeal.

The appeal as well as the cross appeal are dismissed with costs.

SARRAJU CHENCHU SUBBAIAH—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895), ss. 13, 21, scope of—Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act (II of 1894), ss. 10, 11, scope of—Karnam—Appointment by proprietor—Revenue Officer cancelling such appointment and making new one—Suit for declaration that order of Revenue Officer is ultra vires, competency of—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of.

Section 21 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act takes away the jurisdiction of the Civil Court only in cases in which the jurisdiction is conferred on the Revenue Courts by s. 13 of the Act. Where the case of the plaintiff is that he has been validly appointed as karnam by the proprietor, that he is holding the office and discharging its duties and that the appointment of the defendant by the Revenue Divisional Officer in cancellation of his own appointment is null and void, the suit is cognisable by the Civil Court. Krishnaswami Naidu v. Akkulammal (1), Muvvula Seetham Naidu v. Doddi Rami Naidu (2) and Kodandaramayya v. Ramalingayya (3), referred to.

Whether the plaintiff is the next heir in order of succession or not, if he is in possession of the office and is discharging its duties, there is sufficient legal character within the meaning of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, to sustain an action for declaration that he was validly appointed Karnam and that cancellation of his appointment by the Revenue Officer concerned is null and void. Kodandaramayya v. Ramalingayya (3), referred to. [p. 40, col. 1.]

Section 11 (2) Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act confers powers on the Divisional Officer to appoint another individual to the office in cases where a proprietor who has the right to appoint omits to do so within the statutory period or if the person again appointed by the proprietor is also disqualified under s. 10 (1). Where action is taken by the Revenue Officer under s. 11 (1) the right of appointment is conferred on the Revenue Divisional Officer only in respect of cases where the nominee of the proprietor is disqualified under s. 10 (1) but does not extend to cases where the nominee is not in fact the nearer heir to the last holder of the office, that is, the cases where the proprietor's appointment contravenes the provisions of s. 10 (2). Where the plaintiff does not suffer from any of the heads of disqualifications referred to in s. 10 (1) the Divisional Revenue Officer has no jurisdiction to set aside the order of the proprietor. Krishnaswami Naidu v. Akkulammal (1), referred to. [p. 41, col. 2.]

Where the Divisional Officer makes an appointment after taking action under s. 11 sub-s. (1), the sub-section should be understood as confining the right of appeal to cases where the appointment is disallowed by the Revenue Divisional Officer on the ground that the proprietor has contravened the provisions of s. 10 (1). This sub-section does not bar a suit by an aggrieved party from the order of the Divisional Officer's order. [p. 41, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Nellore, in A. S. No. 131 of 1926 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kavali, in O. S. No. 454 of 1925.

Mr. B. Somayya for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The defendant is the appellant. This second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff for a declaration that the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer of Kavali dated 18th May 1925 appointing the defendant as karnam of Somavarappadu is ultra vires and does not bind him.

On a vacancy arising in the office of karnam in the proprietary village of Somavarappadu, the proprietor appointed the plaintiff to the office by his order dated 9th December, 1924 and sent notice of the appointment as required by the Act (Act II of 1894) to the Revenue Divisional Officer, Kavali. On the ground that he is a nearer heir the defendant, a minor by his guardian, applied to the Revenue Divisional Officer praying that he should be appointed as the karnam. On 18th May 1925 the Revenue Divisional Officer disallowed the appointment of the plaintiff as karnam holding that the defendant was the next heir to the office and directed the registration of his name as heir to the last holder of the office.

The plaintiff's case is that the order of Revenue Divisional Officer is illegal and ultra vires and he prays for its cancellation.

The defendant's case is (1) that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit by reason of the provisions of s. 21 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, (Act III of 1895), and the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act, (Act II of 1894); (2) that a suit of this nature is barred by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act; (3) that even according to the pedigree sent by the proprietor to the Revenue Divisional Officer he, the defendant, is the next heir to the office in question and not the plaintiff; and that the Revenue Divisional Officer has on this ground jurisdiction to set aside the proprietor's order appointing the plaintiff who is not the next heir to the office; and (4) that the plaintiff's only right is to prefer an appeal under s. 11 (3) of Act II of 1894 against the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer.

The Madras Act of 1894 admittedly applies to the office of the karnam in question and the provisions of the Madras Act III of 1895 also apply to it by reason of s. 3 (1) of that Act. Section 21 of Act III of 1895 provides that "no Civil Court shall have authority to take into consideration or decide any claim to succeed to any of the offices specified in s. 3". The office in question being an office specified in s. 3, the question is whether the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Section 13 (1) of the same Act provides that "any person may sue before the Collector for any of the village offices specified in s. 3.....", on the ground that he is entitled, under sub s. 2 or 3 of s. 10 of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act, Act II of 1894, to hold such office subject to certain provisions. Section 10 of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act, Act II of 1894, lays down certain rules to be observed by the proprietor in making the appointment. It contains three sub-sections; the 1st subsection sets out the qualifications to be possessed by the person to be appointed; the 2nd sub-section, the rule of succession to be followed and the 3rd sub section, the rule to be followed in case the next heir is not qualified or in case there is no heir at all. It has been held in a series of decisions in this Court, Krishnaswami Naidu v. Akkulammal (1), Muvvula Seetham Naidu v. Doddi Rami Naidu (2) and Kodandaramayya v. Ramalingayya (3), that s. 2 of Act III of 1895 takes away the jurisdiction of the Civil Court only in cases in which the jurisdiction is conferred on the Revenue Courts by s. 13 of the Act. The correctness of this proposition of law is not challenged by the learned Advocate for the appellant. What he argues is that the plaintiff's present suit, though the plaint is cleverly worded to take it out of the scope of s. 13, is substantially a suit for the village office specified in s. 3 on the ground that he is entitled to it under sub-s. 2 of s. 10 of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act and so, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to determine it. I have read the plaint carefully and I cannot agree with this contention. The plaintiff does not bring his suit for the office on the ground that he is entitled under sub s. 2 or 3 of s. 10 of Act II of 1894 to the office in question. His case is that he has been validly appointed as karnam by the proprietor, that he is holding the office and discharging its duties and that the appointment of the defendant by the Revenue Divisional Officer in cancellation of his own appointment is null and void. He does not ask for a declaration that he is the heir to the office in question or for restoration to his appointment as karnam. "His position apparently is", as pointed out by the learned District Munsif "that if the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer is held to be illegal and ultra vires and set aside, his appointment as karnam by the proprietor will stand good." In my opinion a suit of this nature does not obviously fall within s. 13 of Act III of 1895 and, therefore, it appears to me that s. 21 of that Act is not a bar to the maintainability of the suit.

The second question is whether a suit for a declaration that the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer is ultra vires and does not bind the plaintiff, is barred by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. It is argued that, as according to the genealogical tree furnished by the proprietor himself the defendant and not the plaintiff is the next heir to the last holder of the office of karnam, the plaintiff is not entitled to the office under sub-s. 2 of s. 10 and, therefore, the plaintiff has no legal character sufficient to sustain the action and the suit for the declaration, therefore, should have been dismissed by both the lower Courts. The argument was not put in this form in the lower Courts. What was argued there was that a suit of this nature for a declaration, that the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer appointing the defendant karnam is ultra vires, is not maintainable and the lower Courts rightly overruled the objection pointing out that according to the decision of the Privy Council in Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State for India in Council (4) the suit is "in substance one to have the true construction of a Statute declared and to have an act done in contravention of a statute rightly understood, pronounced void and of no effect". It was not argued in the lower Courts that he has no title to maintain the suit. It is now argued that the decision in Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State for India in Council (4) is inapplicable as the plaintiff in that case had obviously title to institute the suit which the plaintiff in this case, does not have. Whether the plaintiff is the next heir in the order of succession or not, it is clear that he is now in possession of the office and is discharging its duties. This by itself will give him sufficient title to sustain the action. But apart from it, if the Revenue Divisional Officer had no jurisdiction to pass the order cancelling the plaintiff's appointment, then his present title to the office as nominee of the proprietor, cannot be questioned. The substantial question is, therefore, whether the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer which is called into question is ultra vires and not binding on the plaintiff and this is the third point for decision.

When the office of karnam falls vacant in a village in a proprietary estate, s. 9 of Act II of 1894 makes it obligatory on the proprietor of the village to appoint a person to the vacant office and send notice of the appointment in writing to the Divisional Officer in charge of the division.

(4) 22 M. 270; 26 I. A. 16; 7 Sar. 459; 3 C. W. N. 161 (P. C.).

Section 10, as I have already pointed out, lays down certain rules to be observed by the proprietor in making appointments. Sub-section 1 of that section enumerates the several disqualifications to the office. It states that "(1) no person shall be eligible for appointment to any village-office who (a) is not of the male sex; (b) has not attained the age of majority; (c) is not physically and not mentally capable of discharging the duties of the office; (d) has not qualified according to the educational test prescribed for the office in question by the Board of Revenue by rules made under s. 32; and (e) has been convicted by a Criminal Court of any offence which, in the opinion of the Revenue Officer in charge of the division or of the District Collector, disqualifies him for holding the office." Sub-section 2 says "the succession to all hereditary village offices shall devolve on a single heir according to the general custom and rule of primogeniture governing succession to impartible zemindaris in Southern India." In the present case it will be remembered that the Divisional Officer set aside the appointment of the plaintiff by the proprietor on the ground that the appointment contravened the rule of succession mentioned in sub-s. 2 of s. 10. This was done under s. 11. Sub-section 1 of s. 11 confers powers on the Revenue Divisional Officer to record his objections to the appointment made by the proprietor and call on him to appoint another person. This sub-section is as follows:—

"If the Revenue Officer to whom notice of appointment is sent under s. 9 considers the person appointed to be qualified under sub-s. 1 of the preceding section, he may, at any time within three months from the date of the receipt by him of the said notice of appointment, and, in cases falling under cls. (c) and (e) in sub-s. 1 of s. 10, after giving notice to the parties concerned and making enquiry, record his objections and call upon the proprietor to appoint another person, and the proprietor shall thereupon do so and send notice of such new appointment to the said Revenue Officer within six weeks after such requisition....."

(It may be observed in passing that the word 'qualified' appearing in sub s. 1 of s. 11 in the Government publication of the Act is apparently a mistake for the word 'disqualified'. Sub-section 2 states in certain cases the Divisional Officer may himself make the appointment. Stated generally, this sub-section confers powers on the Divisional Officer to appoint another individual to the office in cases where a proprietor who has the right to appoint omits to do so within the statutory period or if the person again appointed by the proprietor is also disqualified under sub-s. 1 of s. 10. Where action is taken by the Revenue Officer under sub s. 1 of s. 11, it appears to me that the right of appointment is conferred on the Revenue Divisional Officer only in respect of cases where the nominee of the proprietor is disqualified under sub-s. 1 of s. 10, but does not extend to cases where the nominee is not in fact the nearer heir to the last holder of the office, that is, the cases where the proprietor's appointment contravenes the provisions of sub s 2 of s. 10. This appears to be clear from the language of the sub-section. It is admitted on all hands that the plaintiff does not suffer from any of the heads of disqualifications referred to in sub-s. 1 of s. 10. In my opinion the Divisional Officer, therefore, had no jurisdiction to set aside the order of the proprietor and his order is not warranted by the powers conferred on him by the Statute. The observations of Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in Krishnaswami Naidu v. Akkulammal (1) lend support to this view of the jurisdiction of the Divisional Officer to set aside the appointment by a proprietor in a case like the present one.

The last question is whether the plaintiff is precluded from instituting the suit as he is given the right under sub s. 3 of s. 11 of appeal to the District Collector against the Divisional Officer's order. This sub-section runs as follows:

"Whenever an appointment is disallowed under this section, an appeal shall lie to the District Collector within one month, or, if the Officer disallowing the appointment is the District Collector an appeal shall lie to the Board of Revenue within three months."

Where the Divisional Officer makes an appointment after taking action under sub s. 1 of s. 11, I think this sub-section should be understood as confining the right of appeal to cases where the proprietor's appointment is disallowed by the Revenue Divisional Officer on the ground that the proprietor has contravened the provisions of sub-s. 1 of s. 10. If so understood, it is clear that the plaintiff has no right of appeal in the present case. Even if the sub section is to be understood as giving the plaintiff a right of appeal in all cases against the Divisional Officer's order it does not say that the aggrieved party has no right of suit.

DASARI VENKATACHARYULU—DEFENDANT—PETITIONERversusMANCHALA YESUBU AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Inherent powers of Court—Striking off defence on failure to pay batta.

In a suit the plaintiff applied for the appointment of a receiver in respect of some standing crops. The Court however directed one of the defendants to furnish security of Rs. 100 and take away the crops. He furnished a security bond and the Court ordered the testing of the sufficiency of the bond by issuing a warrant to an amin to investigate the matter. For this issue of process batta had to be paid by the defendant which he did not. Court then ordered him to pay cash into Court and warned him that in case of default his defence would be struck off. The defendant failed to comply with this order with the result that the Court struck off his defence:

Held, that though there was no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for striking off the defence under the circumstances mentioned above, it was competent to the Court to do so under its inherent powers under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 42, col. 2; p. 43, col. 1.]

Petitions under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the District Munsif, Gudivade, dated the 23rd January, 1930, and 4th March, 1930, and made in O. M. P. No. 3486 of 1929, in O. S. No. 395 of 1929, and in O. S. No. 395 of 1929 respectively.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Petitioner.

Judgment—These revision petitions raise a somewhat novel point for determination. The petitioner is the 3rd defendant in the suit. It appears that the plaintiffs applied for the appointment of a Receiver in respect of some standing crops in the suit land. In connection with that application the Court passed an order directing the 3rd defendant to furnish security for Rs. 100. On his furnishing such security he could appropriate the crops. No Receiver was actually appointed. That being so, it was the duty of the 3rd defendant to furnish the required security which alone would entitle him to cut and carry away the crops. In pursuance of the order of the Court he put in a security bond into Court. The Court passed an order on 6th December, 1929, to have the sufficiency of the security tested. Usually a warrant will be issued to an Amin of the Court to make an investigation as to the adequacy of the security offered. For this purpose batta had to be paid for the issue of a process. There is no doubt that the person bound to pay the batta was the 3rd defendant, inasmuch as it was his duty to furnish the security to the satisfaction of the Court. Unless the security tendered by him is accepted by the Court it will be of no avail. It was not, therefore the duty of the plaintiffs to have paid the batta for the testing of the security tendered by the 3rd defendant. Default in the payment of the batta was doubtless on the part of the 3rd defendant. The security tendered by him not having been tested, the Court was not in a position to accept it. In these circumstances the learned District Munsif treated the case as one of non compliance with the order of the Court directing security to be furnished and, therefore, passed an order directing the 3rd defendant to deposit into Court a sum of Rs. 100 within 15 days. A warning was also given at the same time that, if such deposit be not made, his defence would be struck off. In spite of this stringent order, the 3rd defendant failed to make the deposit and consequently his defence was struck off by the Court on 4th March, 1930. Against these orders the 3rd defendant has filed the revision petitions.

There is no express provision in the Code of Civil Procedure which would cover a case of this kind. Rule 21 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, enables the Court to strike off the defence if default is made in the manner mentioned in that rule. Rule 16 of O. VI, r. 20 of O. XVI and r. 10 of O. VIII contain some provisions for punishing a party for default in a particular manner. The present case can only be brought under s. 151 of the Code which deals with the inherent power of the Court to pass such orders as may be necessary in the ends of justice, or to prevent the abuse of the process of Court. In this case the 3rd defendant not only made default in the payment of batta but failed to obey the further order of the Court directing him to deposit the sum of Rs. 100, he having failed to furnish the required security. Without fulfilling that condition he had no right to cut and carry away the crops. There was justification for the Court to treat the conduct of the 3rd defendant as something amounting to a contempt of Court. Any penalty which the Court thinks fit to impose on the 3rd defendant for such wilful default or disobedience should be deemed to be a step taken by the Court in the exercise of the inherent powers vested in it by s. 151, Civil Procedure Code. The decisions in Gauri Shankar v. Manki Kunwar (1) and East Indian Railway Company v. Jit Mal Kallu Mal (2) are cases which have a bearing on the present case by way of analogy. The striking off of the defence of the 3rd defendant in this case would be within the jurisdiction of the Court in the exercise of its inherent powers under s. 151. There is no case directly applicable to the facts of the present case; but still it seems to me that the order passed by the lower Court in the circumstances of this case is not without justification and, therefore, I see no proper grounds to interfere with it in revision. I may also observe that the striking off of the defence is not the only order which the Court can pass by reason of the 3rd defendant's default or disobedience. All that I can say is that this is one of the orders which the Court would be entitled to make in order to see that the ends of justice are satisfied or that the process of Court is not abused. These Civil Revision Petitions are, therefore, dismissed.

Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Mayavaram, dated the 25th October, 1928, in O S No 10 of 1925.

Messrs S. Varadachariar and R. Rajagopala Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General, Messrs. S. Jagadisa Ayyar, S. Nagaraja Ayyar and N. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They sued for a declaration that a mortgage (Ex. 1) executed by defendant No. 3, a Hindu widow, of her husband's land in favour of defendant No 1 was void as against them, the husband's reversionary heirs. The husband died in 1896. In 1897 the widow executed a mortgage Ex. 6 f in favour of one Rangasami who was the father in law of defendant No. 2. This was for securing a loan of Rs. 2,000 and the instrument recites that the money was required to discharge debts due by her deceased husband. It appears that the widow later sold some plots of land from time to time and that the sale proceeds were used to reduce the amount of the mortgage debt due to Rangasami. Subsequently, the mortgagee's rights became vested in defendant No. 2, who brought a suit upon the mortgage against the widow. On 17th January, 1913, defendant No. 2 obtained ex parte a preliminary decree for the recovery of Rs 2,373 12 0 then due, together with interest at 9 per cent. per annum on Rs 1,500, the balance of principal due from date of plaint to 17th July, 1913, the date fixed for payment, and with further interest at 6 per cent. on the whole amount from 17th July, 1913, until payment. It was for the purpose of discharging the decree amount, which by that time had swollen to Rs. 2,845, that on 9th September, 1914, the widow executed Ex. 1, the suit mortgage in favour of defendant No. 3.

The plaintiffs impeach this mortgage upon two grounds. First, they say it is a fictitious transaction, part of a scheme of the widow and her mother-in-law to transfer the husband's lands to the family of defendant No. 2 in fraud of the reversionary heirs. We do not think that the evidence sustains this allegation. The plaint avers nothing more in support of it than that defendant No 1 is a cousin of defendant No. 2's husband and was under obligations to Rangasami, defendant No. 2's father-in-law, who had looked after defendant No. 1 during his minority. The defendant No. 1 gave evidence at the trial and he has deposed that, in pursuance of his contract under Ex. 1 he did pay off the decree debt due to defendant No. 2; that he did not do this by a cash payment, but by adjusting this debt against a debt due by defendant No. 2 to him and his family. His story is corroborated by documentary evidence. Exhibit 2 is a pro-note dated 8th April, 1916, given by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 for a loan of Rs. 8,600. Exhibit 3 is a receipt, given on the same date by defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 1 for payment of Rs. 3,263-13-0, which is stated to be the principal and interest up to date in respect of the amount due by defendant No. 3 under the mortgage decree. Defendant No. 2 has accepted the genuineness of her signature to this document, but she has no recollection of the circumstances in which she signed it, as she says her husband managed all business and money transactions. Exhibit 2 bears an endorsement (Ex. 2-a) dated 11th February, 1918, that the note had been discharged. A number of other documents Exs. 4, 5 and 8 support defendant No. 1's story that the mutual debts of defendant No. 1's and defendant No. 2's family were adjusted. The learned Subordinate Judge has discovered no reason for doubting the genuineness of these documents or of the transactions which they evidence. None is apparent to us. In fact, the evidence with regard to them is all one way.

The plaintiff's second ground is that the mortgage Ex. 1 stands in no better position than the mortgage Ex 6-f and that if it can be shown that the earlier mortgage and the decree upon it were attributable to the widow's improvidence in alienating property to pay debts which could and ought to have been discharged, from income in her hands, at least with regard to the interest, the reversioners would not be bound thereby. Two issues were framed in the lower Court viz.:

"(1) Was the mortgage, Ex. 6-f binding upon the husband's estate and (2) were the plaintiffs entitled to question the validity of the decree in respect of that mortgage."

It is indisputable that the plaintiff's right to sue for a declaration that the mortgage (Ex. 6-f) is not binding or that the decree is not binding would be barred by limitation. But the argument is that lapse of time will not make that binding on the estate which was not binding before. We think however that the learned Sub-Judge was right in striking out these issues. To allow the plaintiffs now to open the question of the binding character of the previous alienation and the decree upon it would, in effect, remove the bar which the Limitation Act has placed in their way. In other words, the plaintiffs cannot be allowed to do indirectly what they cannot do directly. That was the view expressed by a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Khiali Ram v. Gulab Khan (1), and we agree with it. In that case, plaintiffs, reversioners of the husband sought to avoid the bar of limitation to a suit to declare the widow's alienation void, by showing that the mortgage executed by her husband (in discharge of which his widow had sold the property to the mortgagee) was a fictitious transaction; and it was ruled that they could not do this. The case reported as Jaggi v. Prithi Pal (2), proceeds on the same principle, and so too Karri Adeyya v. Tammulamoddi Govindu (3), decided by one of us.

The plaintiffs, therefore, have to fall back on their case that defendant No. 1 cannot be regarded as a bona fide lender. Their allegation is that connected as he was with the families of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 he must have been aware of the circumstance that led to the mortgage Ex. 1 and that the widow was allowing interest to accumulate without any effort to keep it down out of her income. The principle has been laid down that a widow is not bound to discharge her husband's debts out of the income of his estate; but that she is bound to keep down the interest on her husband's debts and is only entitled to enjoy the net income from her husband's property. But an exception is recognized in favour of the alienee. If there was actual pressure at the time of the alienation and the widow had then no funds available for the discharge of the debt, or the alienee, after reasonable inquiry, bona fide believed that the alienation was necessary, he will be protected:

see 18 Ind. Cas. 953 [Boddu Jaggayya v. Goli Appala Raju (4)] and 24 Ind. Cas. 534 [S. Appalaswamy v. S. Venkanna (5)]. In the present case it has been proved that the net income available to the widow from her husband's lands was about Rs. 200 per annum, and that the income had only become available from the date of the compromise of the widow's suit in January, 1912. By this compromise she recovered the control and enjoyment of her husband's lands which since his death had hitherto been in the management of her mother-in-law. So that at the date when she executed the mortgage (Ex. 1) there was not more than between Rs. 640 to Rs. 700 at the widow's disposal to meet a debt of Rs. 2,845 due under the decree. There is evidence, which has been accepted by the lower Court, that the widow was being pressed to discharge the debt, and it is apparent that if she did not, the property was liable to be brought to sale in execution of the decree. We think, therefore, that defendant No. 1's mortgage is justified.

Defendant No. 1 has filed cross-objections to the reduction made by the learned Sub-Judge in the rate of interest fixed by the mortgage instrument. He has held that the provision for payment of compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum from 9th September, 1916, with annual rests, is onerous and penal and he has awarded interest at $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per mensem on the arrears of interest till 9th September, 1916, and compound interest at the same rate with annual rests afterwards. The question of the reasonableness of a particular rate of interest was discussed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Sunder Mull v. Satya Kinder Sahana (6). There it was stated that the whole conditions and terms of the lending must be considered together. The learned Sub-Judge has heard evidence as to the ordinary rate of interest in the locality, and he has taken into consideration the value of the security offered by the widow, which was ample, as well as the widow's need for money, which was pressing. In these circumstances we are not prepared to interfere in a matter to which the Sub-Judge has obviously given much care and which he was well fitted to decide.

We think however that the proper course is to declare in the decree that that portion of the debt comprising the disallowed interest is not binding on the estate and in other respects that the suit is dismissed.

With this modification the appeal and the cross objections will be dismissed with costs.

respondent and to review or set aside certain interlocutory orders passed in the same appeal. The appeal was from a judgment of Waller, J., dated the 15th October, 1929, annulling the adjudication of the 2nd respondent and directing the appellant to pay the 1st respondent's costs. It was admitted on the 1st September, 1930, and on the 8th November the 1st respondent applied for a direction that the appellant should furnish security for her costs in the appeal. The application was allowed ex parte on the 19th December, no one appearing on behalf of the appellant, who was directed to give the required security within one month from that date. On the last day of that period, the 19th January, 1931, an application was filed on behalf of the appellant (O. M. P. No. 548 of 1931) to rescind this order. That also was dismissed for default on the 10th February, again, no appearance being put in for the appellant. On the 13th February the appeal itself was dismissed under the provisions of sub r (2) of r. 10 of O. XLI, Civil Procedure Code. It is this last order which the appellant primarily attacks, and in order to do so he pleads that the order of the 10th February cannot be sustained because on the previous day, the 8th, he was adjudicated insolvent and, further, that he had sufficient cause for not appearing before the Court when the original order to give security was passed on the 19th December.

It is indisputable that before the Court can set aside the orders of the 10th February and 19th December, it must restore the appeal itself, as unless the appeal is pending there can be no revival of the interlocutory applications, which depend for their existence upon the pendency of the appeal. As regards the restoration of the appeal the appellant has been met by the defence of limitation. There has been some difference of judicial opinion as to whether an appeal dismissed under r. 10 (2) of O. XLI can be restored. It was held in Srinivasam Pillai v. Rukmani Ammal (1), to which one of us was a party, that this could be done and for the purpose of this case we propose to assume the power. It seems clear, however, and indeed has not been seriously disputed before us that such an application must be governed by Art. 168 of the Limitation Act, which provides for the re-admission of an appeal dismissed for want of prosecution. This article for appeals corresponds, we think, to Art. 163 for suits and the latter article expressly refers to dismissal for failure to furnish security for costs. It is reasonable to hold that such a failure comes under the general description of "want of prosecution". If this is correct the appellant had thirty days within which to apply and it is not disputed that his application was forty-one days out of time. It has been vaguely suggested that the adjudication of the appellant affected this question, but in what manner has not been explained. Insolvency is not a disability under the Limitation Act and there is no reason to hold that the Official Assignee would have had a longer time within which to apply than the insolvent himself. We think accordingly that this objection is fatal.

The insolvency of the appellant is also the ground upon which we are invited to set aside or review the order of the 10th February, which dismissed for default an application to set aside the ex parte order directing the appellant to furnish security for costs. The point taken is, in brief, that the appellant was disqualified by his adjudication from conducting the application and that the Court before dismissing it ought to have given the Official Assignee an opportunity to carry it on. The cases relied on by Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar for this position, Lekhraj Chuni Lal v. Sham Lal Narrondas (2), Kissen Gopal Karnani v. Suklal Karnani (3), Khunni Lal v. Rameshar (4) and Official Assignee of Rangoon v. Chidambaram Chetty (5), may be distinguished by the circumstance that in all of them the Court when it passed its order had been apprised of the insolvency. It had, therefore, an opportunity to apply the provisions of O. XXII, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code. In the present case this was not so. As has been stated, no appearance was put in and the Court was wholly unaware that the applicant had been adjudicated. On the materials before it, therefore, it had no alternative but to dismiss the application. It may be that in the peculiar circumstances of the case the Official Assignee could not reasonably have been expected to carry on the proceeding, but we have no information about that, and can only proceed upon the general principle that some one representing the applicant must have appeared to save the application from dismissal for default. We think, therefore, that no grounds have been shown for restoring this application, though we prefer to rest our decision upon other and perhaps more conclusive reasons. Even had the application been restored it is highly doubtful whether, the time within which to furnish security having expired, the Court was competent to take any action other than to dismiss the appeal. The mandatory character of O. XLI, r. 10 (2) has been stressed by the Privy Council in Sabitri Thakurain v. Savi (6), which was a closely analogous case. If security is not furnished within the time allowed, the Court is bound to reject the appeal. The petitioner might, of course, have applied for an extension of the time, or in some other way averted the operation of the order for security.

Even if it be assumed that the original order to give security could be re-opened by this means, we can find no ground whatever on the merits for holding that the appellant had sufficient reason for failure to put in an appearance. Admittedly his agent in Madras received notice of the application in good time, and he had no lack of professional advice because the applicant's affidavit states that his agent informed Mr. Venkatavaradachariar's clerk to request him to instruct Mr. K. Bhashyam Ayyangar to oppose it. Having done that, the agent, like his principal, was taken away from Madras by other interests. Mr. Venkatavaradachari, it is said, fell ill and his clerk was under the impression that the case would be taken by Mr. Bhashyam Ayyangar. The blame is thus thrown upon the clerk of the appellant's Advocate, who apparently had been left to arrange that this application should be opposed. We think it is clear that both the applicant and his agent had other matters to attend to and neglected to ensure that the application was opposed. In the circumstances they do not, we think, succeed in proving their own diligence by throwing the blame upon an Advocate's clerk, and we are unable upon the facts asserted to agree that there is any case for setting aside the ex parte order.

The result accordingly is that the application is dismissed with taxed costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 66 (2) (e)—Sale proclamation—Matters to be stated—Pending litigation.

The fact that the property to be sold is the subject-matter of a pending litigation is a thing material for a purchaser to know and can, therefore, be mentioned in the proclamation for sale. Venkataratnam v. Ranganayakamma (1), dissented from.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Nellore, dated the 15 September, 1927, and made in E. A. No. 191 of 1927, in O. S. No. 56 of 1925 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nellore.

Mr. P. Venkataramana Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondents

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an order refusing to set aside a sale in execution. Only two of the grounds urged before the lower Court are pressed here. The first is that bidders were scared away by a notification issued at the sale itself, warning them that the appellant's daughter's claim to the property had been dismissed and that she had filed a suit. Reliance is placed on some observations by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Venkataratnam v. Ranganayakamma (1), on the undesirability of issuing such warnings. With great respect we must express our dissent. Rule 66 (2) (e) of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, directs the Court to specify "every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge the nature and value of the property". In this instance, the Court thought that it was material for intending buyers to know that the property was under litigation and directed the Amin to give them that information and we think that it was entirely justified in doing so. Nor does the complaint come very well from the appellant, for it seems tolerably obvious that it is she that is responsible for her daughter's effort to defeat or delay the decree and the sale under it.

The next complaint is that the sale was illegal as it was adjourned for over seven days. What happened was that the sale went on from day to day continuously from 18th to 29th April which was neither illegal nor irregular. It was not adjourned in the proper sense of the word. The Judge was, no doubt, absent for three days, while the sale was going on, but it appears that he had issued a general order that all sales were to continue till his return.

We find that both points against the appellant. Assuming that there had been irregularities, it is for her to show that they caused her substantial injury. She complains that land worth Rs. 40,000 was sold for Rs. 6,000 odd. On the evidence, no doubt, it appears that the land might have been worth about Rs. 40,000 had the title been clear, but what was the position? The appellant's daughter had filed a suit claiming the property. The appellant was supporting her by admitting that her own title was defective. She had, further, before the sale, alienated nearly one third of the property to two of her relations. Under the circumstances, if it fetched much less than its value the fault would appear to be her own and no one else's. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

VAYYAPURI GOUNDAN—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195 (1) (a), 476—Forgery—Power to complain against witnesses.

The Court has no power under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, to complain against witnesses for abetting forgery. Under that section the Court can complain of an offence referred to in s. 195 (1) (c), only if it is an offence alleged to have been committed by a party to the proceeding in the Court. Govinda Aiyar v. Rex (1), followed. In re Devji valad Bhavani (3) and Emperor v. Balgaunda (4), not followed.

Petition under ss. 115 of Act V of 1908 and 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise an order of the District Court, Salem, dated the 21st November, 1930, and made in O. P. No 28 of 1930.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar, Ramachandra Pantulu and V. Ganapathi, for the Petitioners.

Mr. C. Brooke Elliot for Mr. V. Sankaran, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The petitioners seek to revise the order of the District Judge, Salem, under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, complaining against them for abetting a forgery. The learned Judge has overlooked Govinda Aiyar v. Rex (1), which confines s. 476 to the exact offences referred to in s. 195, so that offences in s. 195 (1) (c) must be offences "alleged to have been committed by a party". The amendment of these sections in 1923 has not affected the reasoning adopted by the Full Bench, and so far as this province is concerned that ruling constitutes the binding law. Anybody can complain against an abettor of the offences in s. 195 (1) (c) and there is no question of the Court itself complaining qua Court under s. 476. Of course there is nothing to prevent the presiding officer himself complaining if he likes, as pointed out in Emperor v. Mukund (2), only then s. 200 (a-a) will not apply. In Bombay it has always been held that s. 476 in reference to s. 195 (1) (c) is not confined to parties. Cf. In re Devji valad Bhavani (3) from which Govinda Aiyar v. Rex (1) dissents and which Emperor v. Balgaunda (4) affirms. It is a pity that the Legislature, knowing of this disagreement, did not put the matter beyond question in 1923; but, since it did not do so, nothing is likely to be gained by referring the matter to another Full Bench to see if Madras can be brought into line with Bombay. The wording of the sections admits either view, and the provinces must agree to differ over what, after all, is a mere matter of procedure.

Following Govinda Aiyar v. Rex (1) as regards the abettors of the alleged forgery I cancel the lower Court's complaint. The petition is allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 65, O, XXI, r. 95—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 138—Sale—Consideration—Third party's right to question—Part of consideration dependent on result of litigation—Validity of sale—Execution sale—Title of auction-purchaser—Absence of sale-certificate, effect of—Other evidence to prove title, admissibility of—Suit by auction-purchaser within twelve years, maintainability of—Hindu Law—Suit against family—Omission to implead minor members—Validity of sale.

In the case of a sale of property the question of payment and non-payment of the consideration is a matter between the vendor and the vendee inter se; it cannot be raised by a third party. Nilmadhab Parhi v. Hara Prashad Parhi (1) and Jagdip Sahay v. Sonu Lal (2), relied on. [p. 51, cols. 1 & 2.]

The mere fact that a part of the consideration for a sale of property is dependent on the result of a suit relating to that property does not make the transaction bad as opposed to public policy. Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu (3), relied on. [p. 51, col. 2.]

The title of a purchaser at an auction-sale in execution of a decree is derived from the sale itself and not from the sale certificate. The sale certificate is merely evidence of title and not the title-deed, in the sense that the title is conveyed or created by it, and the purchaser can, therefore, establish his title by evidence independent of the sale certificate. Vishnu Shankar Joshi v. Yusuf Nur Mahomad (4), distinguished. Tantadhari Singh v. Sundar Lal Missir (5), Narayan Bhagwan Gandhi v. Shamrao Lazuman (6), Jagan Nath v. Baldeo (7), Doorga Narain Sen v. Beney Madhab Muzoomdar (8), Tara Prasad Maytee v. Nund Kishore Giri (9) and Velan v. Kumarasami (10), relied on. [ibid.]

The omission to sue a minor member of a joint family if the interest of the family was properly looked after in the suit, will not in any way affect the sale held in execution of the decree passed in a suit against the family. Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (12), Jagdip Narayan Prashad Singh v. Manmatha Nath Dey (13), Sheo Shanker Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (14) and Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Ghananand Singh (15), referred to. [p. 53, col. 1.]

The decree-holder auction-purchaser can bring a suit for recovery of possession of the property purchased at the auction sale within twelve years of the sale as provided in Art. 138, Limitation Act. Such a suit is not barred by s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 54, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decision of the Additional Sub-Judge, Monghyr, dated the 29th August, 1927.

This case was originally heard by a Full Bench and after the decision of the Full Bench which is reported in 133 Ind. Cas.

337, the matter was placed before the Division Bench for final disposal.

Mohammad Noor, J.—This is an appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Monghyr decreeing the plaintiff-respondent's suit for possession of certain properties with mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit. The facts leading to the present appeal are these: Jagdip Narain Singh and Sant Prasad Singh who were members of a joint Hindu family mortgaged to Babu Gopi Lal 4 annas pucca share of village Mighaul, Tauzi No. 1079, and 2 annas 10 gandas pucca share equivalent to 10 annas kucha share in a 4 annas partitioned patti of village Matihani Gopal, Tauzi No. 1097, for Rs. 4,350, bearing compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with four-monthly rests under a registered mortgage deed, dated 19th September, 1890, corresponding to 20th Bhado II, 1297 Fasil. The mortgage money was not paid and on 15th September, 1903, Babu Gopi Lal instituted a mortgage suit No 407 of 1903, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr. In that suit the original mortgagors, Babu Jagdip Narain Singh and Babu Sant Prasad, were defendants first party, their sons and grandsons were defendants second party and one Babu Sakhichand and members of his family who had acquired a subsequent mortgage in one of the properties, namely, Mighaul were defendants third party. The suit was decreed on 7th June, 1904, and the decree was confirmed on appeal by the Calcutta High Court on 7th July, 1905.

The final decree for sale was subsequently passed and Babu Gopi Lal, the decree-holder, took out execution; and the mortgaged properties were sold on 30th May, 1914, for Rs. 40,966 and were purchased by the decree-holder. On that very day the decree-holder filed a petition before Court stating that if the judgment-debtor does not file objection of any kind and does not put in any petition for setting aside the sale he would return the purchased properties on taking Rs. 20,000 only. This was however not to be. The judgment-debtors filed an application for the setting aside of the sale which was rejected on 22nd May, 1915, and the sale was confirmed. There was an appeal to this Court which was dismissed on 3rd August, 1917. The decree-holder auction-purchaser subsequently died and it is said that some quarrel arose in the family. Whatever may be the reason, nothing seems to have been done after the confirmation of the sale by this Court. The sale certificate was not taken out, the delivery of possession under O. XXI, r. 95, was not applied for and a period of about 12 years expired since the date of the sale. On 22nd May, 1926, the heirs and successors of Babu Gopi Lal, the original decree-holder auction-purchaser, conveyed to the plaintiff, Babu Ramasray Prasad Ohaudhury, the entire share in the two aforesaid villages purchased by their ancestor at the execution sale above referred to. The conveyance was by three deeds of sale, Exs. 2, 2-a and 2-b. One deed was by some of the heirs for 6-annas share, a second deed for another 6 annas share by some other heirs, and the third deed for the remaining 4-annas share by the rest of the heirs treating the property sold as 16 annas. On the basis of these conveyances the plaintiff instituted the present suit on 29th May, 1926, seeking to recover the property and mesne profits since the suit, basing his title on the sale held on 30th May, 1914. The sons and grandsons of the original mortgagors, Babu Jagdip Narain Singh and Sant Prasad, are the defendants first party; the representatives of Babu Sakhichand, who had acquired a subsequent mortgage in Mighaul, are the defendants second party, and the heirs and successors of Babu Gopi Lal, who are the vendors of the plaintiff, are the defendants third party. Various defences were taken before the lower Court. I shall later on deal with so much of the defence of the defendants first party as is relevant for this appeal when I come to the appeal itself. Suffice it to say that the learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit and the defendants first party have appealed.

At this stage I propose to dispose of the defence of the defendants second party, the heirs of Sakhichand, who had acquired a subsequent mortgage in one of the properties named Mighaul. I have already said that Babu Sakhichand himself, and members of his family, were defendants third party in the original mortgage suit in which the property was sold. The decree was passed in their presence. Since then they sued on their mortgage and obtained a decree. What happened of this decree is not known. Their defence in the present suit was that their mortgage, dated 11th September, 1903, though subsequent to the mortgage of Gopi Lal, should have a priority over the latter, on the ground that their money was advanced for the satisfaction of another mortgage of Mighaul prior to the mortgage of Gopi Lal. An issue was raised on this point, and the learned Subordinate Judge after going into the facts has decided it against them. They have not appealed. It is, therefore, not necessary to deal with this part of the case any further.

Before I take up the question raised in the appeal itself I would like to dispose of a small matter which has been urged on behalf of the appellants. It appears that the plaintiff after obtaining the decree in this suit executed it and obtained formal delivery of possession. When he applied to the Revenue authorities for the mutation of his name it was found that in the meantime a third party had got his name recorded in the registers of the Land Registration Department on the basis of some transfer from the defendants first party. The Revenue authorities refused to mutate the plaintiff-respondent's name and he has brought a separate suit against the defendants first party and their transferee whose name is entered in the records of the Land Registration Department. On 2nd November, 1928, the respondent put in an application in this Court bringing all these facts to the notice of the Court and requesting that as the appellant had no subsisting interest in the property in suit the appeal had become infructuous and should be dealt with as such.

At the hearing of the appeal the learned Advocate for the respondent (plaintiff) has not pressed this application, but the appellant tried to take advantage of it and urged that as according to the admission of the respondent himself the defendants-appellants had no subsisting interest, the suit itself was infructuous and ought to be dismissed on this ground, the conveyance by the defendants being before the Court. I am unable to accede to this contention. The plaintiff's case in the plaint was that he was resisted in taking possession of the property by the defendants first party. In this view the plaintiff has a good cause of action against them (appellants) and we must determine the matter between the parties as they are before us. Whether the decree which may be passed in this suit will be binding upon any other person who may have acquired any interest in the property from the appellant is a matter which does not concern us. In their written statement the defendants first party never asserted that they are not connected with the property in dispute. They allowed the case to proceed before the lower Court and have filed an appeal before this Court. The question should, therefore, be determined and we overrule the contention of the appellants.

I now come to the defence raised by the defendants first party, the representatives of the original mortgagors. I will only deal with such of them as have been pressed before us in the appeal. The learned Advocate for the appellants Mr. Abani Bhushan Mukharji has raised the following points: (1) that the plaintiff purchased merely the right to sue and not an existing right in immovable property, and therefore the sale to him by the heirs of Gopi Lal is invalid; (2) that no sale certificate having been obtained, there is no evidence of title to the properties sold; and the other evidence which is available is not admissible in evidence. The sale can only be proved by the sale certificate itself and no decree for possession can be passed in its absence; (3) that the sale is not binding upon defendants Nos. 7 and 8 of the first party, namely Babu Jharkhandi Prasad Singh and Babu Jadunandan Prasad Singh, who were not parties to the original mortgage Suit No 407 of 1903; (4) that the suit is barred by limitation governed by Art. 178, Limitation Act; (5) that the suit is barred by s. 47, Civil Procedure Code.

As to the first point there is no force in the contention. Section 65, Civil Procedure Code, is explicit and says that when a sale of an immovable property has become absolute the title of the auction-purchaser shall commence from the date of the sale. In this case the sale became absolute and the order of the Court making the sale absolute was confirmed by this Court. By the sale a right in the property sold was acquired by Babu Gopi Lal, the decree-holder auction-purchaser, and the plaintiff as the representative-in-interest of Gopi Lal, acquired a subsisting right in the property. A plea was taken before the lower Court that under the terms of the sale deeds (Exs. 2, 2-a and 2-b) the plaintiffs had not acquired any right as they had not paid the consideration money to their vendors, the heirs of Babu Gopi Lal. This is, however, a matter between the plaintiff and the defendants third party. In their written statements the defendants third party explicitly stated that title had passed to the plaintiff. The question of payment and non-payment of the consideration money is a matter between them inter se, and in my opinion it cannot be raised by the defendants first party. The learned lower Court has relied upon 20 Ind. Cas. 325 [Nilmadhab Parhi v. Hara Prashad Parhi (1)] and 52 Ind. Cas. 363 [Jagdeep Sahay v. Sonu Lal (2)] for the authority that the execution of a sale-deed passes title to the vendee unless there is a contract to the contrary between the parties. I agree with the findings of the learned lower Court and hold this point against the appellants. These sale-deeds are not of a nature which can be held to be invalid on the ground of public policy as speculative transfers by way of gambling in litigation. No doubt a part of the consideration is dependent upon the result of the suit but this does not to my mind make the transaction bad as opposed to public policy. This was the view taken by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu (3). The property has been sold for its full value and the consideration dependent upon the result of the suit is only about a third of it. The transaction is not a gamble and not invalid. The right sold was the vendor's interest in the property acquired by the sale in execution and not a mere right to sue.

As to the second point raised by the learned Advocate it is again enough to refer to the provisions of s. 65, Civil Procedure Code. It says that where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree and such sale has become absolute, the property shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute. It is clear that the title of the auction-purchaser is derived from the sale and not from the sale certificate. It accrues on the sale becoming absolute but takes effect from the date of sale itself. The sale certificate is merely evidence of title of the auction-purchaser and not the title-deed in the sense that the title is conveyed or created by it. The word "sale-certificate" itself denotes that it is only a certificate by the Court that the auction-purchaser has purchased the property.

No provision of law has been placed before us to show that the title of the auction-purchaser is derived from the sale certificate. The learned Advocate has relied upon Vishnu Shanker Joshi v. Yusuf Nur Mahomad (4). The case does not appear to be in point. There the dispute was as regards two sales held by two different Courts. One of them was not confirmed at all. The main question to be decided was which of these two sales was to prevail and the learned Judges, if I may say so, rightly held that one of the sales not having been confirmed could not prevail. No doubt they did refer to the sale certificate also, but, the sale not having been confirmed the question of sale-certificate was immaterial. On the other hand the learned Advocate for the respondent has referred us to the case of Tantadhari Singh v. Sundar Lal Missir (5) where Mookerjee, J., observed as follows:

"It is settled law that when a person has purchased immovable property at an execution sale, he can establish his title by evidence independent of the sale certificate We agree in this view of the law, and hold that the Subordinate Judge ought not to have decided against the plaintiffs upon the question of title, merely because they had failed to produce their sale certificate."

Mookerjee, J., in dealing with the effect of non-production of the sale-certificate, referred to the observation of Ohandavarkar, J., in Narayan Bhagwan Gandhi v. Shamrao Laxuman (6) and a decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Jagan Nath v. Baldeo (7) and also to the earlier decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Doorga Narain Sen v. Beney Madhab Mazoomdar (8) and Tara Prasad Maytee v. Nund Kishor Giri (9) and that of the Madras High Court in Velan v. Kumarasami (10). It is enough if I consider the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court above referred to. In that case it was held that it was not incumbent on a purchaser at an execution sale, which had been duly confirmed, to produce his sale certificate, but it was competent for him to prove his purchase aliunde. The confirmation of the sale in his favour was prima facie evidence of his title to the property, and was sufficient to pass such title to him, of which a certificate if afterwards obtained by him would merely be evidence that the property had so passed. The question was again considered by the Calcutta High Court in the case of 1 Ind. Cas. 62 [Braja Nath Pal v. Joggeswar Bagchi] (11), where Mookerjee, J., referring to the case of Tantadhari Singh v. Sundar Lal Missir (5), observed that the purchaser of immovable property at an auction sale can establish his title by evidence independent of the sale-certificate, as a sale-certificate does not create title, but is merely evidence of title. The law on this point is so settled that I do not propose to discuss it at great length. The learned Advocate for the appellant referred us to s. 91, Evidence Act, and contended that as O. XXI, r. 94, Civil Procedure Code, makes it incumbent upon the Court to grant a sale-certificate to the auction-purchaser, no other evidence to prove the sale and the property sold is admissible. I am unable to agree with this. Section 91, Evidence Act, prescribes that " in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of such matter except the document itself, or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible under the provisions herein before contained."

In this case there is no matter which is required by law to be reduced in the form of a document. The sale is held under the order of the Court and there are records of these orders in the order sheet which has been produced. On these grounds I hold this point against the appellants.

The third point refers to the effect of the decree and the sale against defendants Nos. 7 and 8, Babu Jharkhandi Prasad Singh and Babu Jadunandan Prasad Singh. They are the sons of one of the original mortgagees, Babu Sant Prasad Singh. The plaint and the decree in the mortgage suit show that one of the minor sons of Babu Sant Prasad Singh was named therein as Panchu Singh. The plaintiff's contention is that Panchu was another name of defendant No. 7, Jharkhandi Prasad Singh. This is supported by the judgment and the decree of the High Court of Calcutta in the mortgage suit (Exs. 11 and 15). The learned lower Court has held it as a fact that Panchu was another name of Jharkhandi Prasad who was party to the suit and described therein as son of Babu Sant Prasad. It has not been shown that Babu Sant Prasad had another son named Panchu. I, therefore, agree with the finding of the learned lower Court that Jharkhandi Singh is an alias of Panchu Singh who was a party to the original mortgage suit. There is no doubt that Babu Jadunandan Prasad Singh was not a party to the mortgage suit. The case of the plaintiff in this respect is that he was not born at the time of the institution of the suit. I do not think so. It appears that one Ambica Prasad Singh, brother of Babu Jadunandan Prasad Singh, was a party to the suit and it is asserted on behalf of the appellant and is not strenuously disputed by the plaintiffs that Ambica who was a party to the original mortgage suit was a younger brother of Babu Jadunandan Prasad Singh. If he was born at the time of the institution of the suit Babu Jadunandan Prasad Singh, who was older, must have been born before the institution of the suit.

There is no doubt that he was left out from the original suit, but this will not in any way help the appellant. The omission to sue a minor member of a joint family, if the interest of the family was properly looked after in the suit, will not in any way affect the sale held in execution of the decree passed in the suit, vide Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (12) and 45 Ind. Cas. 76 [Jagdish Narayan Prashad Singh v. Manmath Nath Dey (13)], relied upon by the learned lower Court; see also Sheo Shanker Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (14) and Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Ghananand Singh (15). The plaintiff in the mortgage suit shows that Babu Jagdish Narayan Singh and Babu Sant Prasad Singh, the mortgagors, were sued as kartas and managers of the joint Hindu family and there are large number of cases of this Court showing that when a suit is brought against a karta of a joint Hindu family in his representative capacity, the suit will not fail for non-joinder of other members of the family. The defendant does not impugn the debt or the mortgage and the utmost that he can claim is that he has still the equity of redemption subsisting in him. The amount that he will now have to pay in order to redeem will far exceed the value of the properties, and his learned Advocate did not express his readiness to avail himself of this right when it was pointed out to him that this was all he could get. On these grounds I would decide this point also against the appellants.

Before I come to the question of limitation and the applicability of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, I would like to dispose of, in passing, one other defence of the appellants raised before the lower Court which, though referred to by the learned Advocate, has not been seriously pressed. In para. 8 of the written statement of defendant No. 1 it is stated that according to the terms of the petition filed by Babu Gopi Lal on 30th May, 1914, the sum of Rs. 20,000 was paid to him and he gave up his right under the sale and did not, therefore, take out the sale certificate or delivery of possession. I have referred to this petition of 30th May, 1914. It was to the effect that if the judgment-debtors did not put in petition for setting aside the sale, and did not raise any objection to it, the decree-holder auction-purchaser would return the property to them on payment of Rs. 20,000 only. The learned lower Court has disbelieved the payment of Rs. 20,000, by the defendant first party, and I have no hesitation in accepting this finding. First of all the offer was conditional to the judgment-debtors not raising any objection to the sale. In fact objections were raised, application for setting aside the sale was filed and it was fought up to this Court. It is unbelievable that after fighting to the bitter end the decree-holder auction-purchaser would have given up the property so easily on receipt of Rs. 20,000 only. Then it is further unreasonable to believe that the judgment debtor actually paid Rs. 20,000, to the decree-holder auction-purchaser and took no document from him or did not insist on the filing of some sort of petition before the Court. This point, though urged by Mr. Abani Bhushan Mukharji, has not, as I said, been strenuously pressed by him, and I see no force in it, and, therefore, decide this point also against the appellants.

I now come to the most important point in the case, namely, the question of limitation and the applicability of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. The importance of the applicability of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, is only in so far as it affects the question of limitation. Under the present Code the question whether a particular relief can be obtained by an application under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, or by a separate suit is, unless the question of limitation comes in, of academic interest only. Now the Courts are empowered to treat a petition under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, as a plaint and vice versa. Therefore, had this suit been brought within three years of the date of purchase, the question would have been of no practical importance. But it has been instituted long after the expiry of three years and just before the expiry of 12 years. The question is, whether the decree-holder auction-purchaser can bring a suit for recovery of possession of the property purchased at an auction sale within 12 years of the sale as provided in Art. 138, Limitation Act, or his only remedy is by an application for delivery of possession to the executing Court for which the period of limitation prescribed is three years only? There was divergence of judicial pronouncements on this question.

We were referred to the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Abdul Gani v. Raja Ram (16). There it was held that an application for delivery of possession under O. XXI, r. 95, Civil Procedure Code, does not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and, therefore, an order under that section was not appealable. It practically held that s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to an application for delivery of possession. That decision was based on the curius curiæ of the Calcutta High Court. Since then the Calcutta High Court in the case of Kailash Chandra Tarafdar v. Gopal Chandra Poddar (17) has held that the decree-holder auction-purchaser applying for possession under O. XXI, r. 95, comes within the provision of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, as it was a question between the parties to the suit and was a proceeding relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. It is obvious that if the delivery of possession to the decree-holder auction purchaser comes within the purview of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, a separate suit will be barred and the only remedy of the decree-holder will be by way of an application for which as I have said the period of limitation is three years. We felt some doubt as to the correctness of the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Haji Abdul Gani v. Raja Ram (16) and with the consent of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice by our order, dated 5th December, 1930, we referred under rr. 1 and 6, Chap. V of the Rules of this Court the following question of law for decision by a specially constituted Bench:—

“Whether a suit instituted by the decree-holder auction-purchaser or his representative-in-interest for recovery of possession of the property purchased in execution of the decree is barred by the provisions of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, or, in other words whether a decree-holder who becomes a purchaser of the property sold in execution of his own decree ceases as such to be the party to the suit, and whether the question relating to delivery of possession of the property purchased by the decree-holder-auction purchaser is a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree.”

The reference was heard by a Bench of this Court consisting of Sir Courtney-Terrell C. J., Sir Jwala Prasad, Ross, Wort and Kulwant Sahay, JJ. Their judgment was delivered on 21st April, 1931, and the question of law referred by us was answered in the negative. It has been held that the suit instituted by decree-holder-auction-purchaser or his representative-in-interest for recovery of possession of the property purchased in execution of the decree is not barred by the provisions of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. It follows that the suit is maintainable and the period of limitation is 12 years under Art. 138, Limitation Act. The suit is, therefore, not barred either by the provisions of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code or by Art. 138, Limitation Act.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (2)—Compromise decree—Compromise embodied in decree—Compromise creating lease—Registration, whether compulsory.

All decrees and orders are not excluded from compulsory registration but only those are excluded which partake the character of the documents mentioned in cl. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1) and if a consent decree operates to create a lease its registration is compulsory. [p. 56, col. 2.]

First Appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad, dated the 1st March, 1929.

Messrs. P. R. Das, S. C. Mazumdar and N. N. Ray, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. B. Mukherjee and U. N. Banerjee, for the Respondent.

Fazl Ali, J.—The main question to be decided in this appeal is whether the plaintiff can recover rent for more than three years prior to the institution of the suit. It appears that in the year 1918 the proprietor of the Jharia Raj Estate, instituted a suit against the defendant for recovery of khas possession of certain lands. The suit was compromised on the 11th February, 1920, and one of the terms embodied in the decree was as follows:—

"The plaintiff gives up his claim for khas possession which he made regarding the surface land of the disputed Mauza Fatepur. The defendant will hold possession of the said lands in his purchase right".

"The defendant agrees to pay to the plaintiff the annual jama of Rs 792 for 66 bighas in three plots specified in the schedule below... The defendant pays to the plaintiff Rs. 792 the rent for 1325 B. S. last and from the current year the defendant will pay the jama to the plaintiff every year in four equal instalments... As a security for the payment of the amount of rent and cess with interest due to the plaintiff the aforesaid land and the machineries, workshop and house etc., thereon shall always be treated as "first charge" so long as the amount of rent etc., with interest due to the plaintiff will not be paid, the defendant will not be competent to transfer the same to any one by sale or gift or remove the same."

The present suit was instituted on the 14th April, 1928, by the Receiver of the Jharia Raj Estate to recover the arrears of rent for the years 1327 to 1334 at the rate of Rs. 792 per year as provided for in the petition of compromise which was embodied in the decree. The defendant resisted the suit on various grounds, but his main ground of attack is stated in para. 9 of the written statement which runs as follows.—

"That defendant further submits that on account of the non-registration the decree in Suit No. 718 of 1918 is not admissible in evidence and the plaintiff cannot claim any rent from this defendant under the said decree".

At the trial it appears to have been admitted by the defendant that he was liable to pay rent for three years before the institution of the suit and so the Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim in part. He held, however, that the compromise decree relied on by the plaintiff was not admissible in evidence for want of registration and so the plaintiff's claim for arrears prior to three years before the suit was barred by limitation.

The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and the points urged on his behalf are (1) that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the compromise decree required registration and (2) that at least the latter part of the decree which provides that the rent will be treated as a first charge on the land and machineries etc., does not require registration and that in view of this clause it should have been held that the period of limitation in this case was twelve and not three years.

The first question, therefore, to be considered is whether the compromise decree was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. The answer to this question depends not only on the proper construction of s. 17 of the Indian Registration Act, but also on the construction of the decree itself so as to determine whether it operates to create a lease or not. I think there can be no doubt that the decree did create a lease because the terms recited therein virtually amount to a settlement of 66 bighas of land with the defendant in lieu of a future recurring annual payment. Turning now to s. 17 it may be noticed that it is divided into two sub-sections, the first enumerating the classes of documents which are required to be registered and the second providing that the rule as to compulsory registration would not apply to certain documents which but for the proviso might fall under the first sub-section. Under the first sub-section there are five classes of documents which are mentioned under cls. (a) to (e) respectively of which cl. (a) relates to instruments relating to gift of immovable property and cl. (d) relates to a lease of immovable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rent. So far as this sub-section is concerned, its language is plain and can give rise to no serious difficulty. Considerable difficulty, however, has arisen in interpreting sub-s. (2) read with cl. (vi) which may be read as follows:—

"Nothing in cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. 1 applies to any decree or order of a Court."

One of the difficult questions which arose in relation to this provision was as to how far it would apply to a decree which incorporates matters which are outside the scope of the suit. The argument which used to be advanced in this connection was substantially this—that the Court is under no obligation to record a compromise and pass a decree with regard to matters which are extraneous to the suit and if such matters are embodied in the decree, the decree to that extent is without jurisdiction and is not protected by sub s. (2), cl. (vi): See Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (1). It has, however, been held by the Privy Council in Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (2) and Hemanta Kumari Devi v. Midnapur Zamindary Co., Ltd. (3), that even if the compromise goes beyond the property in suit, it will not, if embodied in the decree, require registration and the term "decree" as used in cl. (vi) ought to receive a liberal construction. Thus the effect of these decisions and a number of other decisions is that so far as the compromise decrees relates to properties within the scope of the suit, it operates as res judicata, but so far as it relates to properties outside the scope of the suit, such a decree, if the terms of the compromise are embodied in the decree, is evidence of the terms embodied therein. In either case it is not necessary to register such a compromise petition or the decree.

The second difficulty in construing sub-s. (2) of s. 17, cl. (vi) arises in consequence of the fact that it refers only to cls. (b) and (c) and not to cls. (a), (d) and (e). Ordinarily construed this clause would mean that a decree or an order of a Court embodying the terms of an instrument coming under s. 17, cls. (b) and (c) is exempted from registration, but if it embodies the terms of an instrument which comes, for example, under cl. (a) or (d), that is to say, if it amounts to a gift or a lease, it will not be exempted from registration. In some cases, however, it was actually suggested, if not decided, that even if a decree purports to create a lease, it would be admissible in evidence though not registered. Whatever doubts and difficulties may have surrounded the interpretation of the sub-section before have been set at rest now by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zemindari Co., Ltd., (3) and a number of other decisions which have followed it. In Hemanta Kumari Debi's case (3) the parties to the suit having compromised it presented a petition to the Court in which one of the terms was that Hemanta Kumari (the plaintiff in that suit) had agreed that if she succeeded in another suit which she had brought to recover certain land other than that to which the compromised suit related, she would grant to Watson & Co., a lease of that land upon specified terms and prayed for a decree in terms of the compromise. A decree was thereupon passed by the Court and the petition was recited in full in the decree. Hemanta Kumari succeeded in the suit which she had brought to recover the other land, but she refused to grant a lease of the land to the assignees of Watson & Co. The latter, therefore, brought a suit against Hemanta Kumari for specific performance of the agreement of the lease comprised in the petition of compromise and incorporated in the consent decree. The High Court of Calcutta decreed specific performance. One of the questions which arose before the Judicial Committee was whether the petition of compromise which contained the agreement of which specific performance was sought required registration. Lord Buckmaster in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee on this point observed as follows—

"If the document in question can be regarded as a lease within the meaning of this definition, it could not be received in evidence. Their Lordships are of opinion that it cannot be so regarded. "An agreement for a lease," which a lease is by the Statute declared to include, must in their Lordships' opinion be a document which effects an actual demise and operates as a lease..... The present agreement is an agreement that upon the happening of a contingent event at a date which was indeterminate and having regard to the slow progress of Indian litigation, might be far distant, a lease would be granted. Until the happening of that event it was impossible to determine whether there would be any lease or not. Such an agreement does not, in their Lordships' opinion, satisfy the meaning of the phrase "agreement for a lease"..... So far, therefore, as this decision depends upon the need for registration of the document as a lease, the Registration Act places no obstacle in the respondents' way. By s. 17 (1) (b), however, it is also provided that other non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, to or in immovable property, need registration. But this is subject to the exception provided in sub-s. (2) of s. 17 which states that "nothing in cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1) applies to" among other things "any decree or order of a Court". If, therefore, the decree in the present case can be regarded as a decree within the meaning of that exception, there is nothing in the Registration Act to affect the matter."

Now, this reasoning plainly suggests that all decrees and orders are not excluded from compulsory registration but only those are excluded which partake the character of the documents mentioned in cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (2) and if the consent decree operated to create a lease, it would in their Lordships' opinion have required registration. This is exactly how this decision was construed by the Calcutta High Court in Rajani Kanta v. Raj Kumari Dasi (4). In that case Rankin, O. J., who delivered the judgment. (Mitter, J., agreeing), dealt with the question as follows:—

"The first question, therefore, is whether the sole-nama requires registration as being a lease. There can be no doubt that the intention of it was to operate as the grant of a tenancy to take effect at once and in my judgment there is no escape from the conclusion that it was a lease. That being so, there is no escape from the further conclusion that it is not exempt as being an order or a decree of the Court, from the requirement of registration, because that requirement is only foregone on the face of s. 17, Registration Act, in cases coming within cls. (b) and (c) sub-s. (1) s. 17. This was clearly held by the Privy Council in the judgment delivered by Lord Buckmaster in the case of Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zamindari Co., Ltd. (3)."

In Sarat Chandra Das v. Sarajini (5), another Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the question was "now concluded by the ruling of their Lordships in Hemanta Kumari's case (3)". The same view has been held by the Calcutta High Court in several other cases; See Nazar Ali v. Indra Kumar (6), Janaki Nath v. Mohendar Narain (7), Sailesh Chandra Sarkar v. Bireswar Chatterjee (8). The Lahore High Court has also recently held in Attar Chand v. Chandu Lal (9), that cl. (b) of sub-s. (2) of s. 17, is not applicable to a lease. Again in Charu Chandra Mitra v. Shambhu Nath Pandey (10), a case decided by a Full Bench of this Court, Atkinson, J., after referring to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (11), to which I shall also have to refer presently, said—

"I am aware that a more extended interpretation has been given to this decision by the learned Judges who decided the case of Natesan Chetty v. Vengu Nachiar (12). So wide is the interpretation which their Lordships attributed in that case to the decision of the Privy Council in Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (11), already cited that practically it would apply so as to cover the case of the grant of a lease as a matter of compromise in a judicial proceeding in a pending litigation which would apparently be within the provisions of cl. (d) of s. 17 of the Registration Act. We wish it to be clearly understood for the purposes of our decision in this case that we do not consider that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council is wide enough to cover the case of a document constituting a lease arising out of the compromise in a judicial proceeding within the provisions cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) of s. 17 of the Registration Act. We think it applies to documents coming within the class of documents contemplated in cls. (b) and (c) which are protected under the provisions of cl. (vi) of sub-s. (2) of s. 17 of the Registration Act from registration".

This view also seems to have been accepted in another decision of this Court; See Rampadarath Singh v. Sohrai Koeri (13). It appears to me therefore that it is now too late to contend that a decree even though it operates to create a lease, does not require registration under s. 17 of the Registration Act. It is true that the provision requiring a decree to be registered seems to be not so very necessary because the same results which are intended to be secured by the registration of a document may also be secured by the document being embodied as part of a decree. But the language of s. 17 as well as s. 29-A of the Registration Act shows that the framers of the Act did not intend to exclude decrees from registration and this is also clear from the amendment recently made in the Registration Act after the decision in Hemanta Kumari's case (3) by inserting the following words in cl. (vi) of sub-s. (2).

"except a decree or order expressed to be made on a compromise and comprising immovable property other than that which is the subject-matter of a suit or proceeding".

Mr. P. R. Das, however, appearing for the appellant does not concede that the view to which I have referred is based on a correct reading of s. 17 and he relies on the decisions in Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (11), Natesan Chetty v. Vengu Nachiar (12), 19 Ind. Cas. 551 [Ambica Charan Sher Kaibarta v. Srinath Dutta (14)], Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zemindari Co., (3), and Charu Chandra Mitra v. Shambhu Nath Pandey (10). The last two cases, as I have already shown, far from favouring Mr. Das's contention negative the view which he is trying to support; but the other three cases may be briefly dealt with. In Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (11), the dispute between the parties was whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover interest on a secured loan after the date fixed for payment in the instrument of mortgage. The High Court held that by reason of various petitions of adjournment in which both parties had joined, the defendant had admitted the liability to pay post diem interest. The defendant, however, contended throughout that the petitions could not be relied on by the plaintiff as they were not registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act. The Privy Council came (13) 52 Ind. Cas. 20; 4 P. L. J. 667; (1920) Pat. 114; 3 U. P. L. R. (Pat) 166.

(14) 19 Ind. Cas. 551.

to the conclusion on the construction of the mortgage deed itself that the interest was payable but they also added

"although in the view which their Lordships take, the question whether those proceedings can be founded on without their having been registered in terms of the Registration Act does not necessarily arise in this appeal, they think it right to add that having heard Counsel fully upon the point, they are satisfied that the provisions of s. 17 of the Act did not apply to proper judicial proceedings whether consisting of pleadings filed by the parties or of orders made by the Court".

These observations have been explained in several cases including the Full Bench decision of this Court to which I have already referred and it is clear that as none of the documents relied on in the case with which their Lordships had to deal fell under cl. (a), (d) or (e) of sub-s. 2 of s. 17, their Lordships had no occasion to make a pronouncement as to what the effect would have been, if any of these documents fell under any of the clauses which have not been specifically mentioned in s. 17, sub-s. (2). As to the case of Natesan Chetty v. Vengu Nachiar (12), I have already referred to the remarks of Atkinson, J., in Charu Chandra Mitra's case (10) that it attributes too wide an interpretation to the decision of the Privy Council in Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (11) and I take it that if it was meant to be laid down in that case that a decree, even though it purports to create a lease, need not be registered, that view did not find favour with the Full Bench of this Court. The view that was put forward in that case was that sub-s. (2) is in the nature of a proviso and "that provisos are often inserted unnecessarily excepting cases which could not otherwise fall within the enactment for the purpose of removing apprehensions and so cases which are otherwise clearly outside the scope of an enactment cannot be brought within it by any inference founded on the terms of the proviso".

I would, however, say with great respect that this reasoning assumes that the exceptions referred to under sub-s. (2) would have been, even in the absence of that sub-section, outside the scope of s. 17, sub-s. (1). Besides whatever observations were made by the learned Judges who decided that case as to the application of s. 17 to such compromise decrees as operate to create a lease, may be taken to be in the nature of mere obiter dicta because their Lordships themselves while dealing with the compromise in that case said

"Now we are not clear that we are bound to construe the compromise as creating a new lease so as to give an opportunity for the objection".

In any event that decision can no longer be followed after the decision of Hemanta Kumari's case (3).

The argument of Mr. P. R. Das which is to the effect that only cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1) were mentioned in sub-s. (2) because they are comprehensive enough to include the documents which come under the other clauses which were not mentioned including cl. (d) may also be met on the same reasoning and it may also be pointed out that if it was intended by the Legislature to include in sub-s. (2) documents falling under cls. (a), (d) and (e) also, it was hardly necessary to mention specifically cls. (b) and (c) and omit the other clauses. In that case it would have been sufficient to say that "nothing in sub-s. (1) would apply to the classes of documents enumerated in sub-s. (2)".

As regards the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in 19 Ind. Cas. 551 Ambica Charan Sher Kaibarta v. Srinath Dutta (14), it may be pointed out that it was based entirely on the decision in Natesan Chetty v. Vengu Nachiar (12) and besides the facts of the case not being fully stated in the report, we do not know whether the particular document referred to in that case did come under s. 17 sub-s. (1) cl. (d) of the Registration Act. The suit was for recovery of rent and the plaintiff's case was that the pro forma defendant had created a a kaimi maurosi interest in his favour. The pro forma defendant admitted this but the contesting defendant contended that the document by which the kaimi interest was created should have been registered. It was found that the compromise related to the suit and its subject-matter and it was held therefore that s. 17 of the Registration Act afforded no answer to the plaintiff's claim. Besides, even assuming that it was laid down by implication in this case that if a lease is incorporated in the decree, it does not require registration, it cannot be regarded as an authority for that proposition after the decision of Hemanta Kumari's case (3) and the other cases of the Calcutta High Court to which I have referred. It is true that this case was referred to with approval by Atkinson, J., in Charu Chandra Mitra's case (10), but I take it that it was referred to merely as supporting the proposition that even though the decree or order of the Court does not expressly incorporate verbatim the entire provisions of the compromise, it is within the protection provided by cl. (vi), sub-s. (2) s. 17 of Registration Act. It was also referred to as one of the cases in which the decision in Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (1), was not followed.

I will now pass on to consider the next point raised by Mr. Das, that is to say, that at least the latter part of the decree, which provides that rent will be a charge on the land, should be admitted in evidence because this statement standing by itself does not constitute a lease or come within the mischief of cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) of s. 17 of the Registration Act. It is pointed out on behalf of the respondents that this is after all one of the important clauses of the lease and if the decree is inadmissible in evidence because it operates to create a lease, then none of the terms of the lease can be admitted in evidence. It appears to me that this argument substantially meets Mr. Das's contention. It is, however, urged by Mr. Das that an unregistered document which is required to be registered may be used in evidence for a collateral purpose and reliance is placed on Sarat Chandra Das v. Sarajini (5), where a compromise decree was excluded on the ground that it ought to have been registered as a document incorporating the lease, but an admission made therein as to the amount of rent was used for the purpose of fixing the liability of the lessee. It is also urged by Mr. Das that the compromise having been acted upon, the terms of the compromise may be proved not by the document but by the actings of the parties. Now, I am not prepared to hold that to use the document for the purpose of proving an important clause in the lease would be using it for a collateral purpose. As to the actings of the parties, although the fact as to what is the amount of the rent payable in this case might be legitimately proved by showing that such rent has actually been paid in the past by the defendant, I do not see any evidence of conduct or any act of the parties which would prove that the parties had actually made rent a charge on the property.

It appears to me, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the terms of the compromise even though embodied in the decree were not admissible in evidence and that being so, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover more than three years' rent or compensation for the occupation of the land which was admittedly in possession of the defendant.

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act (XI of 1890), s. 6—Offence by servant—Liability of owner—'Permits', 'employs,' meanings of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 190 (c)—Charge against servant—Power to issue process against master also.

The word "permits" in s. 6, Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act does not involve any conscious act on the part of the person who is held to be liable under the section. The fact that the accused was absent and ignorant of the use of the animal by his servant, is, therefore, no defence to a charge under s. 6. [p. 60, col. 1.]

Where an animal is the property of the accused and is employed in the work of the accused it is nonetheless employed by the accused by reason of the fact that the accused employs a driver to drive the animal. [p. 60, col. 2.]

Where a complaint is made against a bullock-driver it is open to the Court to take cognizance of the offence against the owner of the animal also under s. 190 (c), Criminal Procedure Code. Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarty (1), followed. [p. 60, col. 1.]

Criminal Revision from an order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Barh, dated the 15th December, 1930, an application against which was rejected by the order of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 26th January, 1931.

Mr. Baldeva Sahay, for the Petitioner.

Judgment—This Rule is directed against the order of the learned Sessions Judge upholding the conviction of the petitioner under s. 6 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, being Act XI of 1890.

It is stated as one of the points in the case that the original complaint was filed against the employee of the petitioner, that is to say, the bullock driver and not against the petitioner, and that when the Magistrate issued a summons against the petitioner, who was not named in the complaint, the trial was without jurisdiction. In my judgment that argument cannot be supported. In the case of Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (1) the same question came up for disposal by a Divisional Bench of the Calcutta High Court, and in the course of the judgment it is stated that "it appears to us that this is not a matter in which the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction. The matter was before him on the complaint made against another person and as the evidence disclosed the fact which has been found by the Magistrate that the petitioner was concerned in that offence, process was issued against him. It seems to us that the Magistrate was competent to act in this manner and that he was not barred, as stated in the petition made to this Court on which the rule was granted, by reason of s. 190 (c), Criminal Procedure Code."

in other words, the Magistrate acted under s. 190 (c): and the Court goes on to hold that the trial was not without jurisdiction. It is to be noted that the statement to which I have referred was this. In the evidence it was disclosed that another person was concerned in the matter. That is really the substantial point in this case whether another person was concerned in the matter: in other words, whether the petitioner, who was the master was concerned. The argument is based on the fact, which I, do not think is disputed, that the master who was the owner of this bullock, was away at Barh at the time, and it is stated, therefore, that he had no knowledge of the fact that the bullock-driver was using a sick bullock in a bullock cart. Section 6 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act provides:

"If any person employs in any work or labour any animal which by reason of any disease, infirmity, etc., he shall be guilty of an offence under the Act."

The second part of that section says:

"or permits any such unfit animal in his possession or under his control to be so employed."

The argument addressed to me by the learned Advocate who appears on behalf of the petitioner is that the use of the word "permits" in that section connotes some conscious act on the part of the petitioner and that in the circumstances at any rate the petitioner being absent and being ignorant of the use of this bullock, it cannot be said that he permitted the use of this bullock. The learned Sessions Judge points out that the expression used in the Act is 'permits such use' and not 'knowingly permits such use'. In the first place it is obvious that on fundamental principles of the criminal law, apart from Statute, a person cannot be convicted of a crime of another unless the evidence is such as to prove that he abetted or instigated the crime. But it is to be remembered that in this case we have to construe the Statute and it is upon the construction of that Statute and not upon the general principles of the criminal law that this matter is to be determined, I am inclined to agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the expression "permits" does not involve any conscious act on the part of the person who is held to be liable under the section. But it is not for that reason only I would uphold the conviction. The Act says:

"If any person employs in any work or labour any animal."

There is no doubt in this case that the bullock was the property of the petitioner and that it was employed in the work of the petitioner; it is nonetheless employed by the petitioner by reason of the fact that the petitioner employs a bullock-driver to drive this bullock or other bullocks. It seems to me, therefore, that the section aims not only at the liability of a person actually in charge of the animal but also aims at the person who owns it: in other words, he cannot shelve his responsibility by pleading ignorance of the fact. In my judgment this petitioner employed the bullock within the meaning of s. 6, and, therefore, the conviction was right. The Rule is discharged.

Criminal Revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 3rd November, 1930, affirming that of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Dinapore, dated the 26th September, 1930.

Mr. Yunus, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Dhavlé, J.—The three petitioners were convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of an offence under s. 353 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced each to a fine of Rs. 100 with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The Magistrate also found two of the petitioners, Gopi and Mahabir, guilty of an offence under s. 341 of the Indian Penal Code, but considered it unnecessary to pass a separate sentence under this section. On appeal the Additional Sessions Judge of Patna altered the conviction of the three petitioners under s. 353 to one under s. 352 but maintained the sentence. He also upheld the conviction of Gopi and Mahabir under s. 341.

James, J., who admitted the revisional application, also directed a notice to issue on Gopi and Mahabir to shew cause why sentence should not be pronounced against them under s. 341 as no sentence was imposed under this section by the trial Court. In doing so he observed that any imposition of sentence that may be made by the High Court would amount to an enhancement and that a notice was, therefore, necessary.

The facts are that the Sub-Inspector of Police Station Maner was making an investigation into a case of theft of a bicycle and during the investigation received information that the stolen bicycle was concealed in the house of the petitioner Avadh Kurmi of village Musepur or Musapur. He proceeded at once to the house of Avadh and demanded the bicycle, and on receiving a refusal from the three petitioners who were all there, asked two of his companions, Baldeo Misser (the man who had given the information) and Deosaran, to act as search witnesses, and intimated to the petitioners that he would search the house. The petitioners told the Sub-Inspector not to enter the house and when he insisted upon entering it, they pushed him back along with a constable who was with him. The Sub-Inspector had previously to this posted his men round the house, and upon being pushed back he asked Jumai Gope, a chaukidar, to run to the thana for help. The petitioner Avadh then went inside, took a bicycle and went away with it by the door where Jumai had been posted. The Sub-Inspector and the constable ran to arrest Avadh but were prevented by Gopi and Mahabir from going in that direction.

The only point urged in support of the application in revision is that the search which the Sub-Inspector proposed to make was illegal, and that the petitioners were, therefore, entitled to resist it and committed no offence even under s. 352 of the Indian Penal Code in pushing the Sub-Inspector and his constable back. The grounds on which it is contended that the search was illegal are the failure of the Sub-Inspector to call two respectable "inhabitants of the locality," under s. 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to witness the search, and his failure to comply with the requirements of s. 165 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the matter of recording in writing the grounds of his belief that anything necessary for the purposes of his investigation would be found in the house and that such thing could not in his opinion be otherwise obtained without undue delay, and specifying in such writing the thing for which the search was to be made, and also in the matter of sending a copy of such record forthwith to the nearest Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence. The Sub-Inspector has explained that in view of the attitude of the men who had assembled on the scene, he did not consider it worthwhile to serve upon them or upon any other persons of the busti a notice under s. 103, asking them to witness the search, but asked Baldeo and Deosaran to act as search witnesses. Baldeo and Deosaran are both men of Balua and had come with the Sub-Inspector to Musapur from that village. A reference to the survey map of the thana shows that Balua is at least four miles from Musapur and is separated from it by two or three villages. It is plain, therefore, that Baldeo and Deosaran cannot be said to be "inhabitants of the locality." The lower Courts have held that having regard to the attitude of the local inhabitants, the Sub-Inspector "did the only thing which was possible in those circumstances" and that there was "sufficient compliance with the law as enacted in s. 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure." The Additional Sessions Judge has further observed that the gist of s. 103 is that there must be respectable search witnesses; and this observation is supported by the opinion of Twomey, J., in 8 Ind. Cas. 988 [Emperor v. Sit Nyein (1)], that the stress is on the word "respectable" and not on the word "locality." The respectability of the men from Balua has not been challenged. In my opinion the failure or inability of the Sub-Inspector in the circumstances to secure search witnesses from the locality was no more than an irregularity and would not by itself have entitled the petitioners to resist the search if the Sub-Inspector's action had otherwise come within the first paragraph of s. 99 of the Indian Penal Code. As to the failure of the Sub-Inspector to comply with the requirements of s. 165 in the matter of making a record and sending a copy of it to the Magistrate, the Additional Sessions Judge has held that the procedure of the Sub-Inspector not being strictly legal, the petitioners were not guilty of an offence under s. 353, being an offence committed against a public servant as such, but that they were guilty under the general law, namely, on the facts proved, guilty of an offence under s. 352, in that they pushed the Sub-Inspector otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation. The petitioners would certainly be guilty of this offence unless they were entitled in the circumstances to push the Sub-Inspector back in order to prevent him from searching Avadh's house. If the Sub-Inspector had proceeded strictly according to law, the petitioners would have had no right whatsoever to resist him. Now para. (1) of s. 99 of the Indian Penal Code, to which I have already referred, leaves private persons without any right of private defence against any act of a public servant which may not be strictly justifiable by law, provided it does not reasonably cause the apprehension of death or grievous hurt, and is done, or attempted to be done, by the public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office. The proposed house search could not have reasonably caused any apprehension of death or grievous hurt, and it was a Sub-Inspector of Police under colour of his office that proposed to make the search. The question then is whether the Sub-Inspector can be said to have acted in good faith on the occasion: if so, the petitioners were not entitled to resist him at all, but if otherwise, they were within their rights in keeping him out, and it is not alleged that they used more violence than was necessary to prevent him from conducting a search which was not strictly in accordance with the law. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has at one place in his judgment remarked that the Sub-Inspector was actuated by good faith; but I take the remark to mean no more than that the Sub-Inspector honestly believed the information that had reached him about the bicycle being concealed in Avadh's house. Such an honest belief was, however, not sufficient to bring the Sub-Inspector within the protection of the first paragraph of s. 99; for having regard to s. 52 of the Indian Penal Code, it was necessary for him, if he was to make the search "in good faith," to proceed with due care and attention. The search was to be made under s. 165, a section which authorised him to do so.

"after recording in writing the grounds of his belief and specifying in such writing the thing for which the search is to be made," and which required a copy of the record to be sent forthwith to the nearest Magistrate. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has found that none of these preliminaries to a legal search was complied with, and he has not found that the failure of the Sub-Inspector in this regard occurred in spite of "due care and attention". The evidence of the Sub-Inspector gives no ground for holding that there was anything to prevent him from complying with the requirements in question; indeed his case was that he had complied with them, but this was not accepted by the Additional Sessions Judge.

In the view that I have taken it is unnecessary to discuss Lal Mea v. Emperor (2) and Emperor v. Param Sukh (3) which were cited on behalf of the petitioners. The Assistant Government-Advocate has cited 71 Ind. Cas. 503, [Gokal v. Emperor (4)], but that was a case where the constables who had arrested a woman on a defective warrant were clearly acting in good faith so that it was not open to the woman's friends to assault them. In view of the Sub-Inspector's unexplained failure to comply with the requirements of s. 165 as found by the learned Sessions Judge, and especially of the failure to comply with the requirements of cl. (1) of that section, I find it difficult to hold that he was acting in good faith, within the meaning of s. 52 of the Indian Penal Code, and the petitioners were, it seems to me, justified in pushing him and his constable back in order to prevent a search which was not strictly in accordance with the law. I would, therefore, reverse the conviction and with it the sentence passed on the petitioners under s. 352 of the Indian Penal Code.

(2) 93 Ind. Cas. 1038; 43 C. L. J. 184; 27 Cr. L. J. 542; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 663.

(3) 91 Ind. Cas. 43; 23 A. L. J. 1037; L. R. 6 A. 173 Cr.; 27 Cr. L. J. 11; A. I. R. 1926 All. 147.

(4) 71 Ind. Cas. 503; 20 A. L. J. 921; A. I. R. 1923 All. 87; 24 Cr. L. J. 151; 45 A. 142.

As a matter of fact the charge that led to this conviction was in these terms:

"That you on or about the 12th day of April, 1930, at Musapur, police-station Maner, used criminal force to Sub-Inspector J. N. Misser and constable Suraj Singh with intent to prevent them from discharging their duty as public servants and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 353....."

This is really wide enough to cover the action of Gopi and Mahabir in preventing the Sub-Inspector and the constable from catching and arresting Avadh when he was going away with the bicycle. There is force, however, in the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners that the charge under s. 353 was taken by all concerned to be confined to the act of pushing the Sub-Inspector and the constable and that the obstruction offered to them later on when Avadh was going away with the bicycle formed the subject of the charge under s. 341 of the Indian Penal Code. The lower Courts have found an offence under this section brought home to Gopi and Mahabir. In showing cause why sentence should not be pronounced against them under this section, learned Counsel has found it impossible on the facts found to challenge the conviction, but he has laid stress on the fact that the trying Magistrate, who knew all the circumstances, considered a separate sentence unnecessary. The offence was, however, not by any means venial. The Sub-Inspector of the thana was making an investigation into the theft of a bicycle and was acting under colour of his office in proposing to search the house for that article. It was fortunate for these petitioners and for their relative Avadh that the Sub-Inspector's procedure was marked by irregularities; they could have had no knowledge of this, but in their defence they were entitled to rely on it. When, however, it came to Avadh escaping with the bicycle and the Sub-Inspector and the constable going after him to arrest him—arrest him under s. 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure—Gopi and Mahabir acted lawlessly and without any technical excuse to be subsequently found for them. Gopi is the father and Mahabir some kind of uncle of Avadh but their offence really comes under a much graver section, viz.

s. 353 though fortunately for them they were only charged under s. 341 for this act, and they are naturally not prepared to face a retrial. Having regard to Gopi's age, however, I would sentence him under s. 341 of the Indian Penal Code not to any substantive imprisonment but to a fine of Rs. 200, with one week's simple imprisonment in default, and I would sentence Mahabir under the same section to one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 with one week's simple imprisonment in default.

Avadh who has been acquitted will be entitled to the refund of any part of the fine that he may have paid.

Macpherson, J.—I agree to the order proposed.

I am inclined to hold that the conviction under s. 353 is good at least against Gopi and Mahabir because of their obstruction to the arrest of Avadh. But as it is true that the Court below dealt vaguely with this part of the case it is not necessary to press the point, especially in view of the sentence proposed which is adequate punishment for these petitioners. On the question of law I prefer not to express a final opinion as to whether failure on the part of the Sub-Inspector to comply with s. 165(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure would give room for a finding that the search was "without due care and attention". But I am satisfied that failure on his part to comply with s. 165(5) would afford no ground for such a finding.

COUNTNEY-TREVELL, O. J., AND DHAVLE, J.
SACHINDRA MOHAN GHOSH

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BIHAR AND ORISSA.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 12 (2)—Allowances—Salary of Receiver of property partly assessable and partly not—Portion of salary incurred in respect of assessable property, whether allowable as deduction.

Where a Receiver was appointed to manage the property of an estate consisting of assessable income in the shape of mining royalties and agricultural income which was not assessable to income-tax:

Held, that s. 12 (2) of the Income Tax Act did not require that the whole of the salary of the Receiver should be incurred solely for earning the income before any part of it could be deducted in calculating the assessable income and that, therefore, the portion of the Receiver's salary which was incurred for the making or earning of the royalty income could be deducted as expenditure under s. 12 (2).

Messrs. K. P. Jayaswal and N. N. Roy, for the Assessee.

Mr. C. M. Agarwala, for the Commissioner of Income-Tax.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—The facts which have given rise to the present reference may be simply stated. The assessee is the Receiver and manager appointed by the High Court of Calcutta to take charge of and manage the property known as the Jheria Raj estate. He was appointed in proceedings in which the widows of the late proprietor sued the present proprietor and he was appointed at a salary of Rs. 1,000 a month. The property of the Raj consists to the extent of an annual income of about 6 lakhs, of mining royalties and to the extent of about Rs. 60,000 of agricultural income which, of course, is not taxable under the Indian Income Tax Act. The assessee claimed under s. 12 (2) of the Act to deduct his salary as an allowance for expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning the income of the estate. The Income-tax Officer allowed as a deduction one-half of the salary. The matter went on appeal before the Assistant Commissioner and he disallowed the salary altogether as a deduction on the ground, as stated by him, that the purpose of the appointment of the Receiver was merely that he might look after the interests of the parties to the litigation and that he was not appointed for the purpose of earning the income of the estate. This view of the matter has been upheld by the Commissioner on appeal and the case reaches us for final decision.

First, it may be said that so far as the assessee's position as a manager is concerned the mere fact that he was appointed by the Court by reason of litigation to my mind makes no difference at all. He is in exactly the same position as though he were a manager appointed on behalf of a minor or a sick person who could not personally manage the estate and was forced to have somebody appointed for that purpose. His functions are twofold. He has to manage that part of the estate of which the income is not assessable, that is to say, the agricultural part of the estate, and he also has to manage that part of the estate of which the income is taxable, that is to say, the property which produces the mining

"Such income, profits and gains shall be computed after making allowance for any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning such income, profits or gains, provided that no allowance shall be made on account of any personal expenses of the assessee."

Now it is contended on behalf of the Department that the true construction of this section is that if any part of the salary paid to the manager is to be attributed to some function other than that of making or earning of the taxable income no part of the aggregate salary may be split off and treated as attributable to the making or earning of the income. But in my opinion sub-s. (2) does not require that the whole of the Receiver's salary should be incurred solely for the purpose of earning income before any part of it can be deducted even if such part may represent no more than the Receiver's services in earning the income. The most cogent illustration of the position was that, I think, offered in the course of the argument by my brother Dhavle who put the case in this way:— Suppose that there had formerly been two managers one to manage the agricultural part of the estate and the other to manage the royalty part and suppose the former was paid Rs. 200 a month and the latter Rs. 800 a month. In such circumstances it could not be doubted that the salary paid at the rate of Rs. 800 a month could be deducted as being incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning the royalty income. But if it was found as a matter of convenience better to appoint a single manager at Rs. 1,000 a month to carry on both such functions, if that course were taken, could it be argued that no part of the salary of such a manager could be attributed to the earning of the royalty income? In my opinion the answer to the question propounded, that is to say, is any portion of the salary of the Receiver allowable as expenditure under sub-s. (2) of s. 12 should be in the affirmative. We are not called upon to state what the proportion attributable to the tax-paying part of the estate is or what amount should be deducted. That will be for the proper tribunal when the question arises. The assessee having succeeded in his contention should, in my opinion receive Rs. 200 as his costs.

Dhavle, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 117, 118—Security for keeping peace—Nature of surety required—Direction to produce 'surety in moveable property', legality of.

In making an order under s. 117, Criminal Procedure Code, calling upon a person to give security for keeping the peace there should be no restriction in the order itself that the accused should produce sureties in moveable property. So far as the order goes the Magistrate should follow the words of s. 117 and the bond executed by the sureties should be in the form given in the schedule. [p. 66, col. 2]

Obiter.—If the Magistrate has any apprehension that the sureties may part with their properties and be unable to fulfil the undertaking, he may, by way of precaution, accept a hypothecation bond from them as a condition precedent to their being accepted as reliable sureties. [ibid.]

Reference submitted by the Sessions Judge, Benares, as per his letter No. 61-III, dated the 25th March, 1931.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Order—On the 15th of February, 1931, the Magistrate issued an order under s. 117 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, against Hari Har accused to execute a personal bond in Rs. 1,000, with two sureties in like amounts, each in cash, for keeping the peace until the conclusion of the enquiry.

The Sessions Judge modified the order on the 24th of February, 1931, and ordered his release on his executing a bond for Rs. 1,000, with two sureties in like amounts to the satisfaction of the Court concerned. The accused, however, was not released, because he was involved in another offence. When the District Magistrate was moved he pointed out that the Sessions Judge had no power to interfere with the order under s. 107 read with s. 117 (3), Criminal Procedure Code but might have reported to the High Court. When the matter came up again before the Sessions Judge, he had admitted that he had mistaken the order to be an order of bail and had wrongly amended it. He passed a fresh order on the 12th of March, that unless the original order was amended by the Magistrate in the light of the observations contained in his order dated the 24th of February, 1931, the record be submitted to the High Court with the recommendation that the words "in cash" be deleted. On receipt of this direction, the Magistrate on the 19th of March, amended his previous order and substituted "two reliable sureties in moveable properties" instead of "two cash sureties." The Magistrate this time used the word "Securities" without carefully reading his previous order which had said "sureties". Then on the 21st of March the Sessions Judge again expressed an opinion that "a surety in cash" had no meaning at all. He directed the record to be submitted to the High Court, and asked for the explanation of the Magistrate. The Sessions Judge gave his reasons for holding that it is not open to a Magistrate to direct that the property which is offered as security by the sureties be of a particular nature. The Magistrate submitted his explanation and the District Magistrate added a supplementary explanation stressing that the Magistrate was not bound to accept security of immoveable property, which would cause considerable difficulty in realisation in case of forfeiture. After this, the Sessions Judge passed a fresh order on the 25th of March, 1931, submitting the record to the High Court along with a copy of the previous order passed by him in the case of another accused person, dated the 7th of July, 1930, which gave fuller reasons in support of his view.

The case went backwards and forwards on so many occasions because there was a difference of opinion between the Sessions Judge and the Magistrate as to the nature of the security that can be demanded.

No reported case has been brought to my notice which would throw light on this divergence of views.

It is to be noted that both s. 117 and s. 118 refer to the execution of a bond by the accused "with or without sureties." The expression "security" is not used. The sections do not contemplate the furnishing of a registered hypothecation bond as good security. It obviously requires guarantees given by the sureties.

Section 118 applies equally to an order to give security for keeping the peace under s. 107 and for maintaining good behaviour under ss. 104, 109 and 110, Criminal Procedure Code.

In Sch. V a form is given for the execution of a bond by sureties for the accused's good behaviour. The form merely requires a written undertaking given by the sureties that in case of the accused making default, they bind themselves jointly and severally to forfeit to His Majesty a particular sum of money. It does not go on to add that they are hypothecating any property for that sum. It seems to me that the same form is intended for sureties for the accused's keeping the peace. It is, therefore, obvious that what the Code requires is that there should be sureties able to make good the amount. These persons should be reliable and be possessed of such status, means or property that the amount would be recovered by seizure of their properties or, if arrested, they would make good the amount.

No doubt under s. 514, Criminal Procedure Code when there is a forfeiture of the bond, the Magistrate cannot proceed by attaching and selling any immoveable property of the surety but can only seize his moveable property. But if the penalty cannot be recovered by attachment and sale of the moveable properties the person can be arrested and imprisoned. This in many cases would be just as effective to compel him to pay up, provided, of course, he has the means. It, therefore, does not follow that a person cannot be a good surety unless he is actually possessed of moveable properties sufficient to yield the amount of his bond. Indeed, moveable properties which can be easily removed or transferred may in most cases be the flimsiest security. It may equally well happen that a person is of respectability and good social status and possessed of considerable immovable property and one who can be relied upon to procure that amount in case of the accused's default, and yet he may not for the time being be in possession of moveable properties of the value of the bond. There would be no reason to reject such a person merely because some inconvenience might be felt afterwards in recovering the amount from him. It would be unfair to accused persons if any general rule or practice were laid down that no person who is not possessed of sufficient moveable properties should be accepted as a surety.

It would not be improper for a Magistrate in case of doubt to permit a surety who has signed the bond in the form mentioned above also to execute separately a registered bond hypothecating immovable property in order to satisfy the Magistrate that he is possessed of sufficient means. But neither such a registered security bond is necessary under the provisions of the Code, nor is a Magistrate bound to accept such security if offered.

The Magistrate has to satisfy himself as to the means and station in life of the surety as well as his character. He has to exercise his discretion in accepting him ; but that discretion must not be exercised in an arbitrary manner. The primary consideration is whether the surety is likely to fulfil the undertaking given by him.

The amended order of the Magistrate says "two reliable sureties in moveable property". Although I do not agree with all that the Sessions Judge has said, I agree with him that in the order itself there should be no restriction as regards moveable property. So far as the order goes, the Magistrate should follow the words of s. 117 and not introduce the restrictive words "in moveable property". When sureties are produced the, Magistrate should consider whether, having regard to all the circumstances, they are fit persons to be accepted or not. When they have been accepted, the bond executed by them should be in the form given in the schedule. If the Magistrate has any apprehension that the sureties may part with their properties and be unable to fulfil the undertaking, he may by way of precaution accept a hypothecation bond from them as a condition precedent to their being accepted as reliable sureties.

I accordingly order that the words "in moveable property" after the word "sureties" in the order of the Magistrate dated the 9th of March, 1931, be deleted.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—'A person who is interested', meaning of—Payment made in respect of certain estate—Estate going to opposite party in litigation—Right of payer to be recouped—Lien on estate.

The words 'a person who is interested' in s. 69, Contract Act, do not mean that the person who makes the payment must prove that he had such an interest as would stand the test of a judicial trial. All that is necessary for a person making a payment to recover it is that he should really believe and honestly believe that he must make the payment in his own interest. When a proprietor in good faith pending litigation makes the necessary payments for the preservation of the estate in dispute and the estate is afterwards adjudged to his opponent he should be recouped what he has so paid by the person who ultimately benefits by the payment, if he has failed through no fault of his own to reimburse himself out of the rents. *Munni Lal v. Judgment—The present proceedings arise out of First Appeal No. 79 of 1922 of this Court from the decree in which an appeal was filed before their Lordships of the Privy Council as Privy Council Appeal No. 12 of 1925. Their Lordships of the Privy Council decided the appeal, reversed the judgment of this Court but left one point to be determined by this Court and that point is, whether in the circumstances of the case, the plaintiffs cannot recover possession of the property decreed to them except on payment of a sum of Rs. 7,200 and interest thereon or any other sum?

The judgment has been reported in the local law journal (1931) A.L.J. 453 [Munni Lal v. Tirloki Nath (1)] and is of course also on the record. The facts are given there and we shall not state them in detail again.

Two questions have been argued before us. The first is whether the claim on behalf of the descendants of Gokul Nath comes within the purview of s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act? and secondly, if it does, whether the defendants can insist on being paid as a condition precedent to the plaintiffs getting possession?

On the first point we do not feel any difficulty in holding in favour of the defendants. Section 69 of the Indian Contract Act runs as follows:—

"A person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and who therefore, pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other."

In the litigation that took place at the instance of Narain Singh and which ended with the decree in his favour in this Court on 18th January, 1912, (page 292) there can be no doubt that the title of Gokul Nath's mother Kashi Dai was entirely negatived. There were two judgments and each party relied on one of them. For the defendants it was argued that the judgment of 18th April, 1895, (page 221) operated as res judicata against the plaintiffs and on behalf of the plaintiffs it was contended that the judgment of 18th January, 1912, (page 292) operated as res judicata. The Court of first instance held that the later judgment operated as res judicata. This Court held that the earlier judgment operated as res judicata and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the first Court was right.

There can be no doubt that it was a difficult proposition of law to decide, viz., whether in spite of the decree given to Narain Singh, the question of title was or not open as between the defendants?

This Court thought that the judgment in Narain Singh's favour, although it allowed Narain Singh to sell the property in suit as the property of Amar Nath, left the question of title open as between the heir of Amar Nath and the heirs of Kashi Dai and her son Gokul Nath. In their judgment which was reversed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, the learned Judges held that the payment by Gokul Nath was a payment made in good faith and in the belief that his title to the house was a good one (see page 97 of the printed record) It is impossible to believe that Gokul Nath would go and raise money on the security of his own property, besides the property in suit, and pay the large sum of Rs. 7,200 to Narain Singh, if he had not believed that the judgment obtained by Narain Singh did not settle the question of title as between himself and Amar Nath's heirs.

That being the case, the question is whether Gokul Nath acted as a person interested in payment within the meaning of s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act?

There are numerous cases including a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in which it has been held, in effect, that the words "a person who is interested" do not mean that the person who makes the payment must prove that he had such an interest as would stand the test of a judicial trial. The decisions point to the conclusion that all that is necessary for a person making a payment to recover is that he should really believe and honestly believe that he must make the payment in his own interest. If we accept this interpretation, we should have no hesitation in holding that Gokul Nath came within the rule of law.

In the case of Dakhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy (2) the plaintiff paid the money when he had a decree in his favour, which decree was subsequently reversed in appeal. At page 148* of the report their Lordships of the Privy Council are reported to have said:

"Now, it seems to their Lordships to be common justice that when a proprietor in good faith pending litigation makes the necessary payments for the preservation of the estate in dispute, and the estate is afterwards adjudged to his opponent, he should be recouped what he has so paid by the person who ultimately benefits by the payment, if he has failed through no fault of his own, to reimburse himself out of the rents."

It has been argued that this case does not apply because Gokul Nath had the judgment of this Court dated 18th January, 1912, before him and as a sane person should have seen that the judgment took away any vestige of title that might have otherwise remained in him. We have however already met this point and have shown that in spite of this judgment Gokul Nath had occasion to believe and did believe that the judgment was not conclusive as between the defendants and that the earlier judgment yet stood in his favour.

Several other cases, viz., Tulsha Kunwar v. Jageshwar Prasad (3), Khushal Singh v. Khawani Lal (4), Bindubashinee Dassee v. Harendra Lal Roy (5) and Radha Madhub v. Sasti Ram (6) have been cited on behalf of the defendants.

As against these cases, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has cited three cases decided by this Court, viz., Janki Prasad v. Baldeo Prasad (7), Khuddo v. Durga Prasad (8) and Chedi Lal v. Bhagwan Das (9).

We have examined all the cases cited by either side. These cases may be divided into two lots. In one set of cases, it was found that the person who made the payment was actually interested in making the payment and did make the payments in good faith. In the other set of cases it was found, and in this set come the cases cited on behalf of the plaintiffs, that where the plaintiff knew perfectly well and had no occasion to believe otherwise, that he had no vestige of title under which he could make a payment, he could not recover.

There is no difficulty really in the law itself, but the difficulty arises in the application of it to the particular facts of a case. We are of opinion that s. 69, as interpreted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Dakhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy (2) does apply and Gokul Nath was interested in making the payment and if he had brought a suit within the period of limitation, the plaintiffs could not possibly have resisted it on the ground that they were not bound to reimburse him.

The second point raised is of some difficulty and no case has been cited on behalf of either side in support of the arguments advanced.

The argument on behalf of the defendants is that s. 69 is based on equitable principles and that no question of limitation arises when the claim is made by the defendants. On the other hand, the argument for the plaintiffs is this. Supposing that s. 69 applied, it gave only a personal remedy to Gokul Nath against the heirs of Amar Nath and there was no charge in favour of Gokul Nath on the particular property now in suit. It is further argued that there being no charge, it was open to Gokul Nath, if he had brought a suit to recover his money, to realise it by sale of any property belonging to the heirs of Amar Nath and, therefore, it cannot be said that the payment is particularly connected with the property now in suit and with no other property.

There is a difference of opinion among the High Courts of India as to whether a person, who makes a payment on account of another, in respect of an immoveable property, acquires or not a lien or charge on the property so saved, by way of a salvage lien. In this High Court the principal case is that of Chitor Mal v. Shib Lal (10), and the same view is taken in Calcutta in Kinu Ram v. Mozaffar Hussain (11). In Madras a contrary view was taken and a charge was granted and Bombay followed Madras. In Bombay however, a contrary view was taken later on and in accordance with the view of the Allahabad High Court. In England no charge is allowed (see Coote's Law of Mortgage, 1927, page 1381). As members of the Allahabad High Court, we are bound to follow the Full Bench decision of this Court and must hold that no charge is created by the payment. That being so, it appears to us that it is not open to the defendants to say that this particular property now in suit must make good the money which Gokul Nath was entitled to recover at the hands of the heirs of Amar Nath.

We decide accordingly, and hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for possession as was granted to them by their Lordships of the Privy Council without any condition sought to be attached by the defendants. We see no reason to alter the order as to costs as made by the Subordinate Judge whose judgment was ultimately upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council. As to further costs incurred since the case was remitted to this Court it should follow the event and, therefore, we direct that the defendants shall pay the costs of the plaintiffs of the present hearing.

Second Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 31st May, 1929.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and K. Verma, for the Appellants

Dr K. N. Katju and Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal in a suit brought for redemption of a mortgage executed by Dhondha Rai and others on the 19th of September, 1878, in favour of the predecessors in-interest of the defendants in this suit. The plaintiffs claimed to represent the mortgagors and their suit has been dismissed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge, first, on the ground that the plaintiffs had no right or title to redeem the mortgage as the legal representatives of the mortgagors, and, secondly, because the mortgagees had acquired a proprietary title by adverse possession for more than twelve years.

The plaintiffs' ancestors were the mortgagees of Dhondha Rai and others in virtue of two deeds executed on 23rd August, 1869, and the 16th of December, 1876 respectively. A notice of foreclosure was served by the mortgagees on the mortgagors in accordance with Regulation XVII of 1806 on the 23rd of August 1877 and the order of foreclosure was passed on the 2nd of October, 1877. Under Regulation XVII of 1806 a year's grace was allowed to the mortgagors for satisfaction of the mortgage amount, and that year of grace expired on the 23rd of August, 1878. The property to be foreclosed was contained in twelve villages and on the 12th of July, 1878, before the expiry of the year of grace a compromise was entered into between the mortgagees and the mortgagors by which it was agreed that if the mortgagors relinquished their expropriatory rights in 3½ villages those 3½ villages would be accepted by the mortgagees in satisfaction of their claim and the remaining 8½ villages would be released from foreclosure. This compromise, however, did not come into effect as the mortgagors did not forego their claim to expropriatory rights, and in 1880 a suit was brought by the mortgagees for possession in accordance with the order of the foreclosure. After the expiry of the year of grace on the 19th of September, 1878, Dhondha and other mortgaged seventeen bighas 'sir' land situated in the 8½ villages which would have been released from foreclosure if the compromise had taken effect to the predecessors of the present defendants. When the present suit was brought for redemption of this mortgage by the present plaintiffs they were met with the defence that as they had become absolute owners of the property by foreclosure on the expiry of the year of grace on the 23rd of August, 1878, they could not sue for redemption of a mortgage executed by the former proprietors of the land on the 19th of September, 1878, because the mortgagors had no right subsisting at the time of the mortgage and, therefore, could not be represented by the present plaintiffs who were the actual proprietors at that time.

In the Courts below the plaintiffs pleaded that they did not become absolute proprietors on the expiry of the year of grace because their title was kept in abeyance by the compromise and they should not be held to have acquired the absolute rights until the conclusion of the suit brought by them for possession in the year 1880. This suit was contested and went on appeal to the High Court whose decision is reported as Dhondha Rai v. Meghu Rai (1). This argument was supported by a reference to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Forbes v. Ameernissa Begum (2). But we do not consider that that judgment is an authority for the view put forward by the plaintiff-appellants. Indeed, this very argument was addressed to a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Ali Abbas v. Kalka Prasad (3) and rejected by them. The Full Bench held,

"that on the expiration of the year of grace, provided that anything remains to be paid under the mortgage and the proceedings under the Regulation were regular, all of which facts appear to have been found here, the title of the conditional vendee becomes that of an absolute vendee and the sale becomes an absolute sale on that date."

The subsequent proceedings taken to obtain possession were not necessary to establish the title of the vendees. Nor do we consider that the proposed compromise had any effect in postponing the rights of the present plaintiffs to absolute ownership. In that compromise there was a provision that if the mortgagors failed to carry out their part of the agreement the compromise would cease to operate and the foreclosure would take effect. We are of opinion, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge was right when he found that on the 19th of September, 1878, the present plaintiffs, and not the mortgagors, were the owners of the property mortgaged.

But the learned Subordinate Judge went on to hold that the mortgagors were at the time of the execution of the mortgage trespassers and made the mortgage as such. In this we consider that the Subordinate Judge was wrong, and this mistake vitiates his finding. At the time of the mortgage the mortgagors had a right in the mortgaged property as expropriators and it cannot be said that by their mortgage they conveyed no rights to the mortgagees. The mortgagees themselves were treated as being tenants, and a suit was brought for their ejection along with their mortgagors in the year 1903. That suit was decreed against the original mortgagors who were ejected, but the Revenue Court declined to eject the mortgagees on the ground that they were mortgagees of proprietary rights. This finding was not challenged at the time by any suit brought in the Civil Court. But that is immaterial in so far as the suit for redemption is concerned. There is nothing in the proceedings of 1903 which could give to the mortgagee any other title than that of a mortgagee, and if the present plaintiffs can be shown to have a right to redeem such a mortgage their failure to eject the mortgagees at that time operates as no bar to redemption. Indeed in our opinion, the fact that the present defendants accepted the position of mortgagees precludes them from acquiring a proprietary title by adverse possession. Possession for however long a period by a mortgagee can give him no title other than the title which he has acquired by his mortgage. The mortgage, therefore, if it can be held to have been a mortgage conveying any rights, is still in existence and can be redeemed by any persons entitled by law to redeem such a mortgage. In our opinion the mortgage was executed by persons who had an interest in the property mortgaged as expropriatory tenants. The right of those persons as expropriatory tenants was extinguished by their ejection in the year 1903. But those rights did not escheat to the Crown. They reverted to the zemindar as was held in the case of a mortgage of a fixed-rate tenancy by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Tulsi Ram Sahu v. Gur Dyal Singh (4). The persons in whom the Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for recovery of certain property sold by his mother, who was the certificated guardian, during his minority, to the defendant-appellant.

It appears that an application was made by the guardian to the District Judge for permission to mortgage the property in dispute. The District Judge made some enquiries to satisfy himself as regards the propriety of transfer of the minor's property and directed the guardian of the minor to produce the draft of the mortgage-deed for which sanction had been applied for. At a later date the draft of a sale-deed was filed. It has been found that the District Judge was under the impression that the draft produced before him was that of the proposed mortgage deed to which his permission referred. The District Judge, it has again been found, sanctioned the draft under the impression that it related to the transaction of mortgage to which proceedings before him referred. The sale-deed was eventually executed on the 1st June, 1918, for a sum of Rs. 500. The plaintiff-respondent instituted the suit which has given rise to this appeal on the 22nd January, 1927, claiming possession and impugning the sale-deed executed by his guardian as void. It was expressly stated in the plaint that he attained majority on the 1st December, 1923, a question on which the defendant-appellant joined issue. It is not necessary for us to find the exact date on which the plaintiff attained majority, as for purposes of the appeal it is enough to assume that the date given by the plaintiff is correct.

Both the Courts below have decreed the suit. The Court of first instance held that the permission of the District Judge was obtained by misrepresentation and fraud and that the plaintiff's suit was governed by 12 years' limitation provided for by Art. 144. On these findings it decreed the plaintiff's suit for possession subject to payment by him of a sum of Rs. 244, part of the consideration of the sale-deed (namely, Rs. 500) which according to that Court was warranted by legal necessity. In appeal before the lower Appellate Court the question of limitation does not seem to have been raised either in the petition of appeal or in arguments, and the learned Additional Subordinate Judge affirmed the decree passed by the Court of first instance without reference to the question of limitation.

The only point urged in second appeal is that the plaintiff's suit is, on the face of the plaint, barred by limitation. We may clear the ground by disposing of the contention put forward before us by the learned Advocate for the respondents that the plea of limitation was abandoned before the lower Appellate Court. It is true that the finding of the Court of first instance that Art. 144 of the Indian Limitation Act applied was not impugned in the grounds of appeal. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is also silent as to any question of limitation having been raised before it in course of the arguments. We are inclined to think that the Pleader who represented the appellant in the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the question of limitation had been rightly decided by the Court of first instance. We are, however, of opinion that it is open to the appellant to re-agitate the question of limitation on the facts admitted by the plaintiff-respondent. If there had been any complication as regards facts on which the plea rests so that the finding of the lower Appellate Court could possibly have been in favour of the respondent, we might not have entertained the plea of limitation under the circumstances referred to; but the argument addressed to us rests on facts admitted by the plaintiff himself. The date on which, according to the plaintiff-respondent, he attained majority was the 1st December, 1923, and the suit having been instituted on the 22nd January, 1927, was barred by three years' rule, if it is applicable.

The only question is whether Art. 44 or Art. 144 of the Indian Limitation Act applies. It is argued that as permission of the District Judge was obtained by practising fraud, the transaction entered into by the guardian in pursuance of such permission is void. The contention is not, in our opinion, sound. Section 30, Guardians and Wards Act, declares that the transfer made by a certificated guardian without the permission of the District Judge is voidable. If the permission of the District Judge was obtained through fraud or misrepresentation, it is certainly void, but the transaction itself is not void on that score. A permission obtained by a fraudulent misrepresentation being void is a nullity, and a transfer ostensibly made in pursuance of such permission must be considered to be one made without permission, and as such it is not voidable under s. 30, Guardians and Wards Act. In this view, there can be no doubt that Art. 44 of the Limitation Act is applicable, and the plaintiff cannot avail himself of the longer period provided for by Art. 144 for a suit for possession if his claim to have the voidable alienation made by the guardian during the plaintiff's minority set aside is barred. In the case before us, the suit having been admittedly brought more than three years from the date the plaintiff attained majority is clearly barred.

The result is that this appeal must succeed. It is accordingly allowed, and the decrees passed by the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed. The defendant appellant is not allowed costs incurred by him in the lower Appellate Court. He will have his costs of the Court of first instance and of this Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Jurisdiction to take proceedings—'Person within jurisdiction,' meaning of.

For initiating proceedings against a person under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, it is not necessary that that person should reside within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate; it is enough if he is within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. But a person who resides outside the jurisdiction cannot be held to be a person within the jurisdiction merely because he is present in Court in obedience to a summons issued by the Magistrate under s. 112. [p 73, col. 2.]

Messrs. S M Husain and K. Masud Hasan, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Magistrate of Ghazipur purporting to be one on appeal from an order of the Joint Magistrate of that District passed in proceedings under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, pending before him against the present applicants, who are residents of Jaunpur and took objection to the jurisdiction of the Joint Magistrate taking proceedings under the aforesaid section. The objection was overruled. They moved the District Magistrate who dismissed "the appeal." No appeal lay to the District Magistrate from an interlocutory order of the kind passed by the Joint Magistrate and the proceedings before the District Magistrate should be regarded as those in revision under s. 435, Criminal Procedure Code and I treat them as such. The revision to this Court is in no way affected by error of procedure, if any, in moving the District Magistrate.

The proceedings under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code were initiated by an application presented before the Joint Magistrate by one Hakim Syed Husain, a Mukhtar practising in the Criminal Courts at Ghazipur, complaining that the present applicants were likely to commit a breach of the peace. It appears that the parties were interested in a certain waqf as to which a civil suit had been instituted by the present applicants. Certain allegations made by them in the plaint were considered by Hakim Syed Husain to be defamatory. Accordingly the latter instituted criminal proceedings before a Magistrate in the Ghazipur District for prosecution of the present applicants for an offence under s. 500, Indian Penal Code. The applicants being accused in the aforesaid case, had to come from Jaunpur to Ghazipur on the dates fixed for hearing. The Hakim's application for action being taken against them under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, which was made during the pendency of the defamation case, alleged that the present applicants intimidated him when they came to Ghazipur for the defamation case threatening to institute some case against the complainant, presumably false, in some Court in the Jaunpur District and when he (the complainant) would go to that place for such case he would be molested. The complaint is not clearly worded and placing a construction most favourable to the complainant it amounts to an allegation that the applicants are likely to commit a breach of the peace in Ghazipur and Jaunpur and that the occasion on which a breach of the peace in Ghazipur was apprehended would be the visit of the applicants to that place for purposes of the defamation case. Assuming this allegation to be true the question is whether the Joint Magistrate of Ghazipur has jurisdiction to take proceedings under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, against the applicants who are residents of Jaunpur but have to visit Ghazipur for the purposes of the defamation case.

The answer to the question formulated above turns on the right interpretation of s. 107 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, which provides that no proceedings under that section can be taken unless both the person informed against and the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended are within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The contention raised by the applicants is that they are not residents of Jaunpur and go to Jaunpur only for the purposes of the defamation case and the Joint Magistrate has no jurisdiction to proceed against them. Section 107 (2) makes no reference to the residence of the persons proceeded against; all that it provides is that if the such persons "are" not within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate his jurisdiction is ousted. A person may be within the limits of a Magistrate's jurisdiction and yet may not have residence within such limits. At the same time to hold that a person 'is' within the local limits of a Magistrate's jurisdiction only because he is present in Court when the Magistrate draws up his order under s. 112, Criminal Procedure Code, having appeared in obedience to a summons issued by the Magistrate, is to make the section nugatory. Section 114 of the same Code empowers the Magistrate to issue a summons to a person against whom he decided to take proceedings under s. 107, sub-s. (2) of which is imperative that "no proceedings shall be taken" unless the person informed against is within the local limits of the jurisdiction." Issuing a summons under s. 114 is part of such proceedings and it is clear that if the person informed against is not within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction when the proceedings are to be initiated he has no jurisdiction.

The record shows that the applicants were in Jaunpur when the complaint was filed and process issued. They appeared in obedience to the summons served upon them in Jaunpur when the order under s. 112, Criminal Procedure Code, was read out to them. As already stated they took objection to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take proceedings under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, against them.

In the view I take of the question involved in this revision it must succeed. It is accordingly allowed and the proceedings so far as they were taken by the Joint Magistrate are quashed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55 (2)—Sale—Covenant for title—Provision that vendee may sue for refund of price—Whether excludes suit for damages on partial dispossession.

Where a sale-deed provided that if the vendee was dispossessed of the whole or any portion of the property sold on account of defect in the vendor's title the vendee shall have a right to recover his consideration money along with damages from the property transferred or from other property of the vendor, and the vendee being dispossessed of a portion by a stranger, instituted a suit for recovery of a proportionate part of the price paid:

Held, that the covenant in the sale-deed that the vendee might recover the entire consideration amount was only an enabling provision intended for the benefit of the vendee and did not exclude the implied warranty of title contemplated by s. 55 (2), Transfer of Property Act, and the suit for a proportionate part of the price alone was maintainable. [p. 74, col. 1.]

Second Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 11th February, 1929.

Mr. P. N. Saprú, for the Appellant.

Messrs. U. S. Bajpai and G. S. Pathak, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendant and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for damages for breach of a covenant, alleged to be express and in the alternative, said to be in a sale-deed dated 22nd March, 1912, executed by the defendant-appellant in favour of the plaintiff-respondent for a sum of Rs 2,000, conveying certain house property. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has decreed the plaintiff's claim to a smaller amount than that claimed by the plaintiff.

The deed recites that the vendor has placed the vendee in possession of the entire vended property and that part of the property was the subject of a deed of gift in favour of one Jwala Prasad but that the vendor subsequently cancelled it by executing a deed of annulment. The implication of these recitals is that the vendor is the absolute owner of the property in spite of the infructuous deed of gift referred to.

One of the clauses of the sale-deed provided that

"If, God forbid, the whole of the property transferred, or any portion thereof, goes out of the possession of the vendee on account of any transfer or incumbrance etc., by her, or by her ancestors, or by any person who claims to be the owner of the property, on the basis of any law, custom or shastra, the vendee shall have a right to recover his consideration money along with damages and costs from the property transferred or from other moveable or immoveable property of hers."

The vendee was resisted in taking possession of the property to which the deed of gift and the deed of annulment already referred to related. The vendee and the vendor both instituted proceedings for recovery of the property, covered by them; but they were unsuccessful. Thereupon, the plaintiff-respondent brought the present suit for recovery of a proportionate amount of the consideration paid under the sale-deed.

The defence was that no warranty of title was given by the vendor to the vendee and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover a proportionate part of the consideration paid under the sale-deed. There were other defences also, which it is not necessary to mention for the purposes of this appeal.

The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's claim, as already stated, holding that the covenant, contained in the sale deed, did not entitle the plaintiff to a proportionate amount of the consideration. The lower Appellate Court has taken a contrary view on that question and has held, in addition, that there is an implied warranty of title under s. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant argues: (1) that the implied covenant of title in terms of s. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act is excluded by the express covenant, contained in the deed and relied on by the plaintiff, and (2) that the plaintiff-respondent is bound to have the sale transaction rescinded, as provided in the covenant. According to this contention the only remedy which the plaintiff-respondent has under the covenant referred to is to restore to the vendor so much of the vended property as came into his possession under the sale-deed and then claim refund of the consideration of the sale-deed. The express covenant undoubtedly entitles the vendee, on being dispossessed from part of the property sold, to recover the whole of the consideration, and the fact that he can do so by sale of the vended property clearly indicates that the vendee should treat such property as belonging to the vendor. Such a procedure clearly implies annulment of the sale. It is contended that the warranty of title and the vendee's remedy in case of a breach thereof being thus provided for, he cannot avail of the implied warranty under s. 55 (2) Transfer of Property Act, or claim damages on its breach. We are of opinion that the covenant in question is an enabling clause, intended for the benefit of the vendee, and confers a right, which he would not otherwise possess, and which he can exercise in addition to any right which the law gives him. There is nothing in the sale-deed which excludes an implied warranty of title, contemplated by s. 55 (?), Transfer Property Act, nor is there anything in the sale-deed which limits the plaintiff's remedy to the rescission of the contract referred to in the covenant in question. In this view, the plaintiff respondent is entitled to damages for breach of the implied warranty of title. As a measure of such damages, the lower Appellate Court has decreed to him a proportionate part of the price, having regard to the value of the property which the plaintiff could not recover and the value of the property in his possession. No question has been raised as regards the amount of damages awarded by the lower Appellate Court being excessive.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XLI, r. 5—Appeal from preliminary decree—Power to stay execution of final decree—Inherent powers of Court.

The Appellate Court has ample power under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, to order stay of execution of a final decree in a mortgage suit during the pendency of an appeal from the preliminary decree.

Messrs. S. K. Dar, Panna Lal, Gopi Nath Kunzru, Vishwa Mittra and U. S. Gupta, for the Applicants.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Banke Behari, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is an application for stay of execution of a final decree passed in a suit based on a mortgage. A preliminary decree had been previously passed. The mortgagor preferred a first appeal to this Court impugning the correctness of the preliminary decree. In the meantime an application was made by the mortgagee to the Court of first instance for the preparation of a final decree. The mortgagor then made an application to this Court praying for stay of the proceedings in the Court of first instance for the preparation of the final decree. It was held by a learned Judge of this Court that proceedings for the preparation of a final decree could be taken pending an appeal from the preliminary decree. A final decree has since been passed by the Court of first instance, and the present application is for stay of execution of the final decree.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the learned Advocate for the mortgagee (opposite party) that this Court has no power to order the stay of the execution of the final decree, which is not itself under appeal. It is contended that, in so far as the appeal pending in this Court is from the preliminary decree, which is not itself capable of execution, no order for stay of execution can be passed under O. XLI, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The contention is so far correct that an order for stay of execution of the final decree cannot be passed under O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code; but the powers of this Court as regards stay of proceedings pending in the Court below are not exhaustively defined by O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code. If, having regard to the ends of justice it is expedient that the execution of the final decree should be stayed pending the appeal from the preliminary decree, this Court has got ample power to stay under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code. It cannot be denied that any interference with the preliminary decree in the appeal therefrom will have the effect of the final decree being vacated and that if execution of the final decree is allowed to proceed, rights may come into existence before the disposal of the appeal from the preliminary decree. In order to avoid possible complications, we think it is necessary in the ends of justice that the execution of the final decree be stayed pending the appeal from the preliminary decree. It may be, and generally is, expedient that proceedings for the preparation of the final decree should not be stayed pending an appeal from the preliminary decree, because the mere passing of a final decree will not, in any way, affect the rights of the parties to the appeal from the preliminary decree. On the other hand, if the preliminary decree is affirmed on appeal, some further time will be needed for proceedings leading to the final decree.

We are clearly of opinion that this Court has power under s. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, to order stay of execution of a final decree during the pendency of an appeal from the preliminary decree. We hold that the preliminary objection has no force, and is accordingly overruled.

As regards the merits, it is contended on behalf of the mortgagees (opposite parties) that the value of the mortgaged property is very much less than the decretal amount and that any delay in having the property sold is likely to raise the mortgage-money without any chance of its recovery in full from the mortgaged property. It is not disputed that the mortgagees' remedy under O. XXXIV, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, is barred. It is also admitted that the value of the property is less than the decretal amount. In these circumstances, it is obvious that the mortgagees are not likely to obtain satisfaction of the mortgage money from any property other than the mortgaged property. The applicants (mortgagors) should indemnify the mortgagees against possible loss which may be consequent on the order of stay. We are of opinion that the equitable course is to order the stay of execution of the final decree on the applicants (mortgagors) furnishing security to the extent of one year's interest on the decretal amount at the rate of interest laid down in the decree. Such interest comes to Rs. 8,000. Accordingly we allow this application on condition of the mortgagor-applicant's furnishing security for Rs. 8,000 to the satisfaction of the lower Court within three months. If security is not furnished within the aforesaid period, execution of the final decree shall proceed.

Agra Tenancy Act (I of 1901), s. 165—Suit for profits—Co-sharers collecting profits themselves—Lambardar's right to prescribed dues—Liability for negligence—Interest prior to suit.

Where the co-sharers are allowed by arrangement to make their own collection no question of the negligence of the lambardar arises if the total amount of rents is not collected. [p. 76, col. 2.]

In a suit for profits interest pendente lite is discretionary. But the plaintiff should ordinarily be allowed interest on excess collections, prior to the suit at 1 per cent. per mensem. [p. 77, col. 1.]

Second Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Jhansi, dated 17th April 1928.

Mr. K. N. Laghate, for the Appellant.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit by a co-sharer for accounts against the other co-sharers including the lambardar under s. 165 of the old Agra Tenancy Act. Only four points are urged in the grounds of appeal. The first is that as the lambardar was not realising the rents and distributing the profits but the co-sharers were making collection directly, the lambardar should not have been allowed the lambardar's remuneration at 5 per cent. This point has no force. The duties of the lambardar are manifold and are not confined to the realisation of rents and distribution of the profits. So long as he holds the office he is entitled to his prescribed dues.

The second point is that the decree should have been based on a gross rental against the lambardar. When it was conceded that by arrangement the co-sharers were allowed to make their own collection, no question of the negligence of the lambardar arose if the total amount of rents were not collected. In this suit it was unnecessary to go into the question of any alleged negligence of the lambardar. As regards the co-sharers the lower Appellate Court has acted rightly in allowing these co-sharers who had made collection to appropriate the full amount of their shares of profits according to the gross rental and account for the surplus only.

The third point urged is that the interest pendente lite should have been allowed at 12 per cent. and not at 6 per cent. The matter was discretionary and I am unable to interfere in the exercise of the discretion by the lower Appellate Court.

The fourth point is that interest should have been allowed before the suit. The Assistant Collector in making the calculation took into account the excess rents realised but did not calculate interest on the sum up to the time of the suit. He however granted future interest at Re. 0-8-0 per cent. per mensem. This presumably pendente lite and future interest. In the grounds of appeal before the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff urged that the lower Court in not allowing any interest or interest pendente lite, was wrong. Apparently the plaintiff urged not only that the rate of interest was too low but that interest previous to the suit should be allowed, though it was vaguely put. The judgment of the learned Judge shows that he has applied his mind only to the question of pendente lite interest. I think there is no reason why the plaintiff should not get interest on the excess collection prior to the suit. The rate of interest should be at one per cent. per mensem as mentioned in s. 225 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

I accordingly allow this appeal in part and modifying the decree of the lower Appellate Court increase the amount decreed by allowing interest at one per cent. per mensem simple on the excess amount calculated from the dates of the expiry of the Fasli years during which they fell due. The office will have to calculate this amount and put it in the decree. I direct the parties to receive and pay costs in proportion to their success and failure.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1—Decree directing mesne profits to be settled in execution—Application for final decree—Mesne profits disallowed—Appeal—Court-fee payable.

Where a suit for recovery of possession was decreed and in respect of mesne profits the Court ordered that "the amount will be settled in the execution department" and an application for final decree was made but the same was disallowed on the ground that the judgment did not direct payment of mesne profits and the plaintiff thereupon preferred an appeal:

Held, that the appeal was not against an order in execution but from an order amounting to a decree and the appellant should pay ad valorem Court-fee on the amount of mesne profits which had been claimed by him and disallowed.

Execution First Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 26th November, 1929.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Malik, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal has been filed as an appeal against an order made in execution of a decree. This seems to be wrong.

The appellant brought a suit for recovery of possession over three properties and he asked for mesne profits. The suit was decreed in respect of one of the properties and a certain order was passed in respect of mesne profits. It was to the effect, "The amount of mesne profits will be settled in the execution department."

The appellant made an application to the Court below for preparation of a final decree under the provisions of O XX, r. 12, (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. His application has been disallowed on the ground that the judgment did not direct payment of any mesne profits to the appellant. It is against this order that the present appeal has been filed.

The assessment of mesne profits is a proceeding in the suit and it has nothing to do with the execution department. When the mesne profits are assessed a final decree is to be passed under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code already quoted. The law requires the plaintiff in a claim for mesne profits, to assess the amount of mesne profits and to pay Court-fee on that amount. When on a subsequent enquiry an assessment of mesne profits is made, if any further Court-fee is payable, it has to be paid. On payment of the Court-fee a regular decree comes into existence. The same rule would apply to the present case.

The appellant has valued his claim for mesne profits at Rs. 15,106-12-7. His right to this amount has been negatived. His appeal is, therefore, directed against what amounts to a decree and not an order in the execution department. We hold that an ad valorem Court-fee is to be paid on the above mentioned sum.

We have heard the Counsel for the parties and they accept our finding as to the liability of the appellant to pay Court-fee as correct. The learned Counsel for the appellant asks for six weeks' time to make good the deficiency. We grant the time. After the deficiency is made good, the parties will be entitled to have such documents as they think necessary for the determination of the case translated and printed. The appeal will be treated as a regular appeal.

Mr. Malik for the respondent asks for costs. The question of costs will be determined when the matter is finally decided.

Usurious Loans Act (X of 1918), s. 2 (3)—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 79—Negotiable instrument—Usurious rate of interest—Power of Court to reduce rate.

Section 79, Negotiable Instruments Act, does not exclude the jurisdiction of the Court to reduce the rate of interest specified in a negotiable instrument, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon it by s. 2 (3), Usurious Loans Act.

First Appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 9th May, 1927.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Malaviya, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit brought by him for recovery of Rs. 10,616 on foot of a promissory-note, dated 8th March, 1925, executed by the defendant-respondent in lieu of Rs. 7,000 advanced in cash by the plaintiff. The interest stipulated in the promissory-note was at the rate of 30 per cent. per annum.

The only defence which it is necessary to take notice of for the purpose of the appeal has reference to the high rate of interest. The defendant pleaded that the rate of interest agreed on was excessive and that it was a fit case in which the Court should reduce it to a reasonable rate. The lower Court has decreed the suit, except so far that the interest has been reduced from 30 per cent. to 24 per cent.

The plaintiff has appealed claiming the interest at the contractual rate, while the defendant has preferred cross-objection praying for further reduction in the rate of interest. We have heard the learned Counsel on both sides, and are clearly of opinion that no interference is called for.

It has been argued by the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-appellant that s. 79 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is mandatory and that a Court has no power to reduce the rate of interest entered in a promissory note. We are unable to accede to this contention. The Negotiable Instruments Act must be read with other enactments passed subsequent thereto. If under the Usurious Loans Act, which was passed after the Negotiable Instruments Act but before the promissory-note in question was executed, the Court has a discretion to reduce interest in a proper case; there is nothing in s. 79 of the Negotiable Instruments Act which excludes such a discretion. The Usurious Loans Act, s. 2 (3), is applicable to all suits for the recovery of loans advanced after the commencement of that Act. It is quite general, and includes not only suits based on bonds but also on negotiable instruments. We are clearly of opinion that s. 79 does not exclude the jurisdiction of the Court conferred on it by the Usurious Loans Act.

The lower Court has found that 30 per cent. simple interest agreed to by the defendant was unreasonable in the circumstances in which the parties were at the time the loan was advanced. Nothing has been shown to us to justify the view contrary to that of the Court below in that respect. The rate of interest which has been allowed by the Court below is prima facie reasonable. We hold that the appeal and the cross-objection should both be dismissed. Accordingly the decree appealed from is upheld. The appeal and the cross-objection are dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 51, 52, application of—'Active prosecution', meaning of—Lis in mortgage suit, what is—Mortgage security, extent of continuance of.

The 'active prosecution' within the meaning of s. 52, Transfer of Property Act, must be deemed to continue so long as the suit is pending in appeal since the proceedings in the Appellate Court are merely a continuation of those in the suit. Gobind Chunder Raj v. Guru Churn Kurmoker (1), referred to. [p. 81, col. 1.]

In a mortgage suit the lis continues even after the final decree and subsists during the pendency of proceedings in execution. Persettam Narain v. Chhedda Lal (2), Sahib Chandra v. Lachmi Narain (3) and Surjiram Marwari v. Berhamdeo Persad (4), referred to. [p. 81, cols. 1 & 2; p. 82, col. 1.]

The mere fact that a judgment has been obtained on a mortgage does not extinguish the debt and the mortgage continues as a lien till it is satisfied or the judgment is barred by the statute of limitation. Bhawani Keer v. Mathura Prasad (5), Drake v. Mitchell (6) and Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (7), referred to. [p. 82, col. 1.]

Section 51, Transfer of Property Act, cannot be taken advantage of by a person to whom s. 52 of the Act applies. [p. 83, col. 2.]

First Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Naini Tal, dated the 6th October, 1927.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor, P. L. Banerji and Govind Das, for the Appellants.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the British India Corporation Ltd., Cawnpore, against Raja Moti Chand and Lala Gokul Chand, defendants first party, and Lala Lalta Prasad, Jhabu Lal and Shri Kishen Chand, defendants second party. The defendants first party will for convenience's sake in this judgment be called as Raja Moti Chand and the defendants second party as Lalta Prasad. The plaintiffs prayed that (1) a decree be passed against the defendants declaring the proprietary right of the plaintiffs in the plaintiff properties and declaring that the said properties are not affected by a mortgage executed by Lalta Prasad in favour of Moti Chand on the 15th of May 1909 and are not saleable in execution of the decree obtained by Raja Moti Chand against Lalta Prasad; (2) it be declared that the sale in favour of Raja Moti Chand in November 1925 is null and void and ineffectual as against the plaintiffs; (3) an order of the 24th of December 1926 passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge and Deputy Commissioner of Naini Tal be set aside. The Court below has passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants for the property claimed on payment of Rs. 8,000. Raja Moti Chand has filed the present appeal against the said decree.

It appears that on the 15th of May 1909 Lalta Prasad executed a simple mortgage in favour of Raja Moti Chand, hypothecating among other properties "one bungalow with pacca houses and sisam trees etc., within the enclosure mortgaged, boundaries given, situate in Mohalla Kathgodam, District Naini Tal, purchased under the sale-deed executed and got registered on the 22nd of October 1885". The exact area of this land is not given in the mortgage-deed, but from other documents it appears that the area is $6\frac{1}{4}$ bighas and it has not been contended before us by any party that the area was anything else. Raja Moti Chand brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh upon the basis of this mortgage and obtained a simple money decree on the 15th of April 1915. On the 19th of July 1915, First Appeal No. 225 of 1915 was filed in the High Court by Raja Moti Chand in which he claimed that he should have been given a mortgage-deed. On the 14th of December 1917, the High Court accepted the appeal of Raja Moti Chand and gave him a preliminary mortgage decree, and the decree was made final on the 23rd of December 1918. This decree was transferred to Naini Tal for execution, and on the 24th of November 1925, the property mentioned above was purchased by Raja Moti Chand. The sale was confirmed on the 24th of December 1925 and the sale certificate was obtained on the 29th of May 1926. Raja Moti Chand was evidently obstructed in obtaining delivery of possession by the British India Corporation, but on the 24th of December 1926, the Subordinate Judge of Naini Tal passed an order directing delivery of possession to Raja Moti Chand against the British India Corporation, and this last order has given the plaintiffs the cause of action to maintain the present suit. It may be mentioned here that in the mortgage litigation the British India Corporation was not a party and the entire proceedings connected with that litigation were conducted against Lalta Prasad (defendants second party alone) till we come to the time when the British India Corporation offered obstruction to Raja Moti Chand in his attempt to obtain possession.

We now propose to trace the title to this property, and the earliest that we can go is the year 1885. On the 22nd of October 1885, one Mrs. Purcell sold this property which was described as "the house situated on the south of the Railway Station at Kathgodam, Kumaun District, consisting of four large rooms, four small rooms, two verandahs and its compound" to the Right Reverend Bishop and Vicar Apostolic of Patna for a sum of Rs. 6,000. On the 30th of March 1892, one Frederic Edward George Matthews, acting as the General Attorney of the Bishop, sold the same to Lala Lalta Prasad. On the 20th of June 1917, Lalta Prasad and his two sons Jhabu Lal and Shri Kishan Chand sold the same to

Moti Singh, and in this sale deed the property is described as having an area of $6\frac{1}{4}$ bighas. It might be mentioned that before this the mortgage in favour of Raja Moti Chand had been effected and Moti Singh obviously purchased this property with the burden of the mortgage in favour of Raja Moti Chand. Moti Singh sold the property on the 7th of February 1919 to Mr. J. E. da Fonseca, Managing Proprietor of the Naini Tal Motor Transport Company Limited, and in this document also the property is described as having an area of $6\frac{1}{4}$ bighas. On the 1st of March 1920, the Naini Tal Motor Transport Company obtained a lease from the Secretary of State for India for land measuring 8 bighas and odd for 30 years on an annual rental of Rs. 102. It has been found by the Court below that these 8 bighas and odd include an area of $6\frac{1}{4}$ bighas which is the subject of dispute in the present litigation. We have considered the evidence and are satisfied that this finding is correct. The Naini Tal Motor Transport Company subsequently went into liquidation, and the Official Liquidator of the Naini Tal Motor Transport Company sold this property to the British India Corporation on the 26th of July 1921. On the 17th of August 1921, the High Court at Fort William, Calcutta, ordered that the sale to the British India Corporation of the movable and immovable properties as also of the good will of the business of the Naini Tal Motor Transport Company completed on the 26th day of July 1921 be confirmed. The British India Corporation have now enclosed the entire 8 bighas 11 biswas of land covered by the lease of the 1st of March 1920 and have made certain additions to the old buildings. The above statement of facts which are practically admitted will indicate the nature of the title advanced by the two contending parties, and we have got to adjudicate upon their rights. The Court below has passed a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants with reference to the property claimed subject to a payment of Rs. 8,000 to Raja Moti Chand. The plaintiffs are satisfied with this decree; but Raja Moti Chand in this appeal impugns this decree and contends that he has an indefeasible title to the property under his purchase. In the Court below, it was argued on behalf of the Raja that he was entitled to the entire area of 8 bighas odd and to all the buildings that had been subsequently added as accretions to the original security, but in this Court Mr. Peary Lal Banerji on behalf of the appellants has definitely abandoned this position and his prayer is that he should be given possession over land measuring $6\frac{1}{4}$ bighas and the buildings that stood thereon at the time of the mortgage and the sale and, if some portions of the old constructions have been demolished and new constructions erected instead, then he should get possession over such new constructions, or some other suitable orders passed which might adjust the equities between the parties. We shall decide the present appeal upon the basis of the position that has been taken before us by the learned Advocate for the appellants.

The third issue before the Court below was:

"What are the existing boundaries and area of the land mortgaged in 1909?" and the finding upon this issue is in the following words:

"During the hearing of the suit I made an inspection of the locality, and the result of my inspection is embodied in a note dated the 8th July, 1927 (page 13 of our record). A plan was prepared by an Amin, who proved it in Court. I find that the area which I have shaded blue in the Amin's map (Ex. B) is that which was mortgaged in 1909. The area is 6 bighas 3 biswas and the boundaries are as shown in the said map".

This finding has not been attacked by either party and we must take it that the present area of the mortgaged land is 6 bighas 3 biswas and the same has been demarcated by the Court below in the Amin's map referred to above.

The fourth issue in the Court below was:

"Which or which portions of the existing buildings stand outside the 'boundaries referred to in Issue No. 3?"

and the finding thereon was as follows:—

"The map (Ex. B) also shows the existing buildings which stand outside the limits referred to in the last issue. The big new Workshop, the Engineering office and the Store are entirely outside the mortgaged area."

This finding is based upon evidence and upon the Judge's inspection note and is not seriously challenged by either party.

The fifth issue was:—

"Are any portions of the existing buildings unaffected by the mortgage," and the decision thereon was:—

"The buildings referred to under Issue No. 4 are in any case unaffected by the mortgage. The extra land which was obtained on lease cannot be regarded as 'accruing' to the mortgaged area."

In view of the position taken by Mr. Banerji, it is not necessary for us to examine the legality or propriety of this finding and we must accept it as correct. From the evidence of Mr. Vaughan it appears that there were formerly 4 main rooms and 4 bathrooms in the main building, a verandah in front and a small verandah behind. In 1915, the front verandah was closed and a room made and about the same time another room was made by closing the back verandah. These alterations were made during the subsistence of the mortgage before it was put in suit, and it is contended that the mortgagee is entitled to these either as accessions or as substituted security, unless his right to them is barred by some rule of law. From Moti Singh's evidence it appears that Mr. Fonseca built a room adjoining the bungalow and a long office and a kitchen. This room adjoining the bungalow, the long office and the kitchen were built after 1919 i. e., after the final decree obtained by Raja Moti Chand, and we shall have to consider whether the Raja can lay claim to these constructions.

The first contention that has been advanced on behalf of the appellants is that the plaintiffs being purchasers pendente lite could not set up their title by purchase as against the claim of the appellant mortgagee under the decree. It is quite clear that apart from certain complications, which we shall notice later on, Moti Singh who is in a certain sense the predecessor of the present plaintiffs purchased the property on the 20th of June, 1917, during the pendency of the mortgage suit initiated by the appellants. It may be noted here that the Court below is in error when it says "After he (Moti Singh) purchased the property, an appeal was preferred to the High Court and the decree was given against the property." It is conceded that the appeal in the mortgage suit was filed on the 19th of July, 1915, and Moti Singh's purchase was made on the 20th of June, 1917, during the pendency of the appeal in the High Court which was decided on the 14th of December, 1917. The provision of law which has been relied upon by the appellants is contained in s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. The active prosecution in this section must be deemed to continue so long as the suit is pending in appeal since the proceedings in the Appellate Court are merely continuation of those in the suit. [See the case of Gobind Chunder Roy v. Guru Churn Kurmoker (1)] Further in a mortgage suit the lis does not terminate with the preliminary decree but must be deemed to continue at least till the passing of the final decree vide Parsotam Narain v. Chhedda Lal (2) and Shib Chandra v. Lachmi Narain (3)]. It is obvious, therefore, that at least up till the 23rd of November, 1918, when the final decree in the mortgage suit was passed the property could not be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or his representative so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which might be made therein. The sale by Lalta Prasad to Moti Singh on the 20th of June, 1917, could not in any way affect the rights which Raja Moti Chand obtained under his decree.

The question that immediately arises is: what are the rights which Raja Moti Chand obtained under the decree and the auction sale, and to what extent are the plaintiffs affected by them? On the 24th of November, 1925, Raja Moti Chand purchased one bungalow with pukhta houses and sisam trees etc. within the enclosure mortgaged (boundaries given) situate in Kathgodam, District Naini Tal, acquired under sale-deed dated and registered on the 22nd of October, 1885. It may be mentioned that neither the British India Corporation, nor the Secretary of State for India nor the Naini Tal Motor Transport Company, nor Moti Singh were parties either to the mortgage suit of Raja Moti Chand or to the execution proceedings connected with the mortgage suit. We shall for the time being exclude out of our consideration the Secretary of State for India but from what we have said above it is clear that every one of these persons is bound by the final decree obtained by Raja Moti Chand on the 23rd of November 1918, so far as they are the successors in-interest of Lalta Prasad. This follows from the text of s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 before its amendment. The amending Act of 1929 has not introduced a new rule of law in the following explanation appended to s. 52:—

"For the purposes of this section the pendency of a suit or proceeding shall be deemed ... to continue until the suit or proceeding has been disposed of by a final decree or order and complete satisfaction or discharge of such decree or order has been obtained."

but has put the impress of Legislature upon certain judicial pronouncements in which it had been held that in a mortgage suit the lis continued even after the final decree and subsisted during the pendency of proceedings in execution: see the case of Surji Ram Marwari v. Berhamdeo Persad (4). In the case of Bhawani Koer v. Mathura Prasad (5) Mookerjee, J., observes as follows:—"It is quite clear in the first place that the mere fact that a judgment has been obtained on a mortgage does not extinguish the debt and the mortgage continues as a lien till it is satisfied or the judgment is barred by the Statute of Limitations. This view is supported by the decision of Lord Ellenborough in Drake v. Mitchell (6), namely, that a judgment recovered in any form of action is still but a security for the original cause of action, until it be made productive in satisfaction to the party. This principle has been recognized in cases of the highest authority which will be found reviewed in the judgment of this Court in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Parsad (7). It follows consequently, that the fact that the defendant obtained a decree on his mortgage did not extinguish his security." Under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) when an order absolute under that section for sale of the mortgaged property was obtained the security was extinguished and, therefore, there are cases including decisions of the Privy Council which lay down that after an order absolute if the property should not be redeemed, "the matter passes from the domain of contract to that of judgment" Sunder Koer v. Rai Sham Kishen (8), Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (9) and Mairu Mal v. Durga Kunwar (10). These cases are no longer law in view of the repeal of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and the enactment of O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. This matter has been clearly brought out in the decision of Sukhai v. Ghulam Sattar Khan (11) and, therefore, we think that the principle of law enunciated by Mr. Justice Mookerjee in Bhawani Koer's case (5) is sound. The result is that the British India Corporation, so far as they are the representatives of Lalta Prasad, are bound by the auction sale of the 24th November, 1925. Two consequences follow from this: (a) The British India Corporation have lost their right to redeem Moti Chand's mortgage and (b) Raja Moti Chand has acquired an indefeasible title as against them. Indeed the British India Corporation have never offered to redeem and we are inclined to hold that they are aware that they have no right to redeem. The auction sale is clearly binding upon the British India Corporation in so far as they are the successors-in-interest of Lalta Prasad.

Raja Moti Chand's purchase included the building and such rights in the land as Lalta Prasad possessed. We have now to see what rights Lalta Prasad possessed in the land which has now been found to have an area of 6 bighas 3 biswas as marked in the Amin's map by the Court below. Mrs. Purcell sold to the Bishop of Patna and the Bishop of Patna sold to Lalta Prasad and Lalta Prasad mortgaged to Moti Chand. There is no suggestion that the right in the land which was dealt with by these transactions was anything but proprietary right, it is true that Moti Singh says that he used to pay Rs. 3 yearly rent to Tahsil, but we have no other material on the record from which we could come to the conclusion that Mrs. Purcell, the Bishop of Patna or Lalta Prasad had not permanent rights in the land but only limited rights terminable at the option of a superior proprietor. It has been argued by Dr. Katju who appeared on behalf of the respondents, that on the 1st of March, 1920, that Naini Tal Motor Transport Company obtained a 30 years' lease (renewable again after the lapse of 30 years) from the Secretary of State for India, and these rights could in no event be sold, for he says that, as these lessee rights were acquired after the final decree, there is no equity in favour either of the mortgagee or of the purchaser of the Court auction to have such acquisitions taken away from the person who paid for them and attached to the property covered by the decree, and he relies upon the cases of Haradhan Chakravarti v. Hargobind Dutta (12) and Mysore Kopniah Sirananjiah v.

Sithay Gouder (13). Even if we were to agree that there can be no accession to the mortgage security after the passing of the final decree, we are of the opinion that the action of the Naini Tal Motor Transport Company in obtaining a lease from the Secretary of State for India does not enlarge their proprietary interest, acquired by them under the sale-deed dated the 7th of February, 1919. As we said before there is no material on the record from which we can gather that Lalta Prasad had limited rights in the land and, if, therefore, the Naini Tal Motor Transport Company in a spirit of caution or under the stress of certain unexplained circumstances took certain proceedings to ensure the continuance of their possession this did not enlarge their title acquired under the purchase dated 7th February, 1919, or confer upon them an independent title. It may be mentioned here that the Naini Tal Motor Transport Company paid no premium to the Secretary of State for India but only agreed to pay a yearly rent of Rs. 202 and executed a building lease upon certain terms. The buildings which they have constructed outside the mortgaged area, will, as has been conceded by the learned Advocate for the appellants, belong to the British India Corporation. There is thus no hardship cast upon them.

The Secretary of State for India was no party to either to the mortgage suit or to the execution proceedings and is not the successor in-interest of Lalta Prasad and is of course not bound in any way by the decision of the suit.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that Raja Moti Chand is entitled, unless barred in some other way, to the land marked in the Amin's map by the Court below. We have now to see what rights he has in the buildings. By parity of reasoning and in view of our findings it follows that Raja Moti Chand is entitled to obtain possession over the residential bungalow exclusive of the room adjoining the bungalow and long office and a kitchen, unless some other principle of law stands in his way.

It was finally argued before us on behalf of the respondents that we should not interfere with the decree of the Court below by reason of the fact that s. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable to the facts of the case, and that provision of law gives an option to the British India Corporation, and the Court below has given effect to that option correctly. On the other hand, it was argued on behalf of the appellants that s. 51 cannot be taken advantage of by a person to whom s. 52 applies. This contention is founded upon the principle enunciated by a Division Bench of this Court in Mohammad Shafiq Ullah Khan v. Mohammad Sami Ullah Khan (14) by which we are bound. But we are of the opinion that the plaintiff respondent is not entitled to the benefit of s. 51, and in our view s. 51 works out in a way different from the way in which the Court below has worked it out. It runs as follows :—

"When the transferee of immoveable property makes any improvement on the property, believing in good faith that he is absolutely entitled thereto, and he is subsequently evicted therefrom by any person having a better title, the transferee has a right to require the person causing the eviction either to have the value of the improvement estimated and paid or secured to the transferee, or to sell his interest in the property to the transferee at the then market value thereof, irrespective of the value of such improvement."

It is obvious that the British India Corporation are the transferees of immoveable property and the person subsequently evicted therefrom and Raja Moti Chand is the person having a better title within the meaning of the section. The consequence, therefore, is that the British India Corporation have a right to require Raja Moti Chand either to have the value of the improvement estimated and paid to them or to ask Raja Moti Chand to sell his interest in the property to the British India Corporation at the then market value thereof irrespective of the value of such improvement. Upon this reading of the law it is clear that the British India Corporation can put Raja Moti Chand upon election, and it is for Raja Moti Chand to decide whether he will pay up the British India Corporation or whether he will sell his own interest to the British India Corporation. The Court below, however, without putting Raja Moti Chand upon an election has compelled him to sell his interest to the British India Corporation, and therein we think it has fallen into an error, but we think that there is no occasion for s. 51 to come into play at all. So far as the 'improvements' are concerned, there has been no improvement in the land according to our view and so far as the buildings are concerned, we have already held that Raja Moti Chand will not be entitled to the new room adjoining the bungalow, the long office and the kitchen built by Mr. Fonseca after 1919. Moreover, it is not made out by the evidence on the record that the British India Corporation believed in good faith that they were absolutely entitled to the immovable property in question. No body on their behalf has entered into the witness-box to state that they made any enquiries and that the result of those enquiries was that the corporation was lulled into a sense of security. Neither the recitals contained in sale-deed of 26th July, 1926, nor the bald statement of Moti Singh Bhat that he had no information of any incumbrance can be of any avail to the plaintiff-respondent. Moreover we are not impressed by the statement of Moti Singh. Section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act is, therefore, inapplicable. Our conclusion finally is that there is nothing in law which would stand in the way of Raja Moti Chand's claiming possession over the land marked in the Amin's map and over the residential bungalow. Here his right ceases. He has no right to the lands outside this area and to the room adjoining the main building, the long office and kitchen built after 1919.

The result is that we allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and substitute therefor a decree declaring the proprietary right of the plaintiffs over (1) the property mentioned in schedule A, (excluding therefrom the land marked blue in the Amin's map and the residential bungalow) and (2) the end-room adjoining the main building, the long office and the kitchen which were built after 1919. It is also declared that the properties that have been secured to the plaintiffs by our decree are not affected by the mortgage and sale in favour of Raja Moti Chand. The order of the 24th of December, 1926, passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge and Deputy Commissioner of Naini Tal, so far as it affects the properties decreed to the plaintiffs, is set aside.

The plaintiffs have succeeded to some extent but have lost to a greater extent, and we think that the proper order to make on the question of costs is that the plaintiffs will get one third of the taxable costs from the defendants first party, and the defendants first party will get two-thirds on their taxable costs from the plaintiffs in both Courts. Defendants second party will bear their own costs which they have incurred.

Second Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 14th of September, 1927.

Dr. K. N. Katju, and Mr. R. C. Ghatak, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from the decree of the learned District Judge of Farrukhabad reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge of the same district in a suit in which the following reliefs were claimed:—

(a). It may be declared that the Committee of the defendants is unlawful according to law. The principle on which they are working is against law and no British subject is bound by it nor are they competent to offer obstructions in the business of the plaintiffs.

(b). A perpetual injunction may be issued to the defendants restraining them from doing the acts mentioned in para. 3 of the petition of plaintiff; and

(c). Rupees 1,000 as damages caused to the plaintiffs from the acts of the defendants may be awarded from the defendants."

Plaintiffs are members of a firm of commission agents who carry on business at Fatehgarh under the name and style of Bhola Nath Shankar Das. The defendants are 17 in number and are members of an association unincorporated and unregistered, which is located in Lindsayganj market at Farrukhabad and is called Anaj Behohar Sabha. It is said that this case is an instance in point of trade union outrages; and although the association has no legal recognition as a jural unit, its number and the compact of its members give weight to its concerted action and are, according to the plaintiffs, a source of danger to the public. The plaintiffs do not attribute unlawfulness to the association merely on the score that it is an unregistered body but they stoutly contend that its objects and methods are unlawful—the chief object of the association being to corner a monopoly and to drive out all rivals from the field by recourse to unfair competition.

The heads of charges enumerated in para. 3 of the plaint are as follows:—

(1) That no one can open a shop in Bazar Lindsayganj without the permission of this Committee.

(2) The permission for opening a shop is given in the month of Kuar and Phagun.

(3) If anyone carries on business or opens a shop without the permission of the Committee, no one can sell goods to him or purchase goods from him.

(4) If anyone who has not opened a shop wants to purchase goods directly, he cannot do so without the medium of any such shop-keeper whom the Committee might have permitted to open a shop.

(5) That weighmen who have obtained a license from the Municipal Board and who are themselves the owners of the Phars (the open space in front of each shop) or who have taken Phars on rent cannot sell the goods to or weigh the goods of the persons not permitted by the Committee to make the purchase.

(6) If any weighman or shop-keeper sells goods to or purchases from any such person not allowed by the Committee, then penal orders are passed against him, such as fine, suspension of all business and purchase and sale.

The plaintiffs further complained that the association was oppressive in the treatment of its constituents inasmuch as it made unlawful gains by arbitrarily levying perquisites like the following:—

(a) Twelve annas per cent. commission fee.

(b) Four annas per cent. brokerage.

(c) One pice per rupee per Pareha.

(d) One anna six pices per cent for Gau-shala and Ramlila.

(e) Two chhattaks of grain per maund for Karda.

(f) Four chhattaks of grain per cart for Larka, and

(g) Two chhattaks of grain per maund for Palladar.

The plaintiffs further alleged that they had entered into a contract with a third party to supply 500 bags of poppy seed. For the due performance of this contract they had contracted to purchase the stock from a number of persons at Lindsayganj. The defendants intervened and prevented the owners of the stock from selling the poppy-seed to the plaintiffs. The result was that the plaintiffs next tried to make purchases outside Lindsayganj and entered into contract with certain arhatias at Ghatia Ghat. Here also the defendants intervened and by their obstructive tactics prevented certain persons from selling the goods to the plaintiffs.

The suit was contested by all the defendants except two, namely, defendants Nos. 14 and 15. The defence amounted to a traverse of the material statements contained in the plaint. The Court of first instance repelled the contentions of the defendant, decided all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the plaintiffs' claim for the declaratory relief and injunction as asked for and for Rs. 500 as damages.

The lower Appellate Court has reversed this decision. Hence this appeal.

It has been argued that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration that Anaj Beohar Sabha was an unlawful association inasmuch as it had not been incorporated and registered as required by s. 4 (2) of the Indian Companies Act. The number of its members exceeds 20 and it may be assumed that the object of the association is gain or profit. The Sabha not having been registered under s. 4 (2) of the Indian Companies Act (Act VII of 1913) it can have no legal recognition as a jural unit and it cannot sue or be sued as a corporate body nor can it enter into a contract as such. But while taking a stock of its disabilities, we are not prepared to hold that a trade association is unlawful merely because it has not been registered in conformity with the provisions of the Indian Companies Act. We are further of opinion that it will be nothing short of an abuse of the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act to entertain a suit for a declaration of what appears to us to be a self evident proposition that the Committee is not a corporate unit because it has not been legally constituted. The British Indian Courts have no general powers to make a declaratory decree outside the limits formulated by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act and the said section cannot be utilised with the object of enunciating a truism.

It has next been argued that the agreement, whereby the members of the Sabha are held together, is in defiance of the provisions of ss. 23 and 27 of the Indian Contract Act. In Hilton v. Eckersley (1) Baron Alderson is reported to have said:—

"Prima facie it is the privilege of a trader in a free country, in all matters not contrary to law to regulate his own mode of carrying it on according to his own discretion and choice."

The question is whether the defendants have crossed the line which the law permits. This border line is not in all cases capable of very sharp definition and is a fruitful source of aggressive claims and subtle defences. It was ruled by the Privy Council in Rogers v. Rajendro Dutt (2):—

"That it is essential to an action in tort that the act complained of should, under the circumstances, be legally wrongful as regards the party complaining, that is, it must prejudicially affect him in some legal right; merely that it will, however, directly do a man harm in his interests, is not enough."

The matter, we are now considering was in issue before the Bombay High Court in Fraser & Co. v. Bombay Ice Manufacturing Co. (3) the facts of which were parallel and the principle involved not dissimilar and the Court held that an agreement between manufacturers, not to sell their goods below a stated price, to pay profits into a common fund and to divide the business and profits in certain proportions is not avoided by s. 27 of the Indian Contract Act and cannot be impeached as opposed to public policy under s. 23 of the Act. We are clearly of opinion that the constitution of the committee and its objectives do not offend against the provisions of ss. 23 and 27 of the Indian Contract Act. It is patent that the case of the plaintiffs is founded upon tort and not upon contract. Where the claim is founded upon a tort alleged against the defendant, ss. 23 and 27 of the Indian Contract Act do not apply. The grievance is that the defendants by their organised and concerted action have by rule and level been crippling the plaintiffs in their trade and that they have been prevailing upon their constituents to obey their edicts to cut off the supply of materials from the plaintiffs as also the flow of customers. We cannot forget the emphatic statement of Bowen, L. J., that

"no action at common law will lie or ever has lain against any individual or individuals for entering into a contract merely because it is in restraint of trade."

[vide Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor (4)]

It is unfortunate that s. 27 of the Indian Contract Act has been moulded upon the New York Draft Code and seriously trenches upon the liberty of the individual in contractual matters affecting trade. We are, however, of opinion that s. 27 does not support the plaintiffs' pretension. A combination amongst the traders of a particular locality is not actionable per se merely because it brings profits to them and indirectly hurts a rival in trade.

It has been argued that the demands made by the defendant company are of the nature of arbitrary perquisites and operate oppressively against the plaintiffs if they do not respond to the demands made by the defendants. These demands are seven in number and have already been referred to in our judgment. The Court of first instance held that these demands were arbitrary perquisites. The lower Appellate Court did not agree with this view:—

"Payment on account of commission agency and brokerage prevails everywhere. Item (c) also is of a piece with the purchase of a peculiar brand of paper for writing petitions in Courts; and one pice, per rupee, is a very small amount. Payments made for Gaushala and Ram Lila certainly entail a loss on the ultimate customer but no one grudges it. I do not wish to lay down that there is any religious consideration in it, but from a humanitarian point of view a payment for Gaushala is not an evil. In the Western Presidency they take it in the name of 'Pinjrapole'. This idea itself is a laudable one because it prevents cruelty to animals. Items (e), (f) and (g) are allowed everywhere. Instead of sifting the grain and throwing out the dust from it, it is much better to make an uniform allowance for it. Similarly the other two items are also reasonable ones. It, therefore, cannot be said that the aims and objects of the association are unlawful".

(4) (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 598 at p. 619.

Without pausing to consider whether any particular item had a peculiar sanctity upon humanitarian grounds, we are clearly of opinion that the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge on this part of the case are reasonable and proper and are not open to any attack or criticism on any ground of law. We must, therefore, accept the finding that the so-called perquisites are neither arbitrary nor oppressive.

It was next contended that the plaintiffs were the victims of an unlawful conspiracy on the part of the defendants who inter-meddled with and systematically prevented the due performance of contracts by third parties in favour of the plaintiffs. This part of the plaintiffs' case mainly rested upon oral evidence. The lower Appellate Court discarded the statements of Madan Lal, Ajudhi, son of Khanjan and Babu Ram Sarup on the ground that they were pure hearsays and disbelieved Behari and Ajudhi, son of Paramsukh. As to Madho Ram, it observed as follows:—

"He gave direct evidence. He stated that the Committee people did tell him that if he weighed plaintiffs goods, his market would be stopped. This statement is highly damaging to the defendants. But in cross-examination this witness stated as follows:—

If we do not agree to what the Committee says the Committee men will neither sell to nor purchase goods from us.

There is no other pressure. By turning us from the market I mean that the Committee-walas will not sell to or purchase goods from us. If we had not cared whether the 12 Committee-walas sold or purchased goods to or from us, we could have weighed goods to the plaintiffs."

From this, it would appear that the Committee people did not interfere with the freedom of this witness, and what they told him was that they would withdraw their custom. This is hardly a form of pressure that can be called threat or coercion. Noor Mohammad was the witness who attempted to prove the whole of the plaintiffs' case but he made his position clear in cross examination.

He stated that the members of the Committee had told the weighmen that the market would otherwise be closed for them. By it they meant that the Committee people would not purchase goods from them. He further stated that the weighmen who did not mean to deal with the Committee people could weigh goods for the plaintiffs.

After commenting upon this evidence, the Court below came to the following conclusion;—

"From the evidence of these witnesses it is not proved (a) that no one is entitled to open a shop without the leave of the Committee (b) that no one is entitled to deal with a shop-keeper who opens a shop without their permission, (c) that no outsider is allowed to deal with a shop-keeper who opens a shop without their permission and (d) that no weighman is allowed to deal with an outsider".

The Court further finds that the rule about the election of the members twice a year, once in Kuar and once in Phagan does not entail the consequence that every one is compelled to become a member.

The lower Appellate Court winds up its analysis of evidence with the following remarks:—

"There can be no doubt then that there is some sort of pressure brought to bear on members of the association, be they capitalist (the traders) or be they the labourers (weighmen)..... Such of those traders who are members of the Committee and who wished to deal with non-members are told by the Committee that if they so wish they have to cease to become members. Similarly such of the weighmen who are members of the weighmen's association (part of the Traders' Association) and who wish to weigh for non-members are told that if they so wish they have to cease to become members and are further told that the patronage of the members of the Traders' Association shall be withdrawn from them..... From the evidence discussed above it would appear that this capitalistic combination and combination of labour puts before its members a choice between two alternatives. They put this question to the members:

Do you wish to deal with outsiders and thus be obliged to cease to be members of the association, or do you wish to continue to be members and cease dealings with outsiders?' Considering the many advantages by remaining as members of the Sabha as detailed in the evidence of Lachmi Narain, defendant witness, the secretary of the Sabha, they choose the second alternative and refuse to deal with non-members. If they choose the other alternative they are first fined and then, if necessary, boycotted. The question is whether this is illegal.

After discussing the evidence, the Court dealt with the case in its legal aspect and answered the question in the negative. We agree with the view.

Dealing with the plaintiffs' claim for damages the Court next proceeded to examine whether the defendants had procured certain breaches of contract with third parties for supply of goods to the plaintiffs. As to this, the Court observes as follows:—

"The plaintiffs have given details of these several purchases but with the exception of one purchase, they have not been able to prove any other. On the other hand, the defendants have produced those persons whom the plaintiffs alleged to have been their vendors and these persons have denied that they entered into any contract of sale of goods. The plaintiffs' case, therefore, has not been proved."

As regards one of the purchases referred to above, it is to be observed that the Court did not intend to find and as a matter of fact did not find that the defendants procured a breach of the contract. There is no room for cavil or criticism in the finding of the Court below which appears to us to be perfectly clear and legitimate:—

"The question in other words is whether the defendants actually asked the vendors of the plaintiffs not to deliver goods to plaintiffs."

My answer is 'no'. I have already found that what the association did was that it distinctly told the plaintiffs' vendors that if they supplied goods sold to the plaintiffs they would cease to be members of the association. It must, therefore, be said that there was no absolute negation in this case. There was no conspiracy on the part of the association to compel the plaintiffs' vendors not to supply goods to the plaintiffs. Now there is a great deal of difference between a third person asking a party to a contract to break the contract and a third person telling the same party to contract:

"You may supply goods to the plaintiffs if you wish, but if you do so we will fine you, we will boycott you and we will turn you out of the association. And this latter act was all that the defendants did."

Upon these findings, the Court below came to the conclusion that there was no cause of action for a suit for damages or injunction against the defendants. We agree with this view. The following passage from Erle on Trade Union, page 12 will bear quotation:—

"Every person has a right under the law as between himself and his fellow subjects, to full freedom in disposing of his own labour or his own capital according to his own will. It follows that every other person is subject to the correlative duty arising therefrom, and is prohibited from any obstruction to the fullest exercise of this right which can be made compatible with the exercise of similar rights by others. Every act causing an obstruction to another in the exercise of the right comprised within this description, done, not in the exercise of the actor's own right, but for the purpose of obstruction, would, if damage should be caused thereby to the third party obstructed, be a violation of this prohibition."

We are of opinion that what is wrong in the case of an individual continues to be a wrong if committed by an association of individuals by preconcert or conspiracy and that a conspiracy consists in the agreement of two or more persons to do an unlawful act by unlawful means. This was the view taken in Mulcahy v. Reg (5). We agree with this view.

We do not think that any useful purpose will be served by embarking on a critical examination of the authorities dealing with the law relating to actions for conspiracy. While the cases have a common denominator, the case law on the subject is very vast and the features of each case vary with the kaleidoscopic turn of circumstances. We shall however indicate the principles laid down in the important and cited cases.

In Lumley v. Gye (6) it was held that an action would lie for malicious procurement of the breach of any contract, if by the aforesaid procurement, damage was intended to result and did result to the plaintiff. Crompton, J., observed:

"Where two or more parties were concerned in inflicting such injury, an indictment or a writ of conspiracy at common law might perhaps have been maintainable and where a writ of conspiracy would lie for an injury inflicted by two, an action on the case in the nature of conspiracy will generally lie; and in such action on the case, the plaintiff is entitled to recover against one defendant without proof of any conspiracy, the malicious injury and not the conspiracy being the gist of the action".

In the great case of Allen v. Flood (7), it was decided that an act lawful in itself is not converted by a malicious or bad motive into an unlawful fact, so as to make the doer of the act liable to civil action; and, therefore, where the appellant had violated no legal right of the respondent, done no unlawful act and used no unlawful means in procuring the respondent's dismissal, his conduct was not actionable, however, malicious or bad his motive might be." According to Lord Watson, there are only two grounds of legal liability (1) If a person knowingly and for his own ends induces the commission of an actionable wrong; and (2) where the act induced is within the right of the immediate actor but may be to the detriment of a third party and the inducer procured his object by the use of illegal means directed against the third party.

Lord Macnaghten expressed his opinion in Quinn v. Leatham (8), that if all matters of merely passing interest be eliminated, Allen v. Flood (5) had merely repeated what had been laid down in Stevenson v. Newnham (9), namely, that an act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent.

In Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor (4), it was held by the majority of the Judges that the association being formed by the defendants with the view of keeping the trade in their own hands and not with the intention of ruining the trade of the plaintiffs, or through any personal malice or ill-will towards them, was not unlawful, and that no action for conspiracy was maintainable. Bowen L. J. enunciated the law in the following terms. Page 614 *

"There seems to be no burdens or restrictions in law upon a trader which arise merely from the fact that he is a trader and which are not equally laid on all other subjects of the Crown. His right to trade freely is a right which the law recognises and encourages, but it is one which places him at no especial disadvantage as compared with others. No man whether trader or not, can, however, justify damaging another in his commercial business by fraud or misrepresentation. Intimidation obstruction and molestation are forbidden; so is the intentional procurement of a violation of individual rights, contractual or other, assuming always that there is no just cause for it."

Again, at page 617* :—

"The truth is that the combination of capital for the purposes of trade and competition is a very different thing from such a combination of several persons against one, with a view to harm him, [as falls under the head of indictable conspiracy. There is no just cause or excuse in the latter class of cases. There is such a just cause or excuse in the former". We have no hesitation in holding that this view does not militate against the provisions of s. 27 of the Indian Contract Act and that the basic principle of the two is not divergent.

In Temperton v. Russell (10), Lopes L. J., observed:—

"I will state shortly what I believe to be the law on the subject. The result of the authorities appears to me that a combination of two or more persons to induce others not to deal with a particular individual, or enter into contract with him, if done with the intention of injuring him is an actionable wrong if damage results to him therefrom."

The same rule was laid down in Quinn v. Leathem (8) which has already been referred to. Lord Macnaghten observed Quinn v. Leathem (8)

"Speaking for myself, I have no hesitation in saying that I think the decision in Allen v. Flood (7) was right, not on the ground of malicious intention—that was not I think, the gist of the action—but on the ground that a violation of legal right committed knowingly is a cause of action and that it is a violation of legal right to interfere with contractual relations recognised by law if there is no sufficient justification for the interference The only other question is this: Does a conspiracy to injure, resulting in damage, give rise to civil liability? It seems to me that there is authority for that proposition and that it is founded in good sense A man may resist without much difficulty the wrongful act of an individual. He would probably have at least the moral support of his friends and neighbours but it is a very different thing (as Lord Fitzgerald observes) when one man has to defend himself against many combined to do him wrong."

"Much consideration of the matter has led me to be convinced that a number of actions and things not in themselves actionable or unlawful, if done separately without conspiracy may, with conspiracy become dangerous and alarming just as a grain of gunpowder is harmless but a pound may be highly destructive, or the administration of one grain of a particular drug may be most beneficial as a medicine but administered frequently and in larger quantities with a view to harm may be fatal as a poison."

In South Wales Minor's Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., Ltd (11), it was held that procuring a breach of contract is an actionable wrong unless there be justification for interfering with the legal right. According to Lord Lindley malice was not the gist of the action.

Where the word "malice" has been used in some of these cases, it must be held to connote no more than an intention to commit an unlawful act without reference to spite or ill-feeling.

Conway v. Wade (12) and Hodges v. Webb (13) are not very helpful cases since they turned more particularly upon a construction of certain words in s. 3 of Trade Disputes Act of 1906. But the last mentioned case is relevant in so far that it was held therein that in the absence of conspiracy or unlawful combination, a firm or even emphatic statement by one person that unless the person whom he is addressing consents to the adoption of a particular course which he can lawfully take, the speaker would do that which he was lawfully entitled to do, was not a threat for which the speaker could be held liable at law.

In Larkin v. Long (14) Lord Atkinson is reported to have observed:—

"The fact that members of a trade union are merely acting in obedience to a rule of their union believed by them to be for their benefit is no defence to an action for the breach of any contracts they have entered into and still less is it a defence to the wilful and malicious infringement in combination of legal right of personal freedom of action which they claim for themselves, but which others are entitled to quite as fully and as absolutely as they are."

In Ware & De Freville, Ltd., v. Motor Trade Association (15) the finding was that the evidence produced by the plaintiffs was quite insufficient to establish the case of a conspiracy to injure. The following observation finds a place in the judgment:—

"The decisions in Mogul Steamship Co., Ltd., v. McGregor (4), Allen v. Flood (7) and Quinn v. Leatham (8) are all in agreement to this extent, that a combination of persons to do some act, the object of which is to injure some third person is wrongful and actionable; so too is a combination of persons to do some act by unlawful means which will have the effect of injuring some third person."

If there is a combination made and threats used for the legitimate protection of trade interests, no action would lie.

In Reynolds v. Shipping Federation Ltd., (16). It was held that where an agreement is entered into, not from a malicious desire to inflict loss on an individual or class of individuals, but from a desire to advance the business interests of employers and employed alike by maintaining the advantages of collective bargaining and control, it was not unlawful and no action for conspiracy was maintainable by the plaintiff.

"The agreement or combination was not against a particular individual but merely operated to exclude such individuals as might not from time to time satisfy a qualification which was within the reach of any one who desires employment."

In Sorrell v. Smith (17) it was ruled that a combination of two or more persons for the purpose of injuring a man in his trade is unlawful and if it results in damage to him is actionable. If the real purpose of the combination is not to injure another but to forward or defend the trade of those who enter into it, then no wrong is committed and no action will lie although damage to another ensues, provided that the purpose is not effected by illegal means. Viscount Cave, L. C. observed:

There is some authority for the view that what is unlawful in two is not lawful in one, and that the circumstance that two or more persons combine to cause the injury, while it may be very relevant, as evidence of the purpose and, as an aggravation of the damages, is not itself an essential element in the cause of action."

There exists no uncertainty as to the legal principles regulating the rights of the parties to this action and the following propositions may be taken to be the settled law:—

(1) Every person has a right to a free course of trade and to conduct his business upon his own lines even though it results in an interference with the business of another person to his detriment.

(2) If a person or a combination of persons unlawfully procure a breach of contract, the matter is actionable, provided that damage accrues therefrom.

(3) Malice in the sense of spite or ill-feeling is not the gist of the action. An act that is legal in itself does not become illegal because it is prompted by an indirect or sinister motive.

(4) Even though the dominating motive in a certain course of action may be the furtherance of one's business or of one's interest, one is not entitled to interfere with another man's method of earning his living by illegal means. Illegal means may either be means that are illegal in themselves or that may become illegal because of conspiracy where they would not have been illegal if done by a single individual.

(5) An unlawful interference with the business of another person with intent to hurt that person is actionable provided that damage results from interference. A lawful interference by unlawful methods with the same object and producing similar results is equally actionable.

We have set out in detail the findings of the learned Judge and his reasons in support thereof. It is perfectly clear that the defendants did not unlawfully or by illegal means procure any breaches of contract in favour of the plaintiffs. There was no conspiracy on the part of the defendants to compel the plaintiffs' vendors not to supply goods to the plaintiffs. A certain amount of pressure was brought to bear upon their constituents, the object of which was that if the latter wished to continue to be members of the association they had to obey the edicts of the association and to cease to deal with outsiders. These persons had a choice of action. They were not the victims of any coercion on the part of the defendants. Where a person has a choice of one or other of two courses with their attendant advantages or disadvantages, coercion is not necessarily one of the elements involved in the transaction. There was no organised conspiracy on the parts of the defendants to do harm to the plaintiffs. The association of the defendants was formed with the primary object of keeping the trade in their own hands and not with the intention of ruining the trade of the plaintiffs. The association, therefore, was not unlawful and there was no cause of action for a claim founded upon conspiracy. The plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to the relief claimed.

Salt Act (XII of 1882), s. 9 (a)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 46, 117—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 26—Abetment of offence under Salt Act—Conviction under s. 117, Penal Code—Legality—Offences under Special Act and general law—Punishment.

A person guilty of abetment of an offence under s. 9 (a) of the Salt Act may be convicted and sentenced under s. 117 of the Penal Code where it is proved that the act amounted to an abetment of the commission of an offence by the public generally or by any number or class of persons exceeding ten. [p. 96, col. 2.]

Where there is nothing in the special Act to exclude the operation of the general criminal law, it cannot be inferred that there was an intention on the part of the Legislature to exclude it. [p. 97, col. 2.]

Under the General Clauses Act, s. 26, where an act is punishable under a general Statute, the offender could be proceeded with under either or both but could not be punished twice for the same act or omission which constitutes the offence. *Emperor v. Order on reference submitted by the Sessions Judge of Meerut, as per his letter No. 478—III, dated the 10th October, 1930.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Messrs. P. L. Banerji, R. C. Mital, K. D. Malaviya and Vishwa Mittra, for the Applicant.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The person concerned in this criminal reference is one Joti Prasad Gupta, an Advocate of this Court, practising at Meerut. On the 13th of April 1930, he made a speech on the Barakhana ground at Meerut before an audience consisting of about ten thousand persons in which he urged them to break the Salt Law. He also sold certain packets of contraband salt said to have been manufactured at Ghaziabad. He was prosecuted under s. 9 (a) of the Salt Act (Act XII of 1882) and under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code before a Magistrate First Class and was convicted of both the offences. He was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment under the former section and to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter section. The sentences were directed to run consecutively.

Before the Magistrate Joti Prasad Gupta "took no part in the proceedings". He refused to say anything in his defence and declined to produce any evidence on his behalf.

He preferred no appeal against his conviction or sentence.

On the 24th of September, 1930, an application was presented in the Court of the learned Sessions Judge of Meerut by Mr. Baij Nath, President of the Meerut Bar Association in which he urged that Joti Prasad Gupta had been wrongly convicted under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code and that his conviction and sentence under that section ought to be set aside and should be substituted by a conviction and sentence under s. 9 (c) of the Indian Salt Act. The contention advanced was that where provision had been made in cl. (c) of s. 9 for the punishment of abetment of offences under cls. (a) and (b) of the said section, it would be illegal to convict a person under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code. Reliance was placed upon a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh in Emperor v. Mohan Lal (1). In this case the Chief Court sustained the contention which was put forward, set aside the conviction and sentence under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code and substituted for it a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment under s. c) of the Salt Act. In view of the importance of the question at issue, the learned Sessions Judge has referred this case and the connected case to this Court for a clear pronouncement. The case had been argued at great length before us by Dr. Katju in support of the reference and by Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai for the Crown who opposes the reference.

Dr. Katju in support of his contention, has relied upon the decision of the Oudh Chief Court in Emperor v. Mohan Lal (1), Chandi Prasad v. Abdul Rahman (2), Ram Nath v. Emperor (3), Emperor v. Abdul Hamid (4) and a number of English authorities which have been considered by Mr. Justice Das in the last mentioned case. He has drawn our attention to s. 11 of the Act and contends that the offence under the Salt Act is one of a very special nature for which a Special Tribunal has been appointed under the Act and a special procedure provided. Of the cases cited by him, the case of Emperor v. Mohan Lal (1) is directly in point and the facts of this case are parallel to the facts of the case now before us. Considerable emphasis has been laid in this case upon the fact that an act in contravention of the Salt Law is an offence under the Indian Salt Act, but is not an independent offence under the Indian Penal Code. Similarly the abetment of offences under ss. 9 (a) and (b) of the Salt Act is a substantive offence under s. 9 (c) of the said Act and punishment has been provided in the said Act for the abetment of the offences under ss. 9 (a) and 9 (b). We may note in passing, that before the Chief Court, it was "agreed on both sides that the act for the abetment of which these persons were convicted is not a separate offence under the Indian Penal Code, but it is an offence exclusively under the Indian Salt Act, 1882."

From this, the learned Judges of that Court concluded that "it is to the former class of cases to which the provisions of s. 26 of the General Clauses Act apply, but the present case is of the latter class."

They further held that the principle of interpretation of Statutes in such circumstances is generalia specialibus non derogant. They held, therefore, that where an act was an offence under a special law and the offence could be punished under that special law, the general law would not apply and this was the principle laid down in s. 5 of the Indian Penal Code. In their view, s. 9 (c) embraced all abetments coming under the definition of 'abetment' in the Indian Penal Code, no matter how serious the character of the abetment. They observed that, if for the same act a person could be punished under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code, and also be punished for the same Act under s. 9 of the Salt Act, this would lead to undesirable and absurd results. They, therefore, held that where an act was an offence under a special or local law for which punishment had been provided for in the special or local law, but the act in question had not been treated as a separate and independent offence under the Indian Penal Code and no punishment had been separately provided for in that Code, the offence was exclusively punishable under the special or local law and not under the general criminal law.

The learned Government Advocate does not agree to the correctness of the data which appear to have been agreed to or assumed before the Chief Court. The position calls for a detailed and careful examination.

Laws regulating the manufacture of salt, appear to have been made at a very early period of the British rule in this country. We emphasise the fact that Act XII of 1882 did not for the first time declare certain acts done in contravention of that Act or of any rule made thereunder to be offences which were punishable by fine or imprisonment for non-payment of fine. Similar provisions were made in ss. 4 and 7 of Act XIV of 1843 which was applicable to the North Western Provinces of the Presidency of Bengal. Section 4 ran thus :

"And it is further enacted that from and after the 1st day of September, 1843, the manufacture of alimentary salt throughout the North Western Provinces of the Presidency of Bengal without the express sanction of the Government is prohibited; and that any person engaging in the manufacture of such salt, or preparing or causing to be prepared works for the manufacture of such salt without such sanction and all zemindars or other proprietors of land, or their agents conniving at such illicit manufacture, shall on conviction by the Magistrate, within the limits of whose district the offence may have occurred, be punished by a fine not exceeding Rs. 500, and, on non-payment of such fine by imprisonment not exceeding six months with or without hard labour, and that all works at which such manufacture was often conducted, or which have design for such manufacture shall be destroyed, and any salt which may be manufactured or stored thereat shall be seized and confiscated."

Section 7, inter alia, provided for the offence of abetment and was expressed in following words:—

"And it is further enacted that all persons evading or attempting to evade the payment of the duties imposed by this Act, and all persons aiding or abetting such attempts or evasions or in any manner acting in contravention of the Act, or of any order made and issued under the provisions thereof and all zemindars and other proprietors of land or their agents, who shall wilfully connive at such attempts or evasions or aid such acts shall on conviction by the Magistrate within the limit of whose district the offence may have occurred, be punished by a fine not exceeding Rs. 500 and on non-payment thereof by imprisonment not exceeding six months with or without hard labour."

The infraction of the Salt Law and the abetment of certain offences under the Salt Law were, therefore, offences under Act XIV of 1843 and were punishable with fine or with imprisonment for non-pay ment of fine. Under Act XII of 1882 they continued to be offences, but the sentences provided for the offences are slightly different as would appear from the following text of s. 9 of the Act:—"Whoever commits any of the following offences (viz):—(a) does anything in contravention of this Act or of any rule made hereunder; (b) evades payment of any duty or charge payable under this Act or any such rule; or (c) attempts to commit or abets within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, the commission of any of the offences mentioned in cls. (a) and (b) of this section, shall, for every such offence, be punished with fine which may extend to Rs. 500, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with both."

The general criminal law of the land is to be found in Act XLV of 1860, which received the assent of the Governor General in Council on the 6th of October, 1860. It has been provided in s. 40 of the Indian Penal Code that the word "offence" in s. 117 of the Code denotes a thing punishable under this Code or under a special or local law as hereinafter defined. This provision was not to be found in the Penal Code as originally enacted but was introduced for the first time under Act XXVII of 1870. The effect of this section is to make every thing punishable under a special law an offence within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code. The object of the amendment was to enlarge the scope of the Indian Penal Code by making offences under a special law also offences under the Indian Penal Code. The result, therefore, was that offences under the Excise Act (Act XII of 1896), under the Indian Post Office Act (Act VI of 1898), under the Explosive Substances Act (Act VI of 1908) or the Police Act (Act V of 1861) or under the Registration Act, became also offences under the Indian Penal Code. In these Acts, the abetment of certain offences has been provided for as a substantive offence. We refer to s. 59 of the Excise Act, to s. 70 of the Post Office Act, s. 12 of the Explosives Act, s. 6 of the Explosive Substances Act, s. 82 of the Registration Act and s. 36 of the Police Act. If, therefore, we read s. 40 in conjunction with the relevant penal sections of the special or local Acts, the following facts will have to be deduced: (1) that all acts or omissions in contravention of special or local Acts which are punishable under the said Acts, fall under the definition of 'offences' in the Indian Penal Code; (2) that all abetments of offences which are offences under the special or local Acts and are punishable under the said Acts, also fall under the definition of 'offences' in the Indian Penal Code.

In this connection, s. 40 of the Indian Penal Code should be read in conjunction with ss 2 and 5. Section 2 expressly provides that every person shall be liable to punishment under this Code and not otherwise for every act or omission contrary to the provisions thereof of which he shall be guilty etc. The effect of s. 5 is to qualify the general repeal indicated in s. 2, by expressly declaring that offences defined and provided for by special and local laws continue to be offences and are punishable as such. Section 5 clearly declares that the Indian Penal Code is not intended to repeal, vary, suspend or affect any of the provisions of any special or local law. The one enactment has not the effect of repealing the other. The two co-exist without conflict. In order to leave no doubt on this point the law on the subject has been declared by the express provision of s. 26 of the General Clauses Act which provides that where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence. It is clear, therefore, that where an act is punishable under a special law and also under a general Statute, the offender could be proceeded with under either or both but could not be punished twice for the same act or omission which constituted the offence. Where there is nothing in the special Act to exclude the operation of the general criminal law, it cannot be inferred that there was an intention on the part of the Legislature to exclude it. We accept the following statement of law in Halsbury's Laws of England (Vol. XXVII, page 168):—

"The general law of the country is not altered by special legislation made without particular reference to it, though a Statute passed for a particular purpose must so far as that purpose extends override general enactments".

It was so held by the Madras High Court so far back as 1876 Proceedings of the High Court dated 22nd February 1876 (5). "The ordinary criminal law is not excluded by Regulation VII of 1817 or of Act XX of 1860 (vide s. 20). The permission of the Board of Revenue or of the Committees is required only for the procedure prescribed in the special Acts, and these special provisions cannot be taken out of the Acts, and applied as a restriction to the ordinary operation of the Criminal Law. In Queen v. Hossain Ali (6) it was held by Turner J. that on the same facts the conviction and sentence under s. 21 of the Cattle Trespass Act (Act I of 1871) and s. 169 of the Indian Penal Code was illegal. The conviction and sentence under s. 27 were quashed but the conviction under s. 169 was maintained but the sentence was reduced.

In Queen v. Ramchandruppa (7), it was held that the provisions of the Indian Penal Code were not in conflict with those of the special law, and effect might therefore, be given to both. It was observed in passing that in ordinary cases where there were no aggravating circumstances, the Village Munsif or Civil Court would act discreetly in employing the special powers conferred on it under s. 15 (6) and s. 16 (3) of Regulation IV of 1816, but if a charge was instituted in a Criminal Court under the Indian Penal Code, it must be dealt with by that Court. In Kumuda Prasad Mozumdar v. Emperor (8), a Bench of the Calcutta High Court took much the same view as was taken in the last mentioned case that ordinarily it was desirable that when an Act or omission was made penal by two Acts, one general and the other special, the sentence should be passed under the special Act. The learned Judges referred to the rule quoted by Lord Esher in Lee v. Danger (9):

"If one statute made the doing of an Act felonious and a subsequent Act makes it only penal, the latter is considered as the virtual repeal of the former."

After quoting this passage they made the following observation relating to this rule :

"We are not, however, disposed now to lay down broadly in this country, that in every case a special penal law repeals by implication a previously existing general law relating to an offence of the same nature, and in this case it is not necessary for us to do so. If we were to do so, we might infringe the rule of interpretation in s. 36 of the General Clauses Act. We are not also disposed to accept Mr. Roy's contention that the penal provisions of the Indian Railways Act are self-contained and the punishment for acts and omissions regarding a Railway Administration in India must be inflicted under this Act only. The penal provisions in the Act are not obviously exhaustive and there is nothing in the Act itself or any other enactment in force in India which excludes the operation of the general laws in force as to offences which are not punishable under the Act."

We are entirely in accord with the view set out above.

Our attention was called to the legal maxim referred to in the judgment of the Chief Court and to a number of English authorities which have been dealt with in the judgment of Mr. Justice Das in Emperor v. Abdul Hamid (4). We may mention at once that we consider that very different conditions prevail in the two countries. Here in this country, where we have got definite statutes, we have to follow the same. The rules or the Common Law of England or the legal maxims embodying certain judicial principles, however wholesome they may be, cannot be engrafted upon the Indian Penal Code. In order to consider whether or not the offences referred to in s. 9 of the Indian Salt Act, are, upon the fulfilment of certain conditions, offences under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code, we have to consider s. 9 of the Salt Act and read the same in conjunction with ss. 2, 5, 40 and 117, of the Indian Penal Code.

Considerable emphasis has been laid upon the fact that acts or omissions which amount to a criminal offence under the Salt Act have not been incorporated into the body of the Indian Penal Code as separate or distinct offences. We agree that it is so, but we are clearly of opinion that this makes no difference. It would have made the Indian Penal Code extremely cumbrous if the offences under the various special and local Acts were included as separate offences under the Indian Penal Code and punishments separately provided for them in the said Code. To avoid repetition, provisions have been made in the Indian Penal Code with reference to offences generally and distinct punishment has been provided for them in ss. 109 to 117 of the Indian Penal Code. Where abetments of offences under the special or local Act satisfy the conditions of ss. 109 to 117, all the ingredients constituting an offence are complete, and there does not appear to be any reason why a person against whom all the ingredients of these offences are present should not be convicted under those sections. It would, of course, be improper if for the same Act a person were to be convicted twice, i. e., once under the special law and again under the Indian Penal Code. But it is perfectly clear that, although in view of s. 26 of the General Clauses Act he could be prosecuted and convicted both under the special enactment and also the general law, he could be punished only once either under the former or the latter.

Act XII of 1882 is not a self contained Act. The offences enumerated therein are not exhaustive. The number of offences under the Salt Act becomes enlarged having reference to the provision of s. 40 read with ss. 2 and 5 of the Code which we have already referred to. The offences mentioned in s. 9 of Act XII of 1882 were not new offences. They were offences under the Salt Act of 1843. When the Penal Code was amended in 1870, the ambit of s. 117 became enlarged so as to include within its scope the offences under s. 9 of the Salt Act. The result was that where an offence under s. 9 (a) by the public generally or by a number of persons exceeding ten was abetted, it satisfied all the conditions of an offence under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code.

Dr. Katju has relied upon the judgment of Das, J., in Emperor v. Abdul Hamid (4) in which that learned Judge ruled that no person could be convicted under s. 141 of the Indian Penal Code for an offence in contravention of ss. 30 and 30 (a) of the Police Act (Act V of 1861). We may mention here that the view of Das, J., was not shared by his two colleagues on the Bench. The learned Judge was of opinion that the offence in question was a new offence and not an offence under the general law. He relied upon a number of English authorities including a passage from Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, Book II, page 25, s. 4 which ran as follows :—

"Also where a Statute makes a new offence which was in no way prohibited by the Common law, and appoints a peculiar manner of proceeding against the offender as by commitment, or action of debt or information, etc., without mentioning an indictment, it seems to be settled to this day that it would not maintain an indictment, because mentioning the other methods of proceeding seem impliedly to exclude that of indictment."

Reliance was also placed upon the judgment of Lord Herschell, L. C. in Institute of Patent Agents v. Joseph Lockwood (10). Following that decision, Mr. Justice Das observed as follows :—

"Here also for the first time a new offence has been created. But for the enactment treating that offence, the respondent has done nothing of which anybody would have a legal right to complain either civilly or criminally. The Legislature having created that new offence has prescribed the punishment for it, namely, a penalty of Rs. 200. If, as the Lord Chancellor pointed out, the mode of procedure and the amount of penalty are often regarded by the Legislature as of the utmost importance when they are creating new offence, can it be doubted for a single moment that the proper procedure was to proceed under the Act and not by indictment under the general law? In my opinion, the respondent could not be convicted under the Penal Code for an offence committed under the Police Act."

It is to be observed that s. 26 of the General Clauses Act was not brought to the notice of the learned Judge.

It is further to be added that the Salt Act (Act XII of 1882) does not provide for a distinct procedure for trial of offences under that Act.

Section 11 of the Salt Act does not provide for or prescribe any rules of procedure. It provides that the case cannot be instituted except on the complaint of a particular officer and also prescribes a period of limitation for such complaint. It also provides that offences under the Act were triable by Magistrates exercising powers not less than those of a Magistrate of the Second Class. The procedure to be followed for trial of cases under the Act is the Code of Criminal Procedure. We have already noticed that the offences under Act XII of 1882 were not new offences; nor could the offences under the Act be restricted to those enumerated in s. 9 of the Act. The case of Abdul Hamid was decided by Mullick and Coutts, JJ., on different lines. They were of opinion that Abdul Hamid could not be convicted under s. 141 of the Indian Penal Code because there was no evidence that he was aware that any breach of the notification had been committed. The Patna case was considered by a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Bhalchandra Trimbak v. Emperor (11). We are in accord with the view expressed by the learned Judges, at pages 439 and 443.*

Dr. Katju also referred to Ram Nath v. Emperor (3). Babu Ram Nath who was a practising Mukhtar at Agra was convicted by a First Class Magistrate under s. 465 of the Indian Penal Code read with s. 114 of the same Code and sentenced to undergo one year's simple imprisonment. The offence alleged against him was that he abetted the false personation of a voter named Hari Shankar. It was contended on his behalf that his conviction under s. 465 of the Indian Penal Code was illegal and that he should have been convicted under s. 171 (f) of the same Code. Effect was given to this contention and it was ruled that where there were two provisions, one specific and the other general, the specific provision ought to be applied in preference to the general one. The learned Judge observed :

"If this view be correct, the offence committed must be treated as one under s. 171 (f) of the Indian Penal Code in preference to s. 465."

No reasons have been given for this view and no authorities cited. The case moreover is distinguishable, because the offence did not fall under the two enactments. Chandi Prasad v. Abul Rahman (2), appears to have been a special case. The learned Judges were of opinion that the Municipal Act was intended to be complete in itself as regards offences committed against the Municipal Commissioners and there was no indication in the Act to make a delinquent also liable to punishment under the Indian Penal Code. In the present case, we have got to consider whether there is anything in the special Act, viz., Act XII of 1882 to exclude the operation of the general criminal law as contained in the Indian Penal Code. Such an intention cannot be presumed. The intention can be inferred either from express words of the text or by necessary implication. It could never have been the intention of the Legislature to repeal offences providing for heavier punishments merely by reason of the fact that a minor penalty had been provided for in this special Act. If we hold otherwise, the result would be that many offenders must escape punishment under the Indian Penal Code, because a minor penalty for those offences had been provided by special enactment. Offences of abetment under the Indian Penal Code are of various character and punishments have been provided for, which vary in degree according to the nature and character of the crime. These various forms of abetment have not been provided for either in the Salt Act or any other special or local enactments. They fall as we have shown under the general law.

In 42 Ind. Cas. 608 [Segu Baliah v. N. Ramasamiah (12)], the same set of acts constituted an offence under s. 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (Act III of 1907) and also under ss. 421 and 424 of the Indian Penal Code. It was argued that s. 43 virtually repealed ss. 421 and 424 of the Indian Penal Code. It was held in this case that where a special enactment dealt with an offence similar to an offence dealt with by a general enactment, it did not follow that the provisions of the general enactment had been repealed to that extent. The Calcutta case of Chandi Prasad was cited but was not followed. It is pointed out that s. 26 of the General Clauses Act was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges. There appears to be very good reason for it, because s. 26 did not apply to a case where the offences charged were not under two separate enactments, but were two separate offences under the same enactment.

Upon a consideration of the text of the various Statutes before us and the authorities dealing with the same, we unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that a person guilty of abetment of an offence under s. 9 (a) of the Indian Salt Act may be convicted and sentenced under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code where it is proved that the Act amounted to an abetment of the commission of an offence by the public generally or by any number or class of persons exceeding ten. We hold, therefore, that Joti Prasad Gupta has been properly convicted and sentenced under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code.

Dr. Katju has urged a plea for the reduction of sentence. This point is not covered by the reference. Joti Prasad Gupta has preferred no application to this Court for reduction of sentence. The plea of reduction has not been urged by Dr. Katju on instructions received from Joti Prasad Gupta. We consider that the offence committed by him was of a serious character. In view of all the circumstances, we refuse to interfere with the sentence.

The result is that we reject the reference.

Muhammadan Law—Guardianship—Mother—Right to refer to arbitration dispute relating to immovable property of minor children—Family arrangement.

Under the Muhammadan Law the mother as the de facto guardian of her minor children is not competent to enter on their behalf into an agreement to refer to arbitration disputes relating to the distribution of their father's estate so as to make the award binding upon them as to their share in such immovable property. She is equally incompetent to agree to the disposal of her infant children's share in any part of the immovable property of their father by adopting an award made on a reference made by her and by calling the transaction a family arrangement. *Imbandi v. Messrs S Hyam and J. M. Pringle, for the Respondents.

Sir Lancelot Sanderson.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in the suit against a judgment and two decrees of the Chief Court of Oudh, dated the 18th October, 1928, which reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 17th January, 1928, as amended by his order dated the 8th March, 1928.

The suit was brought by Mohammad Ejaz Husain and his sister Khaliq-un-nisa against their full and half-brothers and sisters, their mother Faiyz un-nisa and Hamid un-nisa, the wife of Amir Hasan, the defendant No. 4.

The relationship between the parties to the suit appears from the pedigree which was attached to the judgment of the Chief Court, and which is as follows:—

The suit was brought for a declaration that an agreement dated the 25th March, 1912, and an award dated the 2nd April, 1912, were null and void and inoperative and for a partition of certain properties alleged to have been the properties of the plaintiffs' father, Mohammad Hussain.

The learned Subordinate Judge, who tried the suit, made a decree in the plaintiffs' favour: this decree was subsequently amended on an application for review, and it was thereby directed that the plaintiffs should get from the defendant No. 4 (i. e., Amir Hasan) a 21-1/4th share, first, out of the sum of Rs. 25,526, being the capitalised value of a factory, and, secondly, a declaration of their rights to that extent out of the property No. 10 of the plaint List A, in so far as it was left:—

"... after meeting claims of the original owners and the acquisition by the Improvement Trust, and also out of the property No. 20 of the list, which is a family graveyard. Possession over the share-out of the property No. 10 can be obtained only after redemption of the mortgage assigned to the defendant No. 4 (vide Ex. 11), the trust compensation money being taken to have satisfied pro rata a part of this mortgage-debt.

"Plaintiffs shall further get interest on the amount under the first head at the rate of Rs. 12 per cent. per annum from 4th March, 1912, to the date of realisation. Costs on parties. A preliminary decree for partition to be prepared in those terms."

From this decree both Amir Hasan, defendant No. 4, and the plaintiffs appealed to the Chief Court of Oudh.

The learned Judges of the Chief Court allowed the appeal of Amir Hasan and dismissed the appeal of the plaintiffs. The result was that the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed, the Chief Court directing that the parties should bear their own costs in both Courts.

These are the decrees from which the plaintiffs have appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Amir Hasan has died since the decree of the chief Court was made, and his representatives are now on the record, and they are the only respondents contesting this appeal.

The material facts are as follows.—

Mohammad Hussain, the father of the plaintiffs and of the defendants Nos. 1 to 6, died on the 4th March, 1912.

On the 25th March, 1912, an agreement of reference to arbitration was executed by Amir Hasan (the fourth defendant), his two sisters (defendants Nos. 5 and 6), and Faiyaz-un-nisa (defendant No. 7), who was the surviving widow of Mohammad Hussain, and the mother of the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

The plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were minors at the date of the agreement, and their mother purported to execute the agreement for herself in person and as guardian in the capacity "of the real mother" on behalf of the plaintiffs and her other minor children. By the said agreement all matters in dispute were referred to two arbitrators and an umpire, who were named in the said agreement.

One of the issues raised at the trial was as follows:—

"(1) Did Mohammad Hussain constitute the defendant No. 7 as guardian of the person and property of plaintiffs as well as of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. If so, with what effect?"

This issue was answered in the negative by the learned Subordinate Judge, and his decision in this respect was approved by the Chief Court.

It has not been argued before the Board that these findings were wrong, and the appeal must, therefore, be decided upon the assumption that Faiyaz-un-nisa was not appointed by Mohammad Hussain guardian of the person and property of the plaintiffs.

Further, it is to be noted that at the date of the said agreement Faiyaz-un-nisa had not been appointed guardian of the person and property of her minor children by the Court.

On the 3rd of April, 1912, the arbitrators with the concurrence of the umpire, made their award in writing. They decided:—

"(1) That the properties acquired by the deceased in the name of his wife, Faiyaz-un-nisa, defendant No. 7, belonged to her as her separate properties and that she was entitled to those properties; (2) that the properties acquired by the deceased in the name of Amir Hasan, defendant No. 4, were his separate properties and that he was entitled to them; (3) that the factory known as the Victor Ice and Flour Mills, situate at Bagh Sherjang, City Lucknow, was given at Amir Hasan by the deceased during his lifetime and the same belonged to him, and (4) that the remaining properties should be distributed among the several heirs according to their legal shares under the Muhammadan Law."

The award was carried out and acted upon until the filing of this suit.

On the 18th July, 1912, Faiyaz-un-nisa filed an application in the Court of the District Judge of Lucknow under s. 10 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), praying for a certificate of guardianship of the person and property of her minor children, including the plaintiffs.

On the 18th September, 1912, the certificate was issued.

The plaintiff, Mohammad Ejaz, attained his majority on the 21st October, 1923.

The plaintiff, Khaliq-un-nisa, attained her majority on the 8th October, 1925.

The suit was instituted on the 20th October, 1926, just within three years from the date on which the first plaintiff attained his majority.

In the suit many issues were raised, but it is not necessary to refer to them all. Both the Courts in India held that the properties acquired by Mohammad Husain in the names of Faiyaz-un-nisa and Amir Hasan belonged to the two last-mentioned persons respectively, and on these matters they agreed with the decision of the arbitrators. No question arises in this appeal with respect to these properties.

It is material, however, to note that at the time of the arbitration the interest of Faiyaz-un-nisa and that of her minor children were not identical with respect to the properties standing in her name, for if the arbitrators had come to the conclusion that Faiyaz-un-nisa was holding these properties benami for her husband, as alleged, the minor children would have been entitled to their respective shares therein.

Both Courts in India decided the issue as to the factory known as the Victor Ice and Flour Mills in the plaintiffs' favour. Disagreeing with the award in this respect, they held that the alleged oral gift of the factory by Mohammad Husain to Amir Hasan had not been established. The concurrent findings in respect of this issue have not been disputed in this appeal. It must, therefore, be taken for the purposes of this appeal that the said factory was part of the estate of Mohammad Husain at the date of his death and that, subject to the question hereinafter to be considered, the plaintiffs, as two of his heirs, are entitled to their respective shares in the said factory.

There is no dispute as to the shares to which the plaintiffs are entitled in the properties of their father, viz., 14-104ths in respect of the first plaintiff, and 7-104ths in respect of his sister, the second plaintiff.

The main issue raised in the Court of the Subordinate Judge was whether Faiyaz-un-nisa, acting on behalf of her minor children, the plaintiffs, was competent to refer to arbitration the matter of the division of the assets of Mohammad Husain and questions connected therewith, and consequently whether the plaintiffs were bound by the award.

The Subordinate Judge decided this issue in favour of the plaintiffs, on the ground that Faiyaz-un-nisa, the mother of the plaintiffs, had no authority to refer, so as to bind the plaintiffs.

He was of opinion that otherwise the award did not appear to be perverse, unfair or influenced by any corruption or misconduct of the arbitrators.

The learned Judges of the Chief Court agreed with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on this issue and held that the agreement to refer to arbitration executed by Faiyaz-un-nisa on behalf of her minor children could not be considered binding on them and that the award, if looked at from that point of view, must be held to be an inoperative document.

The learned Judges of the Chief Court however, were of opinion that the scheme of distribution promulgated in the award, and which the learned Subordinate Judge had found to be in no way perverse or unfair or influenced by any corruption or misconduct of the arbitrators, and which had been followed without any objection whatever for a long period extending over fourteen years, could well be recognised as a family settlement, and they stated that they were extremely reluctant to disturb the arrangement arrived at so far back as April, 1912.

Their Lordships appreciate the reluctance felt by the learned Judges, in view of the time which had elapsed since the arbitration and award. But the plaintiffs, on the death of their father, became entitled to their respective shares in his estate, and in view of the findings of both Courts in India it must now be taken that the above-mentioned Ice and Flour Factory was part of the immoveable property of Mohammad Husain, in which the plaintiffs were entitled to share, and yet by the award it was allotted to Amir Hasan as being his own property. The award in this respect, when carried out, amounted to an alienation of the plaintiffs' shares in that property, to which being infants they could not consent, and unless Faiyaz-un-nisa, their mother, had authority to act on their behalf and was competent to enter into the alleged arrangement by which the said alienation was effected, the infant plaintiffs' shares in the said property could not be affected.

The learned Judges held that Faiyaz-un-nisa, although she was at the time of the agreement the "de facto" guardian of the plaintiffs, who were then minors, had no power to deal with their property, and consequently that she had no authority to enter on their behalf into the agreement to refer the disputes to arbitration, which, if acted upon, would necessarily affect the immoveable property of the infant plaintiffs.

If Faiyaz-un-nisa was not competent to deal with the immoveable property of the plaintiffe, by referring the disputes relating to the distribution of their father's estate to arbitration, and if the award made on such arbitration was not binding on the plaintiffe, it is difficult to see how Faiyaz-un-nisa could be competent to effectuate that distribution and to make the provisions of the award binding upon the infant plaintiffe merely by calling that which was contained in the agreement and the award a family arrangement.

Their Lordships are of opinion that if Faiyaz-un-nisa was not competent to enter into the agreement of reference so as to bind the plaintiffe, who were minors at the time, with respect to their share in the immoveable property of their father, it must follow that she was equally incompetent to agree to the disposal of the infant plaintiffe's share in any part of the immoveable property of their father by adopting the award and by calling the transaction a family arrangement.

It is therefore necessary to consider the question whether Faiyaz-un-nisa had authority to enter into the agreement of reference on behalf of the plaintiffe who were minors at the time.

It has already been stated that Faiyaz-un-nisa was not appointed guardian of the person and property of the minor children by Mohammad Hussain, and that at the date of the agreement of reference she had not been appointed guardian by the Court.

At the time, therefore, of the agreement to refer she was not the legal guardian of her infant children, but merely the custodian of them. The provisions and principles of the Muhammadan Law which govern this matter were stated in the judgment of Mr. Ameer Ali when delivering the decision of this Board in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi, (1). At page 83* the following passage is to be found: -

"It is perfectly clear that under the Muhammadan Law the mother is entitled only to the custody of the person of her minor child up to a certain age according to the sex of the child. But she is not the natural guardian; the father alone, or, if he be dead, his executor (under the Sunni Law) is the legal guardian. The mother has no larger powers to deal with her minor child's property than any outsider or non-relative who happens to have charge for the time being of the infant. The term 'de facto guardian' that has been applied to these persons is misleading; it connotes the idea that people in charge of a child are by virtue of that fact invested with certain powers over the infant's property. This idea is quite erroneous, and the judgment of the Board in Mata Din v. Ahmed Ali (2) clearly indicated it."

At pages 81 and 82* there are other material passages, which are as follows:—

"As already observed, in the absence of the father, under the Sunni Law, the guardianship vests in his executor. If the father dies without appointing an executor (wasi) and his father is alive, the guardianship of his minor children devolves on their grandfather. Should he also be dead and have left an executor, it vests in him. In default of these de jure guardians, the duty of appointing a guardian for the protection and preservation of the infant's property devolves on the Judge as the representative of the Sovereign: Baillie's Digest (Ed. 1875), p. 689; Hamilton's Hedaya vol. 4, bk 52, c. 7, p. 525. No one else has any right or power to intermeddle with the property of a minor except for certain specified purposes, the nature of which is clearly defined. But the powers of even the de jure guardians are confined within legal limits. For example, whilst an executor-guardian (wasi) may sell or purchase movables on account of the orphan under his charge either for an equivalent or at such a rate as to occasion an inconsiderable loss, dealings with his immovable property are subjected to strict conditions; Baillie's Digest, page 687.

"When the mother is the father's executrix or is appointed by the Judge as guardian of the minors, she has all the powers of a de jure guardian. Without such derivative authority, if she assumes charge of their property of whatever description and purports to deal with it, she does so at her own risk, and her acts are like those of any other person who arrogates an authority which he does not legally possess. She may incur responsibilities, but can impose no obligations on the infant."

Mr. Ameer Ali then referred to certain exceptions provided for the protection of a minor child who has no "de jure" guardian, which were classified under three heads: it is clear that the present case does not fall within any of the stated exceptions.

The decision in the above-mentioned case was acted upon by Teunon and Beachcroft, JJ. in Mohsiuddin Ahmed v. K. Ahmed (3) the head-note of which is as follows:—

"The mother, as the de facto guardian of minors, is not competent, under the Muhammadan Law, to enter on their behalf into an agreement to refer to arbitration any dispute, even where there is no de jure guardian of the minors, such agreement being one which will necessarily, if acted upon, involve dealings with the immovable properties of the minors."

Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1) referred to.

Adopting the principles of Muhammadan Law as stated by this Board in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1) their Lordships have no doubt that the Courts in India were right in holding that Faiyaz-un-nisa had no authority to enter into the agreement of reference on behalf of the plaintiffs, who were minors at the time, so as to make the award binding upon them as to their share in the immoveable property of their father.

They are also of opinion that Faiyaz-un-nisa had no power or authority to enter into an arrangement whereby the plaintiffs' share in the immoveable property of their father would be affected, in view of the fact that at the time of the said agreement she was not their legal guardian, and she cannot be clothed with the necessary authority by calling the transaction a family arrangement.

Their Lordships' attention was drawn by learned Counsel for the respondents to several reported cases: in their opinion it is not necessary to deal with them in detail. It is sufficient to say that none of them covered the point which is now under consideration.

Reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the respondents upon the fact that on the 18th September, 1912, Faiyaz-un-nisa was appointed by the Court guardian of the person and property of the minors, including the plaintiffs, and that, therefore, it should be taken that the Court, by appointing Faiyaz-un-nisa guardian, must have approved the arrangement evidenced by the agreement of reference and the award. There is, however, no evidence that the District Judge was made aware of the said arrangement. Indeed, it was admitted that if an application had been made to him before the agreement to refer was executed, and if he had been informed that the interest of the mother with regard to some of the properties was not identical with that of the minors, as was the fact, the Judge would in the ordinary course have appointed some person, other than the mother, as guardian of the minors. It is obvious that the District Judge did not consider the question which is now before their Lordships, and the mere fact that the Court subsequently found the mother a fit person to act for the minors would not validate the arrangement, which in its inception was invalid.

A further point was raised by the learned Counsel for the respondents, viz, that the plaintiff Ejaz Husain could not maintain the suit because he had ratified the alleged family arrangement as to part of the estate allotted to him by the award.

It appears that certain mortgage deeds had been executed in favour of Mohammad Husain and these were included in the shares awarded to the plaintiff and his brothers. A suit on the mortgages was instituted on the 13th October, 1922, by Iftikhar Husain after attaining majority, and his three brothers, of whom Ejaz Husain was one, as minors, under the guardianship of their mother.

A preliminary decree was obtained on the 11th October, 1923, and an application was made for a decree absolute on the 22nd September, 1924, and the decree was made absolute on the 1st November, 1924—Ejaz Husain was of age when the application for decree absolute was made, and signed it as a major.

Their Lordships do not consider that this is sufficient to prevent Ejaz Husain from maintaining the present suit. Proceedings in the mortgage suit had been begun when he was a minor, and when the time came for application for a decree absolute the mother had no longer any authority to act for him, as he had attained majority, and Ejaz being a party to the suit his signature to the application was necessary to bring the proceedings to a conclusion in the interest of all concerned.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that they were entitled to an account of and a share in all the profits made by Amir Hasan in respect of the Ice and Flour Factory.

Their Lordships are unable to accept this contention.

It appears that Amir Hasan managed the business of the factory in his father's lifetime and continued so to do after his death. The old factory has gone, most of the machinery being worn out, and modern factories were erected by him in its place.

These and other facts stated by the learned Subordinate Judge, which need not be mentioned in detail, are sufficient to show that this is not a case for mesne profits. The rights of the plaintiffs in this respect are fully met by the allowance of interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum made by the Subordinate Judge. It is worthy of note that the plaintiff-appellants in their case did not ask for mesne profits, but submitted that the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge should be restored, and that Rs. 25,000, the amount fixed by the Chief Court, should be substituted for Rs. 25,526, which was the sum decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge as the capitalised value of the factory.

For the above-mentioned reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the Chief Court dated the 18th October, 1928, must be set aside, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge dated the 17th January, 1928, as amended by the order of the 8th March, 1928, be restored, but that the sum of Rs. 25,000 be substituted for the sum of Rs. 25,526 mentioned in the said decree of the Subordinate Judge.

The respondents, the heirs of the deceased respondent, Sheikh Amir Hasan, must pay the costs of the plaintiffs of this appeal, and of the appeals to the Chief Court. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Commission for examination of witnesses—Unnecessary protraction, an abuse to be checked—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 11—Unsoundness of mind—Mere loss of memory distinguished—Medical evidence, value of—Execution of deeds—Executants not understanding details—Validity of deed.

Unnecessary protraction of examination of witnesses on commission which enormously increases the costs of litigation without any corresponding benefit to the parties should be checked and it is within the powers of the High Courts to direct an enquiry with a view to disciplinary action in flagrant cases which come under their notice at the hearing of appeals. [p. 102, col. 2.]

Loss of memory does not usually reach such a stage during the lifetime of the individual so as to unfit him for the management of his own affairs. [p. 105, col. 1.]

The fact that the medical history of a case was derived from an unreliable informant is an important factor which detracts from the weight of medical evidence. [p. 107, col. 2.]

In India as in England it is enough for the executant of a legal document to understand the nature of the transaction leaving the details to his lawyer. It is not necessary that he should understand all the terms of the document. [p. 106, col. 2.]

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K.C. and B. Dube, K. C., for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dune, K. C. and J. M. Parikh, for the Respondent.

Sir John Wallis—Disputes about the dispositions and contracts of people of advanced age and failing powers are always difficult cases to decide, and the difficulty is greatly increased when, as in the present case, the record has swollen to enormous size owing to the way in which the examination of the witnesses on commission was protracted, assuredly not in the interests of the parties. A scandalous instance of this abuse is to be found, as observed by the learned Judges of the High Court, in the examination of Ananda Roy, the principal witness for the plaintiffs, which takes up two hundred and twenty-six pages of the record, and contains twelve hundred and fifty questions and answers, most of which, as admitted at the trial by the Vakils on both sides were quite irrelevant to the suit.

In another appeal with an enormous record for the same High Court it was recently stated that the cross-examination on commission of a purdahnashin lady lasted for a hundred days. In their Lordships' opinion it is imperative that an abuse of this kind, which enormously increases the costs of litigation without any corresponding benefit to the parties, should be checked, and it would appear to be clearly within the powers of the High Courts to direct an enquiry with a view to disciplinary action in flagrant cases which come under their notice at the hearing of appeals.

The question in the present case is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to obtain specific performance of a registered bainapatra or agreement to sell the suit properties executed by Kali Narayan, the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 4, who have been brought on after his death with his other descendants in the male line as his legal representatives, and the main defence is that he was then of unsound mind for the purpose of making a contract, within the meaning s. 12 of the Indian Contract Act, as being at the time he made it "incapable of understanding it and of forming a rational judgment as to its effect upon his interests."

There were also allegations of conspiracy on the part of the plaintiffs as to which it was admitted at the hearing of the appeal in the High Court that there was no evidence.

The plaintiff's case, which has been accepted by the High Court is, on the face of it, a perfectly straightforward one. They are traders who had made money, and coming to know in the middle of 1920 that the suit properties were for sale, they entered into negotiations for purchasing them. The properties consisted of two small zemindaris, one in the Dacca and the other in the Tipperah District, together with a five annas share of a shikmi taluq in one of these zemindaris, which Kali Narayan, the zemindar, had acquired, the remaining eleven annas belonging to the Majitpur Babus, who were the shikmi taluqdars. The Majitpur Babus were naturally anxious to regain the sole ownership of the taluq, and came forward with counter offers. Ananda Chandra Roy, an old friend of Kali Narayan, who was advising him about his affairs, was for asking thirty-five years' purchase, subject to certain deductions. This was apparently a very good price, and, probably, as usually happens, a little more than was hoped for. The offers of the plaintiffs and the Babus fell far short of this, and the negotiations went off. In October the properties were publicly advertised for sale, and in December the plaintiffs came forward with a new offer of thirty-two years' purchase. It was refused, and they were going away when Kali Narayan's wife suggested that they should increase their offer to thirty-three years' purchase. Kali Narayan accepted this offer subject to Ananda's approval, which the plaintiffs obtained. Ananda says he thought it a very good price, as it apparently was. A bainapatra or agreement to sell was then drawn up by Basanta, the estate lawyer, and was executed by Kali Narayan, who signed in eleven places. It was witnessed by Basanta, the estate lawyer, by Bhupati, Narayan's son, who was residing in the house, and now says he did not know what the deed was about, and by several other persons. It was then registered by the Registrar of Dacca, who came to the house and obtained Kali Narayan's admission of execution.

Coming to know of the bainapatra, the Majitpur Babus, in their anxiety to become the sole owners of the taluq, or possibly because they did not care to have mere traders as co-sharers, offered forty years' purchase, three of which were to go to the almos or estate servants for their part in bringing about the sale. With this incentive Kali Narayan's estate manager, Durga Sankar, and the estate lawyer, Basanta, exerted themselves to induce the plaintiffs to abandon the contract on terms, but without success. Roy, J., also surmises that it was thought that the plaintiffs, who were traders, ought to stand aside in favour of the Babus.

The plaintiffs' case is that this counter-offer was the sole reason why the transaction did not go through, and that to get out of their bargain the defendants falsely charged the plaintiffs with conspiracy and set up that Kali Narayan was an imbecile dotard when he signed the bainapatra and did not know what he was doing.

This contention of the plaintiffs receives some support from the fact that no suggestion of the kind was made during the negotiations after the bainapatra, and that the defendants confined themselves for a considerable time to an attitude of passive obstruction. When the plaintiffs after repeated applications for the particulars necessary for the sale deed, at the house in Dacca where Kali Narayan was then residing, served notices by registered post, upon Kali Narayan himself and on his manager, Durga Sankar, these notices were not accepted and were returned by the postal authorities to the senders. Early in January Kali Narayan went back to his home in Bandar and the plaintiffs went down and were refused admittance. On the 31st January, 1921, they went down again with a Pleader and tendered the balance of the purchase money, which was not accepted.

They saw Kumar Krishna, the principal defendant, and Durga Sankar, the manager, and were kept waiting for nearly an hour, when they left to catch their train. They had heard Kali Narayan and his wife talking upstairs, and called out to them as they were going away, but without result. They were not told that this defence was to be raised, or that a few days previously the Civil Surgeon of Dacca had been brought down to Narayangunje on two successive days and, to save time, being a busy man, had seen Kali Narayan in a boat in the river, and had certified that he was incapable of managing his own affairs and was not malingering or feigning loss of memory. An interview with Kali Narayan and his wife at this stage might have given the plaintiffs an opportunity of giving evidence contesting these conclusions, and it was not allowed to take place.

Eventually, on the 30th June, 1921, the plaintiffs filed the present suit against Kali Narayan for specific performance in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Tipperah at Comilla setting out the contract and the efforts they had made to get the sale-deed executed. An application was then made on behalf of the defendant for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, on the ground that he was unable himself to defend the suit. The Subordinate Judge saw and questioned him and made the order, though he was not sure whether the confusion in Kali Narayan's answers was wilful or bona fide. After the guardian ad litem had filed a written statement and issues had been settled, the High Court set aside the order appointing a guardian ad litem and directed the Subordinate Judge to hold a judicial inquiry as to Kali Narayan's mental condition. Lieut.-Col. MacKelvie, who was the Civil Surgeon of Dacca, was examined for the defendant, and Dr. K. B. Narayan, Civil Surgeon of Tipperah, was examined on behalf of the plaintiffs, but before the inquiry was completed Kali Narayan died, in July, 1922, and the suit was continued against the present defendants as his legal representatives with substantially the same pleadings and issues.

The principal written statement is a very lengthy document, setting out as it does not only the defendants' contentions but also much of the evidence on which they intended to rely. Shortly, their story was that Kali Narayan had for many years been in his dotage and had left the management of his property to his sons, and that his favourite son-in-law, Satish Chandra, a kabiraj or doctor practising Hindu medicine at Dacca, who was on bad terms with the rest of the family, had by means of false allegations in a petition to the Sub-Divisional Officer, procured the removal of Kali Narayan from his own home at Bandar to Dacca and had got him to execute a registered Will in his favour, although he was then like an inert mass, and a mere puppet incapable of understanding what he was doing. Subsequently, Satish Chandra had conspired, it was alleged, with the plaintiffs and others to get a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiffs from Kali Narayan at a gross undervalue. It was further denied that Rs. 11,000 deposit mentioned in the deed had been received by Kali Narayan, and it was also alleged that Satish Chandra was to get Rs. 15,000 from the plaintiffs for his services in obtaining these properties for them at an undervalue. They also alleged that the bainapatra was bad for vagueness and uncertainty.

The following were the material issues :—

"5. Was Kali Narayan incompetent to enter into the contract referred to in the plaint? Was he incapable of understanding the terms and stipulation of the bainapatra or of forming a rational judgment as to its effect upon his interest at or before the time of its execution?"

"6. Has the said bainapatra been secured by plaintiffs by undue influence, fraud and unfair means?"

"10. Is the contract bad for vagueness and indefiniteness?"

The Subordinate Judge found all these issues in favour of the defendants, gave the plaintiffs a decree for the return of their deposit of Rs. 11,000 with interest, and otherwise dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs then appealed to the High Court at Calcutta, who allowed the appeal and decreed the suit.

At the hearing of the appeal it was admitted by the defendant's Counsel that there was no evidence on which a finding that the plaintiffs had been a party to any conspiracy could be based. This of itself greatly detracts from the weight of the Subordinate Judge's judgment. Further, he failed to see that, as admitted before their Lordships, if the principal witnesses for the plaintiffs are to be believed, and he did not find they were not, they abundantly established that Kali Narayan was of sound mind during his stay at Dacca, where the bainapatra was executed.

It has, however, been contended by Mr. DeGruyther for the appellants here that the learned Judges, in accepting the evidence of these witnesses, failed to attach sufficient weight to medical evidence, which he contends shows clearly that Kali Narayan was of unsound mind during the whole of his stay at Dacca, and that the witnesses who depose that he was not are unworthy of credit. That is really the question on which their Lordships are now called upon to decide after hearing it argued for several days and giving it their anxious consideration.

At the end of 1919 Kali Narayan was undoubtedly an old man, who had long been in bad health and had for several years left his sons to manage his affairs. He was no longer the man he was, but was depressed and his memory was bad. It was said by one of the medical witnesses that loss of memory in elderly people means incipient senile dementia, and in the case of Indians sets in at forty. Happily, even if this be so, it does not usually reach such a stage during the lifetime of the individual as to unfit him for the management of his own affairs, especially if he is wise enough not to rely on his own judgment, but to act on the best advice available. This, the learned Judges have found, is precisely what Kali Narayan did in this transaction.

The defendants' case is that at this time he was an imbecile dotard, incapable of forming any judgment of his own, and that his wife and his son-in-law Satish Chandra were anxious to get him to Dacca to execute documents to the prejudice of his sons. The plaintiffs' case is that he wanted to make reasonable provision by Will for his daughters and daughters' sons, who would have taken nothing if he died intestate, and that he was also very anxious about the condition into which his affairs had been brought under his sons' management and the mortgages he had had to execute.

In Dacca he had an old friend, Ananda Chandra Roy, a successful lawyer who had retired from business and acquired zemindary property, and was admittedly one of the most influential men in Dacca. In December, 1919, Ananda received a letter signed by Kali Narayan, begging him to come to his assistance, as his sons were causing trouble and would not allow him to go to Dacca. Ananda, who was 75, could not go himself, but he obtained a vakalat from Kali Narayan and sent a Pleader to apply to Mr. Steeg, the Sub Divisional Officer at Narayangunje, for an order to produce Kali Narayan before him. Mr. Steeg made the order, and the sons, who were told of it, offered no active resistance, but are alleged to have been responsible for the fact that there were no bearers for the dhooly in which Kali Narayan's wife was to go with him. Kali Narayan did not allow this to stand in his way, but set off in his palanquin, leaving his wife to follow on foot. The Subordinate Judge regarded his exposing his wife to such an indignity as an act of madness, whereas the learned Judges as it appears to their Lordships with more reason, regarded it as a proof of his determination to get away and as a strong exercise of will power on his part.

Krishna Kumar, one of the sons and the principal defendant, followed behind to see where they were going, travelled on the same train to Dacca, and then returned to Bandar. If Kali Narayan had then been an imbecile dotard, he had only to call Mr. Steeg's attention to the fact. He did not do so, and Mr. Steeg, after seeing Kali Narayan in his palanquin, merely recorded that he was proceeding to Dacca. He waited at Narayangunje station for his wife and left for Dacca by a late train, arriving late at night. Before proceeding to his son-in-law's house, he went to Ananda, thanked him for what he had done, and asked for his assistance in extricating his estate from its difficulties, which Ananda consented to do. He also spoke about a Will and, though Ananda told him there was no hurry about it, it is common ground that a few days after his arrival at Dacca he executed and registered a Will by which he left a legacy of Rs. 5,000 to his wife and made a modest provision for annuities to his daughters and daughters' sons. The Will also contained provisions of more doubtful wisdom that the estate was not to be handed over to his sons until eleven years after his death, and was in the meantime to be managed by his executors, his wife and another, who were to make the sons such allowances as they thought fit. Ananda says he was shown the draft will before execution and made certain corrections in it.

As regards the management of his estate during his own lifetime, Kali Narayan, under Ananda's advice, removed his sons from management and put in as manager Durga Sankar, whom Ananda had found for him, and appointed the Pleader, Basanta, as the estate lawyer, it being understood that Ananda himself was to be consulted in matters of importance. Ananda says that this scheme was adopted after the sons had rejected an alternative scheme under which they were to be left in possession of part of the estate. Kali Narayan then directed that the sons were to live separately, each son receiving the apparently inadequate allowance of Rs. 6 a month, and gave notice that no credit was to be given to them. The defendants' case now is that, in taking these steps, Kali Narayan was a mere puppet in the hands of his son-in-law, Satish Chandra, and of Ananda, and was incapable, owing to his condition, of exercising any volition of his own. If this had really been the case, it is strange that they acquiesced without protest in the drastic action taken against them, as they undoubtedly did. Their lame explanation is that they were acting on the advice of a Pleader, who told them to keep quiet and do nothing beyond obtaining a medical certificate from an English doctor who had examined Kali Narayan as to the advisability of his going to Dacca for treatment a few days before he went there. The Pleader has not been called, and all that is proved is that, after hearing of the registered Will, they obtained this medical certificate, no doubt for the purpose of using it to resist Probate. The certificate and the doctor's evidence will be considered later.

As to Ananda's part in these transactions, great as was his influence, it was perhaps not very wise of him, from his own point of view, as was proved by the event, to interfere in this way in his old friend's affairs; but that a man of his position and experience should have interfered in this way without authority in the affairs of an imbecile dotard in the hope of corrupt gain, as suggested by the defence, is as improbable as that Kali Narayan's sons should have acquiesced in his doing so.

Their Lordships have already stated and will not repeat the circumstances under which the bainapatra came to be executed. The defendants now go so far as to assert that they never knew of any proposal to sell these properties till afterwards, although negotiations had been going on for months, the plaintiffs had been down to Bandar to see the manager, Durga Sankar, and inspect the properties with a view to purchase, and they had been publicly advertised for sale. It is further proved that the defendants were frequently at the parents' home in Dacca, and no doubt whilst "keeping quiet," knew perfectly all that was going on. As already stated, the bainapatra was witnessed by one of the defendants, Bhupati, whom it was sought at the trial to represent as a simpleton. The fact that the manager, Durga Sankar, was absent on account of a funeral ceremony in his family when the bargain was finally struck and the deed executed is of no consequence, as the previous negotiations had been with him, and the price was approved by Ananda, on whom Kali Narayan relied. Comment has also been made on the fact that the plaintiffs did not call Satish Chandra, the son-in-law, who was included in their list of witnesses. One of the executors of the Will who was going to give evidence for the plaintiffs, had a conversation with Satish shortly before the trial, which left him under the impression that Satish thought the plaintiffs had a good case and would succeed. He would probably not have been sorry, having regard to the imputations which had been made against him. Nothing, however, was then said about his giving evidence himself. It was the interest of his wife's family to get out of the bargain, and he may have been reluctant actively to oppose them. The plaintiffs were probably wise in not calling him.

Witnesses have been asked if Kali Narayan could have understood all the terms of the bainapatra, but that was unnecessary. It was enough if he knew he was selling his property on terms approved by his protector Ananda by a document prepared by the estate lawyer. In India, as here, it is enough for the executant of a legal document to understand the nature of the transaction, leaving the details to his lawyer.

As to his state of mind at the time, the evidence of witnesses, which there is no reason to distrust, shows that during his stay in Dacca, though an infirm old man, he was not destitute of understanding, feeling or manners. The leading Indian doctor who attended him for rheumatism and heart disease says he saw him frequently, and noticed nothing wrong with his mind. When one of his daughters died, he felt it so deeply that he insisted on moving to another house. His wife had an apoplectic fit, and, when she had got over it, a choleraic attack. He was so grateful to the doctor who cured her that he insisted on giving him a dinner, and himself came down and observed the courtesies usual on such occasions. When there was an election of the Legislative Council he went to the voting place and recorded his vote. He inquired where the mark was to be made, and the polling officer saw nothing wrong with him. The defendants' story that at this time he was paralysed and unable to move is clearly disproved by this evidence. Lieut. Col. Newman, who examined him subsequently for the purpose of these proceedings, on behalf of the defendants, says that he saw him on a few occasions when attending his wife, and that he seemed morose and scarcely spoke to him, but he was then in great trouble and there was the difference of language. There is no doubt he then suffered from time to time from severe attacks of angina pectoris, and it is not unlikely, that owing to their anxiety to help Kali Narayan himself and his family to escape from what they were told was an unconscionable bargain, there was much exaggeration in their evidence.

Their Lordships agree with the learned Judges that the evidence as to Kali Narayan's stay at Dacca goes to show that he was of sound mind when the bainapatra, was executed, and that, as already shown, this conclusion is strongly supported by the defendants' own conduct down to the time when the present dispute arose.

They will now proceed to consider the medical evidence, on which the defendants mainly rely. In 1918, Dr. Sankar granted a certificate in support of an application for Kali Narayan's examination on commission in a suit in which he was plaintiff, on account of his state of health. The certificate states, among other things, that he was suffering from loss of memory, but does not suggest that he was unfit to give evidence. It is said, however, that his deposition shows that his mind was failing. The question in dispute was whether he had agreed himself to accept the defendant as a tenant. He denied that he had done so, but admitted in cross-examination that his memory was bad, and the suit appears to have been compromised. In their Lordships' opinion, this proves nothing. What is much more important is that Dr. Sankar, who gave evidence for the plaintiffs on commission in April, 1922, was not prepared to say that Kali Narayan was incapable of managing his own affairs when he went to Dacca in December, 1919. He said he had seen him several times after granting the certificate—he could not say how often—whenever he went to the house. Questioned as to Kali Narayan's mental condition at this time, he said that all he could remember was that he was suffering from loss of memory and could not say if it had got worse. It was subsequently stated by Krishna Kumar, the principal defendant, in his cross-examination at the trial, that Dr. Sankar was Kali Narayan's medical attendant at this time and saw him twice a week and had also seen him in consultation with one of the leading doctors in Dacca who has not been called, so that he had every opportunity of judging whether Kali Narayan was then an imbecile dotard incapable of managing his own affairs. It should be added that Dr. Sankar was present at the examination in January, 1922, and confirmed the Civil Surgeon's conclusions.

Next comes Dr. Pringle, who in November, 1919, examined Kali Narayan as to the advisability of his going to Dacca for treatment. On December 17th, after the execution of the Will in Dacca, the defendants obtained a certificate from him to be used in resisting Probate. Their Lordships attach little or no weight to this certificate or to Dr. Pringle's evidence, as he had not examined Kali Narayan as to his mental condition, and the statements in the certificate appear to have been based largely upon what he was told by the defendants.

Of much greater importance were the certificates and evidence of Lieut.-Col. Newman and of Lieut.-Col. Mac Kelvie, who succeeded him as Civil Surgeon of Dacca, both members of the Indian Medical Service. Their Lordships desire to make it clear at the outset that they see no reason to question either the truthfulness or the general competence of these officers.

It has been argued for the plaintiffs that Kali Narayan's condition may have got worse after the execution of the bainapatra on December 19th, 1920. There is less force in the suggestion as regards Colonel Newman's examination at the end of January, 1921, than as regards Colonel MacKelvie's examination in April, 1922. There is, however, a much more important factor detracting from the weight of their evidence, and that is the extent to which the medical history of the case, which must have influenced them very much, was derived from an unreliable and interested informant, Kali Narayan's grandson Sachindra, the fifth defendant, who was in practice at Narayangunje as a kabiraj or Hindu doctor. It appears from Colonel MacKelvie's notes that it was reported to him by Sachindra that Kali Narayan was irritable, threw away food and plates, did not sleep, passed urine and fæces in bed, could not recognise sons and grandchildren; also threw cups and glasses and assaulted Sachindra, and also beat his wife. Colonel MacKelvie inserted in his certificate, at the request of the estate manager, a statement that he was satisfied that Kali Narayan had not been shamming in his answers, to meet any suggestion from the plaintiff's side that he was making himself out to be more stupid than he really was, in order to get out of the contract. Cross-examined as to this, he explained that he had come to the conclusion that Kali Narayan was suffering from a definite form of insanity, senile dementia, which barred shamming, and he admitted that the plate-throwing, wife beating and like things reported to him were considered by him in coming to the conclusion that Kali Narayan was suffering from senile dementia, and that they were some of the important features in the case. This they undoubtedly were, if true, such conduct being among the signs of advanced senile dementia given in the text-books. The witnesses who speak to them are the son, Krishna Kumar, and a servant of the estate, whose evidence in other parts of the case is clearly unworthy of credit. On the other hand, Dr. K. B. Narayan, Civil Surgeon of Tipperah, who examined Kali Narayan for the plaintiffs a few days earlier, and recorded his questions and answers, and had not this misleading history of the case before him, came to the conclusion that Kali Narayan had made up his mind to say "I do not recollect" to certain questions which mostly concerned his property and its management, and that his memory was not so bad as he made it out to be. Colonel Newman's notes are not in evidence, and it is not possible to say what Sachindra told him, but the certificate itself shows that he was improperly informed that Kali Narayan had without the knowledge of his heirs executed a contract to sell property at a price much below its market value, which was calculated to mislead him.

The two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, who from their intimate acquaintance with Hindu modes of life are in a better position than their Lordships to draw the proper inferences as to some matters of conduct arising in the case, have given forcible reasons in separate but concurring judgments for holding it proved by reliable evidence and by inferences arising from the conduct of the defendants themselves that Kali Narayan at the time he executed the bainapatra was not an imbecile dotard incapable of sufficiently understanding what he was doing, and their Lordships are not prepared to say they were wrong in acting upon this evidence rather than on medical opinion possibly influenced by all sorts of unproved allegations going to show that he could not have at the time in question been sufficiently able to understand what he was doing. In these circumstances, their Lordships are unable to differ from the conclusion of the learned Judges that the defendants have failed to establish the main defence they set up.

As to the further defence that the contract itself is bad for uncertainty, they entirely agree with the learned Judges that there is no substance in it. They are, therefore, of opinion, that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal from the Oudh Chief Court.

LORD BLANESBURGH, SIR GEORGE LOWNDES

AND SIR DINSHAH MULLA.

SATGUR PRASAD—APPELLANT

—DEFENDANTS

versus

Mahant HAR NARAIN DAS—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Vendor and purchaser—Sale void for undue influence and fraud—Vendor's right to mesne profits from date of sale—Vendee's possession, whether wrongful—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65—Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 88—Principles of equity—Practice—Privy Council—Concurrent findings.

Where a person occupying a fiduciary position obtains a conveyance of immoveable property by undue influence and fraud if there is no proof of undue delay on the part of the vendor in bringing a suit to set aside the deed and there is no difficulty of putting the parties back in the position which they occupied, the vendor should have an account of the rents and profits of the properties from the date on which possession was obtained by the vendee, the latter being entitled to credit in the account for all payments made by him to the vendor. Interest should also be allowed at the usual rate on both sides of the account. [p. 110, col. 2; p. 111, col. 1.]

In such a case though before the institution of the suit the defendant could have made a valid transfer to an innocent purchaser, it by no means follows from this that as between him and the person he had defrauded his possession was not wrongful. To admit of such an assertion would be to allow him to take advantage of his own wrong, which no Court of equity will permit. [p. 110, col. 1.]

The words 'when a contract becomes void' in s. 65, Contract Act, are sufficient to cover the case of a voidable contract which has been avoided and the said section will apply to such a case. [ibid.]

Regarding the transaction as one that has passed out of the realm of contract, it would be covered by s. 88, Trusts Act. [ibid.]

Apart from either of these statutory provisions the vendor is entitled to claim mesne profits in such cases upon general principles of equity. Reg. v. Saddlers Co. (4), Dally v. Wingham (5), Mulhellen v. Marum (6), Tyrrel v. Bank of London (7) and Erlanger v. New Sanbrero Coy. (8), referred to. [p. 110, cols 1 & 2]

Concurrent findings will not be disturbed unless it is shown that there has been a miscarriage of justice, or the violation of some principle of law or procedure. This does not necessarily imply that their Lordships make the findings their own, for, almost ex hypothesi, they have not considered them in detail: but only that where matters of fact have been fairly tried by two local Courts, which are often in a better position to conclude upon them than the Board, and the same conclusion has been reached by both, it is not in the public interest that the facts should again be examined in the ultimate Court of Appeal. [p. 109, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the judgment of Oudh Chief Court dated the 2nd May 1928.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., De Gruyther, K. C. and L. M. Jopling, for the Appellant

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., B. Dube, K. C., W. Wallach and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent.

Sir George Lowndes.—These are consolidated cross-appeals against a decree of the Chief Court of Oudh dated the 2nd May, 1928. The appellant in the one case, Satgur Prasad was the principal defendant in a suit instituted on the original side of the Chief Court, which was decided against him both by the trial Judge and the Court of Appeal. In the other the plaintiff, Mahant Har Narain Das, is the appellant raising subsidiary questions on which the Court of Appeal had decided against him.

The main issue in the suit was as to the validity of a deed, dated the 25th November, 1924, by which the plaintiff purported to make over a valuable estate and other property to the defendant-appellant subject to certain conditions. The object of the suit was to set aside this deed on the ground that it was procured by undue influence and fraud. There are concurrent findings of both the Courts in India that this has been established, and they are undoubtedly findings of pure fact. It is not disputed that if they are to stand the appellant cannot escape the decree which has been passed against him.

The practice of this Board with regard to concurrent findings of fact is well established. Such findings will not be disturbed unless it is shown that there has been a miscarriage of justice, or the violation of some principle of law or procedure. Maung Tha Hnyeen v. Maung Pan Nyo (1), Rani Srimati v. Khajendra Narayan Singh (2) per Lord Lindley at p. 131* cited and followed in Robins v. The National Trust (3)

This does not necessarily imply that their Lordships make the findings their own, for, almost ex hypothesi, they have not considered them in detail: but only that where matters of fact have been fairly tried by two Local Courts, which are often in a better position to conclude upon them than this Board, and the same conclusion has been reached by both, it is not in the public interest that the facts should again be examined in the ultimate Court of Appeal.

Nothing has been suggested, during a two-days' argument for the defendant-appellant, which would bring the case within the principles so laid down, the learned Counsel confining themselves to a searching criticism of the reasons assigned by the learned Judges in the Courts below for the conclusions to which they had come. Their Lordships think that no useful purpose would be served by following their argument through the somewhat unsavoury details so disclosed. They will only record their opinion that no sufficient reason has been shown for disturbing the concurrent findings to which they have referred to.

The cross-appeal of the plaintiff raises a question of greater difficulty. Under the decrees of both Courts he is entitled to possession of all the properties sued for. The details were set out in three schedules annexed to his plaint. These are embodied in the decree of the trial Judge, which in this respect was confirmed by the Court of Appeal.

He also claimed by his plaint mesne profits accruing during the possession of the defendant-appellant (hereinafter for convenience referred to as the defendant),* the amount of which he estimated at five lakhs of rupees. There seems to have been no discussion upon this question in the trial Court, the learned Judge merely reciting an agreement of the parties that the issue as to the defendant's liability to account should be left to be dealt with in execution proceedings, which their Lordships understand to be in accordance with the usual practice.

In the Court of Appeal, however, it was urged on behalf of the defendant that the account should only go from the date of suit (the 21st February, 1927), and not from the date when the defendant got possession, i.e., approximately the 25th November, 1924. The learned Judges of the Appellate Court accepted this contention, assigning as their reason for so doing "that the document of the 25th November, 1924, was only voidable at the option of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff did not exercise that option earlier than the date of the suit."

*NOTE.—There were two other defendants to the suit but neither of them has appeared on the present appeal.

It is against this finding only that the cross appeal of the plaintiff has been pressed, and it is contended on his behalf that, having regard to the conclusion, now established, that the deed under which the defendant got possession was procured by undue influence and fraud, the plaintiff is entitled to the account which he has claimed.

The defendant supports the finding of the Court of Appeal on this question. Mesne profits, it is said, under the definition contained in s. 2 (12) of the Civil Procedure Code, can only be awarded for the period during which the defendant was in wrongful possession, and until the plaintiff elected to avoid the contract under which possession was made over to him, his possession was not wrongful.

But in the first place their Lordships are unable to regard the deed of the 25th November, 1924, merely as a contract voidable at the option of the plaintiff, but good until avoided. It was in effect a conveyance, under which the title to the properties passed to the defendant, and which had to be formally set aside. Before the institution of the suit the defendant could no doubt have made a valid transfer to an innocent purchaser, but it by no means follows from this that as between him and the person he had defrauded his possession was not wrongful. To admit of such assertion would be to allow him to take advantage of his own wrong, which no Court of equity will permit.

If the matter could be regarded as one of contract, their Lordships think that it would fall within the terms of s. 65 of the Contract Act, which provides that "when a contract becomes void"—and their Lordships would have no difficulty in holding these words sufficient to cover the case of a voidable contract which had been avoided—any person who has received any advantage under such contract is bound to restore it to the person from whom he received it, or make compensation therefor.

Regarding the transaction, however, as one that has passed out of the realm of contract, it would seem to be met by s. 88 of the Trusts Act, which has always applied to the Province of Oudh. Both Courts in India have found that the defendant stood in a fiduciary relation to the plaintiff, and that he procured the conveyance by taking advantage of this relationship. He would, therefore, be bound under the terms of the section to hold any advantage so gained for the benefit of the plaintiff.

But apart from either of these statutory provisions, their Lordships think that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed in his claim upon general principles of equity. So it is stated in Kerr on Fraud and Mistake (6th Edition, 469), dealing with the doctrine of restitutio in integrum, that "a party exercising his option to rescind is entitled to be restored as far as possible to his former position."

For this proposition there is ample authority. In Reg v. Saddler's Co. (4), Lord Blackburn says:—

"Fraud, as I think, renders any transaction voidable at the election of the party defrauded; and if, when it is avoided, nothing has occurred to alter the position of affairs, the rights and remedies of the parties are the same as if it had been void from the beginning."

In Dally v. Wonham (5) where a purchase by the agent of a vendor was set aside upon much the same grounds as here, the vendor-plaintiff was given an account of rents and profits received by the defendant, from the date of the conveyance, the defendant being allowed credit in the account for all moneys properly expended by him on repairs and lasting improvements, and all sums paid to the plaintiff on account of an annuity which was, as in the present case, part of the consideration for the conveyance.

In Mulhallen v. Marum (6) the Lord Chancellor (Lord Lyndhurst), in setting aside a lease which had been obtained by fraud and undue influence, said:

"I shall give an account against the defendant from the time of filing the bill, but not before on account of the delay."

In this case eleven years had elapsed since the date of lease before the bill was filed.

Reference might also be made to the form of decree proposed by Lord Westbury, L. C. in Tyrrel v. The Bank of London (7) and to Erlanger v. New Sanbrero Coy., (8).

Their Lordships think that in the case now before them, where there is no difficulty in putting the parties back in the position which they occupied respectively on the 25th November, 1924, and where there is no proof of undue delay on the part of the plaintiff in bringing his suit, he should have an account of the rents and profits of the immovable properties from that date, the defendant being entitled to credit in the account for all payments made by him to the plaintiff. Interest should be allowed at the usual rate upon both sides of the account.

For the reasons given their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal of Satgur Prasad should be dismissed, and that of Mahant Har Narain Das allowed; and that the decree of the Chief Court of Oudh dated the 2nd May, 1928, should be varied by substituting for the words "date of the suit" the words "twenty-fifth of November, 1924", and by adding after the words "possession by him" the words "the defendant appellant being entitled to credit in the account so to be taken for all sums paid by him after that date to the respondent No. 1, and interest being allowed at the usual rate on both sides thereof." In other respects the decree of the Chief Court will stand.

The appellant, Satgur Prasad, must pay the costs of Mahant Har Narain Das before this Board.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 4, 12, 59, 90.—Title of executor, whether vests before grant of probate—Sale by executor before getting probate, validity of—Interpretation of Statutes—Reference to repealed sections.

Under the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, the estate of a testator vests in the executor and the executor has the power to dispose of the estate from the date of the testator's death, even though probate has not been obtained. [p. 113, col. 1.]

Under the English Law the title of an executor is derived from the Will and not from the probate though it is probate alone which authenticates his right, and the Indian Legislature has not departed from this principle in the Probate and Administration Act, 1881. [ibid]

Section 12, Probate and Administration Act, does not imply that before probate the executor has no title but is only intended to simplify the proof of his title as dating from the testator's death by authenticating the Will against all the world. *Administrator-General of Bengal v. Messrs. E. B. Raikes, K. C., K. V. L. Narasimham and Lakshinam Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. V. Subba Rao, for the Respondents.

Sir George Lowndes.—The appellants are beneficiaries under the Will of one Madduru Venkata Subanna, who died on the 5th January, 1917. He was a Hindu residing at Pedakapavaram, in the Kistna District of Madras. The respondent, Madduri Gangamma, is his widow, and was appointed (as is now admitted) executrix according to the tenor of the Will, but has not obtained probate. The other respondents are a minor son, adopted by the widow and various persons interested in the properties of the testator under alienations made by the widow purporting to act as his executrix.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was instituted by the appellants to enforce their right to particular parcels of land which they alleged had been allotted to their shares under a family arrangement made shortly after the testator's death, or in the alternative for partition of the estate without regard to the alienations, which, it was contended, the executrix had, in the absence of probate, no power to make, and which were further charged as fraudulent.

The trial Judge held against the appellants as to the family arrangement, and this is no longer in dispute. He was of opinion, however, that the alienations were incompetent, and he accordingly passed a preliminary decree in the appellants' favour, declaring the rights of the parties, and appointing a Commissioner to carry out the partition and to assess mesne profits. The Commissioner duly reported to the Judge, and eventually a final decree was made.

Appeals and cross-objections were filed against both these decrees by some of the respondents, and on the hearing in the High Court the following question, upon which the decision of the appeals turned, was referred to a Full Bench, viz.:—

"Whether an executor appointed by Will made in the muffassal of the Presidency has vested in him the estate of a testator and has all the powers of an executor as set out in the Probate and Administration Act, even though such executor does not obtain probate of the Will, or whether his powers, unless he obtains probate, are only those of a mere manager as held in respect of executors previous to the Probate and Administration Act."

The reference was heard by the Chief Justice and two puisne Judges, who recorded their opinion that —

"In case of Hindu Wills to which the Hindu Wills Act does not apply the estate vests in the executor (who accepts office) from the date of the testator's death, and that the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act are applicable, even though probate has not been obtained."

The appeals then came on again before the referring Judges who by their order of the 9th December, 1925, set aside the decree of the trial Judge and remanded the suit for disposal on the basis of their judgment, with directions, to try the question of the bona fides of the widow's alienation, and for that purpose to ascertain what debts were outstanding at the death of the testator.

From this order of remand the appellants have brought their appeal to His Majesty in Council, and the sole matter for the consideration of the Board is whether the judgment of the Full Bench, upon which the order under appeal rests, should be upheld.

The Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) has no application to the present case, but the greater part of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) applies to the Wills of Hindus generally, and it is upon the terms of this Act that the result of the appeal turns.

The authorities have been discussed at length by Kumaraswami Sastri, J., who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench, and their Lordships think that nothing can be added by them to his careful examination of the case law on this subject. They will, however, refer later on to two decisions of the Board which have been relied upon by the appellants.

There has been a divergence of opinion between the High Courts of Madras and Bombay on the one hand, and of Calcutta on the other. It is the view of the former that has now prevailed, and their Lordships think that it is undoubtedly the right one.

The provisions of the Act directly in point are the first part of s. 4 and sub-se. (1) and (2) of s. 90, which run as follows:—

"Section 4. The executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such."

"Section 90. (1) An executor or administrator has, subject to the provisions of this section, power to dispose, as he thinks fit, of all or any of the property for the time being vested in him under s. 4.

"(2) The power of an executor to dispose of immovable property so vested in him is subject to any restriction which may be imposed in this behalf by the Will appointing him, unless probate has been granted to him, and the Court which granted the probate permits him by an order in writing, notwithstanding the restriction, to dispose of any immovable property specified in the order in a manner permitted by the order. . . ."

The reasoning of the Calcutta decisions as to the meaning of s. 4 was based largely on the preamble, which showed that the object of the Act was to provide for grants of Probate and Letters of Administration, and upon the heading of Chap. II, in which the section occurred, "of grant of Probate and Letters of Administration," and it was thought to follow from this that "executor" in s. 4 could only mean an executor to whom probate had been granted.

This argument was elaborated before their Lordships, and reference was made to other sections of the Act which, it was urged, contained the same implication, particular reliance being placed upon ss. 12 and 59.

With regard to the first branch of the argument, their Lordships note that the wording of the opening paragraph of s. 4 is identical with that of s. 179 of the Succession Act of 1865, which occurs in a chapter bearing the same heading as that of Chap. II of the Act of 1881. But so far as their Lordships are aware, it has never been held that s. 179 of the Act of 1865 applies only to an executor who has proved the Will.

Section 12 of the Probate and Administration Act no doubt implies that until probate is granted the Will is not "established," and it validates all intermediate acts of the executor. It is contended for the appellants that this necessarily leads to the inference that before probate there is no valid Will and no authority in the executor. This was the view taken by West, J. in Fatima v. Shaik Essa (1), but which failed to find acceptance on appeal [Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (2)]. It is, their Lordships think, based upon a misconception of the object of the section. Before the grant, it is obvious that in every case where either the Will itself, or anything done under it by the executor, is challenged, proof of execution and capacity on the part of the testator, and of the appointment of the executor, would be required. The object of the section is only to get rid of this multiplication of proofs. Probate once granted authenticates the Will against all the world; it affords a ready means of proof of the contents of the Will (See ss. 41 and 91 of the Evidence Act); and it is a complete answer by the executor to any challenge of his authority as such. The provisions of the section do not, in their Lordships' opinion suggest that before probate the executor had no title, but³ are only intended to simplify the proof of his title as dating from the testator's death.

(1) 7 B. 266, 7 Ind. Jur. 535.

(2) 8 B. 241; 8 Ind. Jur. 571.

Section 59 merely amplifies the position by making probate conclusive of the executor's representative title against debtors of the estate, and provides for their indemnification on making payments to him. This again is only a matter of simplification of proof, with the necessary corollary protecting debtors who have paid on the faith of the probate.

There can be no doubt that in England the title of an executor is derived from the Will and not from probate, though it is probate alone which authenticates his right (See Williams on Executors, 12th edition, page 1226). Section 12 of the Probate and Administration Act is a reproduction of s. 188 of the Succession Act of 1865, and it has always been recognised that the latter Act was largely based on English Law. It is not suggested that this doctrine is for any reason inapplicable to the Wills of Hindus, and their Lordships think that the material parts of ss. 4, and 90, which are set out above, afford a strong indication in themselves that the Legislature intended to adopt it.

Section 4 makes no reference to probate, nor does the definition of "executor" in s. 3 (again a reproduction from the Act of 1865) suggest that probate is any part of his title: he is merely the person to whom the testator has confided the carrying out of his dispositions.

So, too, s. 90 (2) clearly conceives of an executor not clothed with probate being able to dispose of the property "vested in him under s. 4." It makes such power subject to any restriction imposed by the Will "unless probate has been granted," in which case the Court may relieve him from the restriction. In view of the terms of this section their Lordships think it would be impossible to hold that before probate nothing vested in the executor, and that he had no power of disposal at all.

Reference was made in argument to the terms of the original s. 90, which was repealed in 1889, when the present section was substituted. It may well be that upon the old section the argument on behalf of the appellants would have had more force, but their Lordships have to interpret the Act as it has stood since 1889, and they cannot attribute to s. 4 a meaning based on the reading of the repealed section.

It only remains to consider whether the two decisions of this Board, to which allusion was made above, afford any support to the appellants.

In The Administrator-General of Bengal v. Pren Lal Mullick (3), the executors of a Hindu testator, whose Will was governed by the Hindu Wills Act of 1870, after obtaining probate, transferred to the Administrator-General "all estates, effects and interest vested in them by virtue of the probate." Such a transfer was authorized in the case of "any private executor" by s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act, II of 1874. The majority of the Judges before whom the case came in the Calcutta High Court held that the executors of a Hindu Will, governed by the Act of 1870, were not within the purview of the section, and this was the only question before the Board.

The judgment was delivered by Lord Watson, who in dealing with various portions of the Succession Act which were incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act, says:—

"It is sufficient for the purposes of this case to refer to two of these clauses. Section 181 is to the effect that probate can be granted only to an executor appointed by the Will. Section 179 provides that the executor or legal administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person shall be his legal representative for all purposes, and that all the property of the deceased person shall vest in him as such."

He continues as follows, and it is this passage which is principally relied on in the present appeal:—

"It is not disputed that the immediate effect of the Act of 1870 was to place a Hindu executor who was in a position, and chose, to take advantage of its provisions, on precisely the same footing as the executor of an Anglo-Indian testator, in so far as concerns the taking out of probate, and the vesting in him of the estate of the deceased. The Will of the late Nundo Lal Mullick was executed in August, 1889 and his executors therefore, on their obtaining probate became immediately vested, by force of Statute, with the whole estates which belonged to him at the time of his decease."

The question now before their Lordships, viz, as to the effect of the words of s. 179 (reappearing in the present case as s. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act) unaccompanied by probate, was clearly not under the consideration of the Board in the case cited, as the authority to transfer under s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act was expressly dependent upon the grant of probate and their Lordships have no doubt that the words used by Lord Watson were not intended to have the wider significance which the appellants seek to attribute to them.

In Mirza Kurratulain v. Peara Saheb (4) the question considered by the Board was one of estoppel, affecting a Muhammadan Will of which probate had been granted. Here again, therefore, the contention now raised as to the effect of ss. 4 and 90 of the Act of 1881 standing alone, did not arise, and the only support that the appellants claim from it is derived from two sentences in the judgment which will be found on pages 256 and 257. The first of these speaks of 'the title thus conferred upon every executor who has obtained probate,' and the second, of the trusteeship for the purposes of the Will "created.....by the Will established by the probate." Their Lordships are unable to treat these isolated quotations as affording any support to the argument of the appellants. There is, they think, nothing in the judgment of Sir Arthur Wilson, read as a whole, to suggest that the vesting under s. 4 or the power of disposal under s. 90, is dependent upon the grant of probate.

For the reasons given their Lordships are of opinion that the order of remand made by the High Court on the 9th December, 1925 was right, and that this appeal should be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The appellants must pay the costs of the respondents of the appeal.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), ss. 162 (vi), 174, 176—Winding-up of solvent company—Grounds for winding-up—'Just and equitable rule', application of—Appeal in name of company against winding-up order—Wishes of contributories, weight of—Duty of Official Liquidator—Court's power to remove Official Liquidator

The fact that a Managing Director has a preponderating voice in the company by reason of his owning or controlling a large number of shares or that the dividends have not been paid regularly is by itself no reason for winding-up a company. [p. 119, col. 1.]

To justify a winding-up order on the 'just and equitable rule' it is necessary to prove a lack of confidence in the conduct and management of the company's affairs by the Directors. [p. 120, col. 1.]

An order for winding up a company even if not justified may be maintained on the ground of lapse of time and intervening events. [p. 120, cols. 1 & 2.]

An ultra vires transaction on the part of Directors is of itself not sufficient reason for a winding-up order since other remedies are available to aggrieved shareholders. [p. 122, col. 2.]

Where the Directors of a company intend to appeal against a winding-up order they should prefer the appeal in the company's name even though an Official Liquidator has in the meanwhile been appointed by the Court. If the majority of the contributories concur in the filing of such appeal the appeal is in truth that of the contributories. [p. 120, col. 2.]

In the winding up of a solvent company the Court as well as the Official Liquidator should have particular regard to the wishes of the contributories in all matters affecting them as a class. [p. 122, col. 2.]

An Official Liquidator must maintain a position of complete impartiality between all persons involved in the winding-up. Where this is not done the Judge in charge of the winding-up may remove such Liquidator and appoint in his place a person from whom an attitude of unqualified detachment can be expected.

Appeal by special leave, from a judgment of the High Court, Madras, on its Appellate Side, dated the 13th November 1924, reversing the judgment of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri on the Original Side dated the 3rd November, 1922.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. H. Upjohn, K. C. (with him Mr. K. J. Rustomji, for the Respondent, Official Liquidator.

Lord Blanesburgh.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras dated the 13th November, 1924, reversing a judgment and order, dated the 3rd

November, 1922, of a single Judge of the same High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. These orders were made in the matter of a petition presented to the Court on the 1st May, 1922, for the compulsory winding-up of the appellant company. By the order of the 3rd November, 1922, Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri dismissed the petition with costs. On appeal his order was discharged by that of the 13th November, 1924, and the compulsory winding-up of the company was thereby decreed. This appeal from that order reached the Board for hearing more than six years after it had been made. Its discharge accordingly involved the super-session of all proceedings in a liquidation which as a result of it had then been in operation for more than eight years. To this fact are attributable the grave difficulties which have confronted the Board in disposing of the appeal.

The company was constituted in 1882 for the purpose (1) of erecting a cotton-pressing factory at Raichur in Hyderabad, and (2) of erecting a sugar factory at Hospet in the Madras Presidency of British India. It was registered in Madras solely because part of its business was to be carried on in British India. But for the Hospet project it would have been registered in the Nizam's Dominions. And the Hospet factory did not materialise. It was definitely abandoned as a project in 1909. The company has never done any business in British India. Its sole activities have been centred at Raichur in connection with the factory which in due course was erected there. The fact that the fixed property of the company and its business have thus been in one jurisdiction and its place of incorporation and statutory obligations in another has always been a source of difficulty. It hampered the company in its competition with local rivals: it exposed it to the risk of double taxation: its accounts were necessarily kept at Raichur in the local vernacular, and the compilation of the annual statements at Bellary from these materials in a form to meet the requirements of the Statute law of British India must always have been difficult and never quite satisfactory. It is unfortunate that in the liquidation no allowance appears so far to have been made for, or consideration given to, these difficulties inherent in the situation.

The company was not a private company, but its share-holders were never numerous. Its articles of association were those of Table-A of the Act of 1882, with modifications introduced which did not affect its status as a public company. It had a nominal capital of Rs. 1,25,000, divided into 250 shares of Rs. 500 each. Of these, 200 shares were issued at the time of its formation, Rs. 250 being then called up on every share. This paid-up capital sufficed for the establishment of the Raichur factory. The 200 shares with Rs. 250 paid up were in May, 1922, in the hands of 24 holders or sets of holders.

The original articles of the company, cls. 7 and 8, provided for the appointment of named persons, as secretaries and treasurers at an allowance of 5 per cent. on nett profits, and as agents in charge of the factories at a like allowance. Between 1905 and 1909 K. Venkata Rao, of whom much will be heard in the sequel—it is around him that the whole controversy has raged—had become one of the two agents.

In 1909 and 1910 the original offices of secretary and treasurer and agent were abolished, and by special resolutions of the company, passed and confirmed unanimously on the 7th and 28th of May, 1910, cls. 7 and 8 of the company's articles of association were cancelled, and it was resolved that, in lieu thereof, the firm of K. U. S. Ramachander & Co. should be appointed treasurers of the company on condition of their retaining the company's moneys without interest, and lending moneys to the company without interest whenever required.

In view of the allegations of the petition with reference to this arrangement—operative, as it was, for so many years—it is convenient to note, in passing, the deliberation with which it was made—the special resolution of May superseding with a technical amendment an earlier special resolution adopted with similar unanimity in April, 1910. It is material also to note that under the arrangement the firm was called upon to discharge the duties which had theretofore devolved upon the secretary, treasurer and agent combined, and that in any advantage that might accrue to it from the fact that, like a banker, it was not required to pay interest on the company's balances, was to be found the only counterpart for the 10 per cent. on profits which, under the superseded arrangement, had to be found by the company.

The firm K. U. S. Ramachander & Co. was the family firm of Venkata Rao. From 1910 and earlier he had been at its head. In 1922 he was 73 years of age. It is impossible to read the record without seeing that, even at a later date, he remained a man of outstanding ability and strong personality. From 1910 his was undoubtedly the predominant influence in the firm, although he was only one of nine members, as also in the directorate of the company, although the evidence is clear to show that no duly qualified share-holder who desired a seat on the Board was ever excluded therefrom. His influence, real, and, for anything that appears, thoroughly well-deserved, was not, at all events, unwelcome. Everything points to the conclusion that the share-holders, for benefits resulting to them therefrom, were well content to leave the management of the company's affairs in Venkata Rao's hands.

At all relevant times a large number of shares in the company stood registered in his own name, and in the names of his firm and of different individual members of his family, some of them members of the firm. But the number which at any time he really controlled is left in complete uncertainty. His own personal holding was never large. He complains in his evidence that members of his family had become, prior to the date of the petition, at variance with him. The petitioners have put in the minutes of a meeting of the 23rd June, 1917 (Record Part II, page 7), at which K. Ramachander, his eldest son, is found voting against him in favour of a larger dividend. Indeed, their Lordships can find nothing in the record to show that if at any time any disagreement with Venkata Rao's action or policy had existed amongst the share holders, it would not have found effective expression as, for the moment at all events, it did, at the meeting of the 21st August, 1921, to which reference will presently be made. The proceedings of the share-holders up to that date do not indicate that as the petition suggests they were there merely to register Venkata Rao's decrees. They do show that up to 1921 there was never any serious disagreement amongst them.

The first trace of conflict originates with a resolution proposed by Venkata Rao as an extraordinary resolution at a general meeting of the company held on the 6th August of that year. The resolution, in effect, was that in view of the complete abandonment of the Hospet venture and of difficulties resulting from its British Indian incorporation, the registration of the company should be transferred to Hyderabad. The proposal, as might, perhaps, have been expected from what has been already said, was accepted unanimously at that meeting. But Sabapathi Rao, a share holder, a Vakil of 30 years of age, who now becomes as prominent in the drama as Venkata Rao himself, although the holder of a single share only, and with therefore, it might perhaps have been supposed, no very extensive interest in dividends, detected in the resolution or thought or said that he detected a subtle device on the part of Venkata Rao to make the recovery of dividends more difficult. Accordingly, at the meeting held on the 27th August, 1921, to confirm the resolution, he proposed an amendment to the effect that the company should be wound up voluntarily. And his amendment was carried by a bare majority of the members present, and Venkata Rao's original resolution was therefore lost, although the amendment was not, of course, affirmatively effective.

From this incident must be dated the movement, such as it was, headed by Sabapathi Rao, culminating in the petition and ultimately in the winding-up order which is now under review.

The petition, as has been said, was presented on the 1st May, 1922. There were six petitioners. Sabapathi Rao is one; his brother, Lakshmikantha Rao, holding two shares, is another; a third has since died; and a fourth, Sidbasappa, sold his 21 shares in the company on the 2nd November, 1924, before the winding-up order was made. The whole six petitioners between them held no more than 32 shares out of the total of 200. Only one other shareholder, the respondent, Madam Venkayya, supported them. The company, in its opposition to the petition, represented the views of a preponderant majority. It was amply solvent. Creditors were in no way interested, if they existed at all.

The petition is an attack upon Venkata Rao from every angle. That that attack was inspired throughout by Sabapathi Rao has never been questioned, while Venkata Rao has reiterated in evidence that it is from some unexplained enmity to himself on the part of Sabapathi Rao and from that alone that everything has resulted—the winding-up petition, the appeal from the order dismissing it, and the whole course of the supervening liquidation so marked in its hostility to himself. Their Lordships are not prepared to treat these assertions lightly. They have never been contradicted by Sabapathi Rao, although he has given evidence on two occasions and has made many affidavits in the course of the liquidation. No petitioner, except himself, has ever taken any part in the proceedings. The petition, for the terms of which Sabapathi Rao is clearly, primarily, and not improbably exclusively responsible, is inexcusable in the recklessness and misleading character of its most serious allegations, and their Lordships have been compelled to note that throughout the recorded proceedings in the subsequent liquidation the activities of Sabapathi Rao have been exclusive, constant, persistent and officious, not to be explained by his insignificant material interest in the liquidation or its results. It is necessary to approach the consideration of the case with these most disturbing facts in mind. The learned trial Judge was able to dismiss the petition on what may be called its own demerits. Their Lordships will anticipate so far as to say that it is almost inconceivable that the High Court could have wound up the company as and when it did or have justified its order by the reasons assigned had these matters been even remotely present to the minds of the learned Judges there.

Being in effect an indiscriminating attack upon Venkata Rao the petition is, characteristically, the victim of undesigned inconsistencies. In one paragraph, for example (para. 5), it contains an allegation that with the exception of the petitioners and their outside supporter, "the share-holders are thwarted by the fear of the influence and capacity of Venkata Rao for doing them harm"; alongside of which is to be found the account, twice given or referred to (paras. 8 and 12), of the manner in which Venkata Rao's proposal that the company should become a Hyderabad Company was, at the very latest meeting of the company, defeated by a majority vote in favour of voluntary liquidation. Again, in contrast with a charge in para. 10 that the treasurer firm improperly retains the company's balances for its own advantage—the main burden of the petition—the complaint of para. 11, inconsistently enough, is that Venkata Rao is proposing to invest Rs. 30,000 of presumably these very balances in the purchase of machinery for the Raichur mill—a purchase from which it is not suggested that, except as share-holders, any advantage could accrue either to himself or his firm.

These contradictions are important in a petition whose remaining charges, when supported by any evidence at all, and when not based upon facts distorted in statement beyond recognition, are either vague or out of date. But as there is one charge—trivial enough, for service on such a petition, but upon the supposed proof of which the learned Judges of the High Court appear mainly to have proceeded in making the winding-up order—it will be convenient to deal with it in detail now. It is typical also of other charges.

It is alleged in para. 8 that six years before, i. e., in 1916, Venkata Rao threatened to call up the unpaid amount of Rs. 250 a share therewith to start the sugar mill at Hospet, which it was known must then be a failure; that the intended and resulting effect was to bring down the market value of the shares: that then he bought up about 60 shares from Chavani Pakirappa and others, and soon after he dropped the subject, as his object had thus been secured. Later in the paragraph it is alleged that at the meeting of the 27th August, 1921—this presumably is the meeting referred to, although with characteristic inaccuracy the date is given as the 12th September, 1921—Venkata Rao again threatened the share-holders in open meeting, "that he would harass them by calling up the unpaid share capital. The share-holders are daily expecting the threat to be put into force."

Now, as to the first of these allegations, the only occasion on which the threat could have been made was not, as alleged, six years, but 14 years before, viz., in 1908, when the firm had not even become treasurers, and at a time when Venkata Rao's position was that of joint agent of the company, with the same Pakirappa, who is named. At that time, as a reference to the minutes shows, the proposal to proceed with the Hospet project and call up capital for the purpose was not that of Venkata Rao at all, but was put forward by, amongst others, S. Gavappa, the father of the sixth petitioner; and as a result of further meetings of the Board, the project was in April, 1909, finally abandoned, and with it any proposal or necessity to make a call. The shares of Pakirappa were purchased by Venkata Rao's firm for Rs. 28,000, but not until January, 1910, and in no connection whatever with the starting of the sugar mill. Venkata Rao gave this circumstantial denial to this charge which, significantly 'unfounded in point of date, depends only on the evidence of Sabapathi Rao, who was not himself, in 1908, even a member of the company, being a mere a boy of 16.

As to the second occasion, Venkata Rao, in his evidence, characterises the charge (Record, page 28) as a downright lie, and it is certainly not obvious why, when no attempt to put the threat in force had for nine months been made, the share-holders should still be daily expecting its fulfilment. It seems unlikely, too, that Venkata Rao should have chosen the same threat on both occasions, although its effect upon the Stock Exchange value of the shares does not enter into the later threat at all. But that this second threat was ever made again depends on the statement of Sabapathi Rao alone—a witness, Audimulam Pillai, evidently called to corroborate his story failing to do so (Appendix, Part I, page 43).

The learned Judge found that none of the charges against Venkata Rao had been established. So far as these, in particular were concerned, there was surely no room at all for any other conclusion. Upon the evidence, this is one of the reckless unsubstantiated allegations by which the petition is discredited. It is unfortunate, indeed, that the winding-up order should to any extent have been rested on the assumption that it had been proved.

It would be tedious further to detail the charges in the petition, the alleged delay in payment of dividends and the like. It will suffice to take these from the learned trial Judge's judgment. But there are two matters further affecting the good faith of the petition as a whole which cannot properly be passed over in silence. The first of these are the words in para. 10, in which the position of the firm as treasurers under the special resolution of 1910 is attacked:

"Under the pretext," says para. 10, "that this firm would lend large amounts free of interest to the treasurers for its needs, Mr. Venkata Rao succeeded in getting a resolution passed that the funds of the company shall be entrusted to the treasurers free of interest, and that the treasurers should similarly lend an amount to the company if required."

Such is the petitioners' paraphrase in 1922 of the two sets of special resolutions unanimously adopted in 1910, and acted upon without protest or objection ever since.

The allegation goes on:

"Sums above Rs. 20,000 have been lying with the treasurers for several years for their sole benefit and advantage. . . . The whole thing was a ruse to give the use and the control of the company's funds to Mr. Venkata Rao's family."

It casts in their Lordships' minds the gravest doubt upon the bona fides of the petition that the true facts in relation to this matter already set forth should there be so distorted in statement as to be quite unrecognisable.

The other matter, more important still in this connection, relates to the gravest charge of all made by the petition against Venkata Rao, and, in conjunction with him, the company's auditor. In para. 13 the following allegations appear:—

"The petitioners are credibly informed, and believe the same to be true, that all articles supplied to the factory were by Mr. Venkata Rao or his relatives or dependants, and vouchers for higher values were got up in the names of third parties who are either his friends, clients, or dependants over whom he wields an enormous influence."

To this may be added the further allegation from para. 11:

"The petitioners believe that the funds of this company have been utilised for the [said] private concerns of Mr. Venkata Rao's family."

Then, as to the auditor, after a statement that it is upon him that the share-holders had alone to depend for the accuracy of the accounts to which they were not allowed access, the same para. 13 proceeds:

"The auditor is a partisan of Mr. Venkata Rao, and is afraid of losing his auditorship and remuneration if he did not comply with the wishes of Mr. Venkata Rao in granting his certificate blindly."

If an independent audit be made, the petitioners believe that several grave and serious irregularities will come to light."

It is a serious thing that no evidence has at any time been adduced in support of these grave allegations, or any of them. With regard to the charge against Venkata Rao, Sabapathi Rao sought in evidence to justify its insertion in the petition on the ground that it was based upon information given to him by an unnamed ex official of the company, who was not, however, going to be called as a witness. And not even by a question put to Venkata Rao, in the course of his prolonged cross-examinations, both on the petition and in the course of the liquidation, has this accusation of fraud against him ever been again referred to or revived. So far as the auditor is concerned, the charge, without the slightest evidence to support it, is even more culpable. Its recklessness may be judged by the fact that not only were the audited accounts invariably accepted in each year with unanimity by the share-holders at meetings, several of them attended by Sabapathi Rao and other petitioners, but the audited accounts after eight years still remain undisturbed. And the auditor is now dead.

These grave allegations of personal dishonesty with no available evidence to support them make it incumbent upon every Court to approach the other allegations of the petition with the greatest reserve.

These were all examined by the learned Judge in the course of an elaborate inquiry. He tried out the case to the end. In a cross-petition the allegations against himself and his firm were denied in detail by Venkata Rao. The petitioners had complained that the company's accounts were not open to the share-holders. To meet this complaint, the books and accounts of the company up to 1922 were produced for the inspection of the petitioners, and were inspected by Sabapathi Rao on different days in August, 1922. Sabapathi Rao, in support of the petition, gave evidence; Venkata Rao was cross-examined at great length.

In the result the learned Judge, as has been already noted, found that the charges made by the petition had not been proved in any particular. It had been conceded, he said, that unless the case could be brought within cl. (6) of s. 162 of the Indian Companies Act no order could be made: no misconduct had been proved against Venkata Rao or the other Directors. The fact that Venkata Rao had a preponderating voice in the company by reason of his owning or controlling a large number of shares was of itself no reason for winding up the company; the allegation that dividends had not been paid regularly was no ground for winding up, but the trouble had only arisen in transmission cases. The petitioners had had inspection of all the accounts, and in no instance had these been shown to be wrong. As regarded the sum proposed to be spent on machinery, it was hardly likely that Venkata Rao, with his preponderating interest, would ruin the company for the pleasure of annoying the other share-holders.

Their Lordships subscribe to that judgment. The order dismissing the petition with costs was in their judgment, on the evidence before the Court, the only possible order. They think it both fair and right to add that on a careful consideration of all the evidence they can find no justification worthy of the name for the suggestion that during Venkata Rao's long tenure of office his management of the company's affairs had in view any other object than the welfare of the company in which as a share-holder he was directly and indirectly, so largely interested. Nor have they in the evidence found any proof that moneys retained by the firm were normally in excess of reasonably possible prospective needs or that there was any impropriety on the part of the treasurers in retaining the moneys they did retain or on the part of the Directors in recommending their retention. The balances were, in fact, the working capital of the company, even although some portion of them might without illegality or even inconvenience have been distributed as dividend had the share-holders so insisted.

The petitioners appealed to the High Court by notice, dated the 17th November, 1922. For some unexplained reason the appeal was not disposed of until the 13th November, 1924—nearly two years later. There were no new materials placed before the Appellate Court to account for this loss of time, which would not have been possible in England, where winding-up appeals are placed in an interlocutory list in order to be beyond any such risk. Their Lordships hope that this case is, in this, as in so many other respects, exceptional. But this delay ought to have weighed with the learned Judges in reaching a decision. The difficulties created by a winding-up order in November, 1924, with effect from the 1st May, 1922, which so soon became manifest in the liquidation, might have given them pause. It does not appear that these difficulties were even present to their minds.

Nor is it easy either to discover or to state the actual reasons of the Appellate Judges for making a winding-up order when they did or at all. They were apparently led to do so partly by the case of Loch v. John Blackwood Ltd. (1) which, as they noted, had not been available for the Trial Judge's consideration, but which, so far as their Lordships can see, bears no resemblance either in principle or detail to the facts as proved in this case. For the rest, while the learned Judges do not in terms reject the trial Judge's findings of fact, they ignore them altogether. They seem to treat allegations in the petition as true merely because they are placed there. They find neither in its contradictions nor in its charges any room even for criticism. This omission in relation to the alleged threats by Venkata Rao to call up the unpaid share capital of the company is particularly unfortunate. The learned Judges appear, without examination, to accept these charges as proved, while from their statement of the first of them, it is apparent that the nature of the charge made was quite misunderstood. Perhaps their conclusions on the whole matter may, however, best be taken from their own closing words:—

"It is evident that the affairs of this company are carried on in such a way that the members of one family are able to exercise a predominating influence over the management of the company and to secure certain benefits for themselves. The minority are unable to protest effectively against the actions of the Directors because the majority of shares are in the hands of one family and the Directors themselves are able to hold over the share-holders the fear of having to pay up the unpaid portion of their shares. This causes a lack of confidence in the management of the Directors which there is no hope of improving so long as the present directorate continues and the funds are in the hands of the present treasurers. Under these circumstances, we think the only course we can take to secure the just rights of the share-holders is to direct the winding-up of the company."

Venkata Rao has sworn, and it has not been denied, that before the appeal was heard, two of the petitioners, had notified to him their actual, although apparently not their formal, withdrawal from the proceedings. One had died; a fourth, Sidbasappa, as has been stated, had, before this judgment of the High Court, sold his shares. In active support of the petition, therefore, if Venkata Rao has sworn truly, there remained, at the date of the winding-up order, only Sabapathi Rao and his brother, holding three shares between them, and Madam Venkayya, who had never even verified its allegations. A striking comment on the observations of the High Court when read in the light of the history already set forth.

But, presumably, these petitioning casualties were not—at least, all of them—known to the learned Judges, and Venkata's statement of them may have been exaggerated. Even so, the conclusions of the Appellate Court cannot, in their Lordships' judgment, be supported. Their own examination of the petition leads them, on the evidence, to the inevitable conclusion that its allegations, so far as these were offensive, were entirely unproved. Its proper fate was the dismissal which it met with at the hand of the trial Judge. The winding-up order on the materials before the High Court ought not to have been made. So far the present appeal is entirely justified.

But many further considerations emerging in subsequent events have to be weighed before it can be properly disposed of. To the statement and consideration of these, their Lordships now proceed.

At the instance of the Directors, immediate steps were taken to have the order set aside. An application for leave to use the company's name as appellant was first made. This was strenuously opposed by Sabapathi Rao, who, in an affidavit, challenged Venkata Rao to ascertain the contributories' views on the subject. At a meeting, in answer, held on the 2nd April, 1925, 16 contributories holding 168 shares out of 200 declared themselves for an appeal in the company's name or, if that were not possible, for one in their own. Notwithstanding this declaration of their wishes (see s. 174 of the Act); the learned Judge in charge of the liquidation on the 19th November, 1925, refused the leave asked for, on the ground that Venkata Rao was then in default under an order made against him in the liquidation, and, on appeal to the Court, this refusal was, on the 18th December 1925, upheld, on the expressed ground, the basis of which their Lordships are quite unable even to conjecture, that there was no reason to suppose that those who purported to be the company in the application "represented the wishes of the majority of the share-holders." This new misunderstanding of the position at another critical moment in the history is responsible for the further misfortune that an appeal against a winding-up order, so unusual in its occasion and circumstances, only became possible through the special leave granted by His Majesty on the recommendation of this Board two years later, on the 2nd December, 1926. Four further years elapsed before the appeal was brought to a hearing—the greater part of that long interval having been apparently consumed in the preparation and printing of the supplemental appendices included in the record at the instance of the Official Liquidator.

The appeal quite rightly, is in the company's name. The objection taken to its competence long persisted in was quite unfounded. In that respect it is in accord with a well-established practice, devised to meet the necessities of just such a situation as here arose.

But this is all mere form or style. The appeal is really that of the contributories who are behind it. They may be truly regarded as the appellants. (See In re, Diamond Fuel Company (2). Of the respondents, the Official Liquidator alone has appeared to oppose. He has taken it upon himself to contest the appellants' case ab initio—the remaining respondents, with Madam Venkayya, their unpledged supporter, being all who remain of the original petitioners. They have kept themselves in the background throughout, doubtless by arrangement. The Official Liquidator in his printed case and at the Bar has said for them all that they could have said for themselves. Moreover, he has had printed and included in the record 364 pages of the proceedings in the winding-up, including a verbatim transcript of the depositions that have been taken in the course of it. What has really been attempted by this procedure is that the opposition to the appeal—the petitioners' business—shall be conducted even if it fails at the charge of the assets of the company.

Such unusual partisan activity on the part of an Official Liquidator in relation to such an appeal clearly called for some justification, and this was sought to be supplied by referring to an order of the 14th November, 1928, by the Judge in winding-up, which directed the Liquidator to oppose the appeal and do all the above things. Their Lordships have noted that the order referred to is really an affirmative answer by the learned Judge to questions asked by the Liquidator on an ex parte summons, while the order made has been so liberally interpreted by the Liquidator that in the second appendix he has had printed 124 pages of depositions, all taken after the date of the order and, save for a few lines here and there, entirely irrelevant, as their Lordships think, to any issue arising on the appeal.

Their Lordships are gravely concerned that such an order should ever have been asked for. They are even more concerned that it should have been acted upon with so little discrimination. The order, in principle, was sought to be justified by the representation doubtless made by the Official Liquidator to the learned Judge, and as a contention maintained before the Board, that in these appendices facts are disclosed which had they been known to the Court when the petition came before it would have made a winding-up order inevitable. It is merely an aggravation of the position that, in their Lordships' judgment, as will appear presently, no such facts are there disclosed. For, even if they had been, these were facts to be brought forward, if so advised, by the petitioner-respondents at their own risk, and not by the Liquidator at the charge of the assets. Their existence would have been no justification for his becoming partisan in a dispute between two sets of contributories concerning the propriety of an order from which his authority alone proceeded. His only duty on an appeal against such an order was from a position of complete impartiality, and in the interests of the whole body of his constituent contributories to be ready to inform the Board of any facts and circumstances in relation to the company's affairs about which he might be asked or which in his judgment the Board ought to know.

In the present case the Liquidator's attitude is peculiarly invidious. It appears from the depositions that he was put forward by the petitioners for his office on the resignation of the official first appointed, and that his appointment was opposed by the Venkata Rao party for that very reason. He, too, was an 'enemy'. From him, therefore, on appointment, an attitude of unqualified detachment was specially to be desiderated. His conception of detachment in relation to this appeal has been to ask for and to obtain ex parte and to interpret with an excess of liberality an order which has enabled him free of expense to the petitioners, in relief of their responsibilities, and already at a cost far in excess of any possible interest of theirs in assets, to fight their battle, with, as will be seen, no success and at what except as to a trifling amount, must be the inordinate expense of their opponents. It is to be hoped that orders like that of the 14th November, 1928, will not in future be lightly made in the course of an Indian winding-up. The only results of the order in the present instance have been excessive delay and utterly useless expenditure both of which will, like the delay already referred to, be found to have been operative to the prejudice of the appellants, in absence of whom the order was made.

It was upon these appendices and their contents that the real opposition to the appeal was based by the Official Liquidator. When examined, they strike their Lordships as being for the most part quite irrelevant to the conclusion which he asked the Board to draw from their perusal. It is quite true that there are found in them instances of grave disobedience by Ven-kata Rao to orders for payment into Court or to the Official Liquidator of moneys shown by their accounts to be in the hands of the treasurers. The record, however, does not establish, as has been contended, either disobedience to orders to hand over the company's remaining books and documents or even reluctance to produce them. Carelessness in relation to their custody or preservation there may have been, but the difficulties with regard to these books seem to the Board to have been largely due to the fact that the mill at Raichur, with, as it would seem, all documents there, had been in the hands since the 1st January, 1924, of the lessee under a transaction later to be referred to. But the orders upon Venkata Rao for payment of money, whether regular or not, ought to have been obeyed, and he must not complain that his disobedience was made, once, the occasion of an order for his committal at the instance of the Official Liquidator. If the pendency of an appeal to this Board was his excuse for disobedience, it was no excuse. Venkata Rao must remain justly responsible and accountable for his recalcitrancy. Their Lordships, however, do not find in what has emerged since the winding-up order anything going to show that before it was made Venkata Rao had been guilty of wrongful acts unknown to the Court and sufficient to justify a winding-up order had they been alleged in the petition. By these supplemental appendices they are not even led to conclude that had the winding-up order not been made Venkata Rao would have been guilty of any disobedience to any order of Court. He nowhere appears to be congenitally recalcitrant. It was his resentment at the existence of a winding-up order in any shape which betrayed him to disobedience, although their Lordships hasten to add that such resentment, however well authenticated, being manifested while the order stood, can never be judicially excused.

But the Official Liquidator points to one other transaction disclosed as justifying his contention under this head. He says that a certain purchase by the Directors of gins in March, 1924, after the dismissal of the petition, together with the lease of these gins to the lessee of the mill, was ultra vires the company and a fraud upon it. Venkata Rao's answer on the question of ultra vires is that the transaction was conducive to the attainment of the company's purposes an object probably implied in the memorandum of association of every trading company, and very easily implied in the skeleton form in use and adopted for this company in 1882. His answer as to the lease of the gins was that it amounted to the completion of the lease of the mill at Raichur which had been made with the share-holder's assent as from the previous January. It is unnecessary for their Lordships at this stage to go into further detail. The acts were long after the petition and it is, moreover, well settled that an ultra vires transaction on the part of Directors, if this was one, is of itself no ground for a winding-up order. A share-holder has his complete remedy in other directions.

Accordingly, their Lordships have reached the conclusion that the proceedings in the liquidation, the details of which—at such great expense—the Official Liquidator has introduced into the appeal, do not, in any way, help the case he has sought to make. On the contrary, they operate further to imperil it. For what, in their Lordships' judgment, these proceedings do show is that, owing to the mistaken principles upon which the liquidation has been conducted, doubtful orders have been made in the past and that, unless the methods hitherto adopted are for the future discarded, nothing can result from the further progress of the liquidation but the dissipation of the company's entire assets in expenses. In other words, the Liquidator's appendices, properly appreciated, point to the discharge of the winding-up order being called for rather than to the continuance of the liquidation being beneficial. And the proper choice between these two alternatives becomes thus ever more difficult.

This statement requires some expansion.

The outstanding fact in relation to this winding-up which seems too far to have been entirely missed is that the contributories are alone interested in its results. The company had no creditors. From this it followed that the liquidation was peculiarly one in which the Court, as to all matters affecting the contributories as a class, would have regard to their wishes as proved by any sufficient evidence (Act of 1913, s. 174) and one, also, in which the Official Liquidator [s. 183 (2)], would lose no opportunity of summoning meetings of contributories for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes in respect of similar matters. Now, it is hardly too much to say that with consequences—serious in many other respects than excessive cost—these vital considerations have been consistently forgotten or ignored throughout the liquidation.

Two typical examples may be given. The first relates to the lease of the Raichur factory, granted pursuant to a resolution of the company in general meeting on the 8th November, 1923, for a term of 10 years from the 1st January, 1924, to Ramachandra, the son of Venkata. Ramachandra's offer was the highest of three then received: the policy of leasing the factory was approved by all: and with regard to the choice of the tenant even Sabapathi Rao, who was present at the meeting, made no protest. Ramachandra had been in possession since the 1st January, 1924, duly paying the rent reserved, when on application by the then Official Liquidator, the Judge, on the 20th August, 1925, declared the lease void under s. 227 (2) of the Act, as being a disposition of the company's property subsequent to the commencement of the winding-up.

Their Lordships do not go into other matters in relation to this order, approved as it was on appeal—into the fact that the value of the lease to the company was not questioned and that, in making the order, no regard was had to the law of the Nizam's Dominions, where the validity or otherwise of the lease would have been determined without any reference whatever to s. 227 (2). They say nothing of all that followed therefrom. They are concerned now only to point out that the later disasters flowed from the initial failure of those responsible to appreciate that no one had been or remained interested in the factory except the share-holders, who had by an unopposed resolution approved the lease, and that so far from declaring it void under the section, it was a transaction to be confirmed almost as a matter of course.

The second typical example of failure in the same respect is disclosed in the proceedings with reference to a dividend of Rs. 40 per share in respect of the profits of the company for the years 1922 and 1924, declared unanimously at a meeting of share-holders, or more accurately of contributories, held on the 27th December, 1925, as one to be paid on the terms that it would be repaid if called for. At that date the winding-up order had been made, but no Liquidator had so far been appointed. In point of law, under s. 178 (2) of the Act the company's assets were then constructively in the custody of the Court, and it is quite clear that no disposition of them by the contributories could be regular. But, on the other hand, except these contributories, no one at the date of the resolution had any interest whatever in the moneys to be distributed, while it is not surprising, as one of the Judges remarks, that the contributories were entirely unanimous in declaring the dividend. Now in the treasurer's accounts for the year 1924, there is a disbursement claimed of Rs. 10,665 in respect of a partial distribution of this dividend, and this disbursement has been attacked by the Official Liquidator from every angle, but always on the basis that any payment whatever of dividend after the winding-up order, albeit, in substance no more than a payment on account of the ultimate interest of each contributory in the surplus assets of the company, was as blameworthy as if, in the liquidation of an insolvent company, it had represented a distribution of creditors' funds amongst contributories.

It was of course the immediate duty of the Official Liquidator in going through the accounts to satisfy himself that the payments set up had in fact been made, and that the money had been received in circumstances which, as between the company and the registered holder of the shares in respect of which it was paid, was a complete discharge to the company. But the Official Liquidator did not think fit to stop there. He obtained orders from the Court directing the repayment of the dividends paid, and orders against the Directors personally for any dividends not so repaid by their recipients, and in other cases—in one particularly, where the registered shareholder himself makes no claim to the dividend (see supplemental appendix, page 121), and where the dividend has admittedly been paid to and received by one who claims that in equity he was so entitled to receive it—the liquidator has embarked upon an inquiry in the interest of another claimant in equity to the same dividend, in the course of which he took—and these are now included in the appendices—over 200 pages of depositions, and in connection with which he obtained an order for a commission to Nasik to take evidence, all on a subject and in support of a claim with which the company in liquidation has as such no concern whatever. It is a disturbing circumstance that the claimant for whom all this was done was the original petitioner, Sidbasappa, then not even a contributory, acting through Sabapathi Rao (see second appendix page 119), while the claimant against whom the irrelevant campaign was waged was I. Narayana Reddi, one of the Directors.

But there are other orders made in the liquidation, the terms of which are set forth in the Official Liquidator's appendices, and, on the face of them, at all events, so remarkable that it would not be very disconcerting to note their disappearance with the winding-up order, on which they depend. There are also cases where, on the startling opinion judicially expressed in the order of the 4th March, 1925, "that in effect the treasurers are not very different from the Directors", orders have apparently without discrimination been made against "the Directors" or "the treasurers", without anything whatever to indicate who are the persons so described. Their Lordships have been specially struck by the three orders following:

(a) An order of the 19th April, 1928, whereby five named Directors are apparently as for a misfeasance, and on a summons in Chambers ordered to pay Rs. 7,761-13-9—a sum which a debtor to the company had made default in paying, no consideration having apparently been given to the contention that the debt had become statute barred by the neglect of the Official Liquidator, to say nothing of its having been guaranteed by Ramachander, one of the Directors named.

(b) An order in Chambers of the 26th April, 1928, (a) for repayment of the dividends distributed under the resolution of the 22nd December, 1924; (b) for payment by Ramachander as guarantor of the Rs. 7,761-13-9 he had already as Director been ordered to pay by the order of the 19th April, 1928.

(c) An order of the 15th October, 1929, whereby, inter alia (a) all items of disbursement shown on treasurers' accounts of 1924 were ordered to be refunded by Venkata Rao and the company's treasurers, with apparently no credit given for any benefit derived by the company from the expenditure; (b) repayment was to be made by the Directors of the sum paid to the sellers for the gins already referred to, presumably as for a misfeasance, or in respect of an alleged ultra vires transaction, without reference to the fact that the gins in question had been delivered to and remained in the hands of the Official Liquidator under a previous order; (c) payment by Directors and treasurers was directed of dividends distributed under resolution of the 22nd December, 1924, and not repaid by the recipient, and other smaller payments were ordered without any consideration being given, so far as appears in the records, to the answers made; (d) the lease of the gins to Ramachander was set aside.

None of the orders above referred to are under appeal. They have doubtless long since become final in the sense in which administrative orders ever are final. It may be that in working them out defects, apparent on the face of them, ceased to be serious. But their Lordships cannot refrain from expressing the hope that in liquidation proceedings in India matters of such importance will not normally be so disposed of.

Their Lordships have now detailed (with much particularity the salient incidents in this long history. They have done so, laboriously they fear, but not finding it possible otherwise to make clear within the confines of a self-sufficient judgment the difficulty of the problem disclosed. What they find themselves faced with at the end of the day is a winding-up order, made two years after its presentation upon a petition which ought never to have been presented, for, even if not merely vindictive and malicious, the petition was entirely without proved merits. They find also that the winding-up order has in the liquidation been succeeded by a series of orders off-hand in form and on the face of them, at all events, made without full consideration of all relevant circumstances. Lastly, their Lordships find a liquidation in being which, if carried on as it has been begun, can, as they forecast it, end in nothing for the contributories but a call of all the unpaid capital to provide for payment of the costs and expenses. And for these disasters, one and all—with the exception only of the expense and trouble due to the recalcitrancy of Venkata Rao, the costs of which have already and rightly fallen upon him—the petitioners are mainly, if not indeed entirely, responsible. There is, therefore, so far, and even at this distance of time, everything to be said for the discharge of the winding-up order appealed against.

But what would now be the consequences of discharging that order? The business of the company has ceased for years: its undertaking has been broken up: its reconstitution except under new auspices is now probably quite impracticable: and the task of adjusting liability for the mischief which has resulted from the liquidation presents a prospect of far-reaching and ruinous litigation. Nor could these consequences be mitigated, nor could any bounds be set by their Lordships to the range and extent of future trouble if the winding-up order were now to be set aside. A direction to that effect would, their Lordships cannot doubt, be a calamity to all concerned. They cannot give it.

On the other hand, it seems to the Board by no means hopeless that if the liquidation be left operative, it may by a change of method be possible to avoid at least total disaster.

Their Lordships are, of course, well aware that it is not for them to dictate the future course of the liquidation. That is a matter for the learned Judge in winding-up. The judicial discretion in such matters is, at all events in the first instance, with him alone, and he may not divest himself or be divested of full responsibility for its exercise. The observations accordingly which immediately follow are made merely for his assistance. They are in no way directory. It is enough that they will have his attentive consideration. In their Lordships' view, then, it is essential, if complete disaster is to be avoided, that for the future this liquidation shall be conducted in a spirit of complete impartiality, as between different sets of contributories, and with due regard to the wishes of the contributories (s. 174). It will be for the learned Judge to consider whether this end can be attained under the present liquidator, who has identified himself so completely and, so far, so unfortunately, with the petitioners in their unworthy conflict with the main body of contributories, or whether it will not be necessary to place in the position of liquidator a man of no less high standing than the present Official Liquidator, but who has not hitherto been associated professionally or otherwise with either set of contributories, and who would be advised by a Vakil, equally dissociated from either side, whose appointment would be authorised under s. 181 of the Act. It will further deserve most careful consideration at the hand of the learned Judge, whether in the future course of the liquidation, by whomsoever it is conducted, the audited accounts up to 1923 should not remain undisturbed for reasons similar to those which have led their Lordships to leave the winding-up order in being, and whether the accounts of the company for 1924 should not be taken on the best available materials and audited in order that on these accounts, as so taken, the actual amounts with which the treasurers are to be charged may appear as accurately as is now possible. Particularly, however, will it be for the learned Judge to determine if the liquidator should not be directed to consider, as a protection from all further litigation, whether the liquidation cannot be brought to an end by some scheme under which the whole remaining assets of the company would be taken over by the majority contributories on the terms of their providing for the authorised costs and expenses of the liquidation and a sum equivalent to the then existing value of the shares in the company of the remaining contributories; and whether, failing that, the liquidator should not be directed in relation to the dividend declared on the 22nd December, 1924, and notwithstanding the orders on that subject previously made, either to complete its distribution out of the assets in his hands or enforce repayment from each recipient of the dividend paid to him. In their Lordships' judgment, the preferable course, if funds permit, is, with the sanction of the Court, to complete the distribution. All these observations, however, as their Lordships have explained, express their own views only. They form no part of the order following.

The actual order now to be made should, their Lordships think, be as follows:—That the winding-up order of the 13th November, 1924, although not justified when made, be, by reason of the lapse of time and intervening events, maintained except as to costs. As to these, the order will be discharged.

And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

As to costs, as the winding-up is allowed to continue, the petitioners cannot be ordered to pay the company's costs either of the petition or of the appeal to the High Court, proper though such an order would be. But they must not have costs in either Court, and if these costs have been paid by the Official Liquidator they must be repaid. The Official Liquidator must pay out of the assets the costs of the company—that is, the majority contributories—of the petition, of the appeal to the High Court and of this appeal. There will be no costs of this appeal to the petitioner-respondents or Madam Venkayya. The Registrar will tax the costs of this appeal of the Official Liquidator, who will have liberty to apply in the liquidation for payment out of the assets of these costs or of such part of them as the Judge, in winding-up, may, in view of this judgment, allow, the Official Liquidator having further liberty reserved to apply to the learned Judge for payment otherwise than by the majority contributories of such of his taxed costs as may be disallowed out of assets.

It will be the duty of the Official Liquidator when applying for his costs to bring this judgment of their Lordships to the notice of the learned Judge.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 4, 9, 13—Debentures issued by Improvement Trust—Forged endorsements—Surrender of old and issue of new debentures—Novation of contract—Holder in due course—Title to new debentures.

One F was entrusted by the plaintiffs-appellants with certain debentures for the purpose of collecting on their behalf the interest as it fell due. F by means of forged endorsements in his own favour pledged those securities with the Alliance Bank of Simla endorsing them over to that Bank to secure his own indebtedness. Subsequently the Alliance Bank surrendered these securities to the Improvement Trustees who issued fresh debentures in their place and described the transaction as a renewal of the old debentures. Later on the Alliance Bank under instructions from F endorsed over the new debentures in favour of the Mercantile Bank, the respondents to whom F had transferred his loan account. The plaintiffs-appellants brought a suit for delivery and transfer to them of those instruments by the Mercantile Bank;

Held, (1) that the debentures were promissory notes and were, therefore, negotiable instruments;

(2) that as there was no irregularity in the transfer the appellants were apparently in the position of holders in due course; [p. 127, col. 2.]

(3) that the new debentures issued by the Improvement Trustees were in form and in substance new and independent obligations in substitution for those under the surrendered instruments; [p. 128, col. 1.]

(4) that the appellants did not acquire any title to these new debentures; [ibid.]

(5) that the appellants had no right of action against the Mercantile Bank as the latter were holders in due course of the new debentures. [ibid.]

Consolidated Appeals Nos. 87 and 88 of 1929 from two decrees of the High Court, Bombay, Civil Appellate Jurisdiction, dated the 26th and 27th March, 1928, reversing two decrees of that Court, in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 12th and 14th April, 1927.

Messrs. C. J. Conway, K. C. and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Rayner Goddard, K. C. and C. W. Turner, for the Respondents.

Sir George Lowndes.—The questions for decision in these appeals arise out of a fraud committed by one Fernandes. In the year 1914 he was entrusted by the appellants, who were residents of Goa, with certain securities for the purpose of collecting on their behalf the interest as it fell due. Among these securities were 41 "debentures" issued by the Trustees for the Improvement of the City of Bombay under powers contained in their Act (Bombay Act IV of 1898) and also one "Municipal debenture," being presumably a debenture issued by the Municipal Corporation of Bombay under Bombay Act III of 1888. All of these securities were transferable by endorsement.

Fernandes seems to have remitted the interest to the appellants regularly till the middle of 1923, when he defaulted, and it was then discovered that he had, in 1918, by means of forged endorsements in his own favour, pledged all the debentures in question (together with others not the subject of these appeals) with the Alliance Bank of Simla, endorsing them over to that Bank to secure his own indebtedness.

Had no further complications occurred there would probably have been little difficulty in deciding on the rights of the parties; but in 1921 the Alliance Bank surrendered the 41 Improvement Trust debentures to the Trustees, who exchanged them for 22 new debentures, the face value of which differed in many cases from those of the originals, though the totals were the same. This transaction is described in the record as a "renewal" of the debentures, and seems to have been in accordance with the usual practice, but it has an important bearing on the rights of the parties. All these new instruments were issued directly to, and in the name of, the Alliance Bank, clear of all previous endorsements. The original securities were cancelled by the Trustees and retained by them. The same process, mutatis mutandis, was gone through in the case of the Municipal debenture.

Thereafter, in 1921, Fernandes transferred his loan account to the Mercantile Bank of India, the respondents in these appeals, and on his instructions the Alliance Bank endorsed the new instruments over to the respondents.

The appellants now claim the delivery and transfer to them of these instruments by the respondents. They succeeded in the first Court in India, but failed to hold their decree on appeal and the questions involved came before this Board for final determination. There is no dispute as to the facts set out above.

The securities entrusted to Fernandes were the property of the two sets of appellants, and suits were instituted by them separately on the original side of the Bombay High Court. The defendants in each case were Fernandes, the Alliance Bank, and the respondents, but the suits were defended only by the respondents. They were tried and heard in appeal separately, but are consolidated before the Board, and in their Lordships' opinion the same considerations apply in each.

The original Improvement Trust "debentures," specimens of which are printed in the record, were in the form of a promise to pay a particular sum to the Bank of Bombay or order on the 20th August, 1963, with half-yearly interest in the meantime, at 4 per cent. per annum. On the back was a series of spaces for the entry of interest payments and a column of endorsements commencing with an endorsement by the original payee, the Bank of Bombay, and ending with that of Fernandes to the Alliance Bank. The renewals, with which the appeals are principally concerned, were in the form of a promise to pay the Alliance Bank or order, and contained no reference to the originals except that under the serial numbers of each new instrument was entered another number, which is said to be that of an old debenture, and where two or more of the originals were consolidated in a new instrument the word "consolidation" appeared.

It was agreed on the argument in appeal in India that the so-called "debentures" were promissory notes as defined in s. 4 of Act XXVI of 1881, and, therefore, under s. 13 of that Act negotiable instruments. In their Lordships' opinion this is the correct view of their legal attributes. There was no irregularity in their transfer to the respondents; the references to the old numbers and to consolidation were not, their Lordships think, sufficient to lead the respondents to believe that there was any defect in the title of the Alliance Bank, and it is not suggested that there was anything else in the transaction to put them on enquiry. The respondents were apparently, therefore, in the position of holders in due course under s. 9 of the Act.

The trial Judge, as already stated, decided both the suits in favour of the plaintiffs, the present appellants. The main ground of his judgment was that no title could be acquired by the respondents through the forged endorsements and that the "renewals" must be regarded in law as merely the "fruit" of the original securities. He relied upon the cases of Lee v. Zagury (1) and Hunsraj v. Ruttonji (2). He made decrees in the appellants' favour, declaring in each case their title to the instruments claimed, and ordering the respondents to transfer and hand over the same to them together with all interest or dividends realized by the respondents within three years prior to the filing of the suits. He also granted the appellants certain relief against Fernandes, which is not now material.

The appeals were heard by Marten, C.J. and Blackwell, J., who delivered in each suit separate, but concurring, judgments in favour of the present respondents. In the one case they dismissed the suit as against the respondents, declaring that the appellants were not entitled to the "new debentures" held by the respondents; in the other they limited the decree of the lower Court to certain securities not in question in these appeals.

The learned Judges were of opinion that the issue by the Improvement Trustees of the instruments the subject of the suit constituted in effect a new contract in each case between them and the Alliance Bank; that the respondents were holders in due course of these instruments, and that the appellants had no right of action against them. Referring to the authorities on which the trial Judge had relied, they held that the case of Hunsraj v. Ruttonji (2) was wrongly decided, and that Lee v. Zagury (1) was a decision on very special facts, and could not govern the cases before them.

In their Lordships' opinion the conclusion come to by the Appellate Court was right. They think that the suits, so far as the respondents were concerned, were misconceived. On the original debentures the Improvement Trustees were, no doubt, bound to the appellants, and the forged endorsements in favour of Fernandes would not, prima facie, affect their title. If these debentures had come into the possession of the respondents, the appellants might well have been entitled to recover them. But what the appellants claimed to have transferred and made over to them were instruments to which they never had a title and with which their Lordships think they had no concern. They were not in any sense mere appendages to or continuations of the original securities. They may be called "renewals," but they were in form and in substance new and independent obligations in substitution for those under the surrendered instruments, and entered into by them with the Alliance Bank and their transferees. This is shown by the consolidation of the amounts for which the original promissory notes were issued, and by the elimination of the previous endorsements. In the case of dishonour by the makers it is hardly conceivable that the holders could be entitled to sue the endorers of the old notes; they would not ordinarily even know who they were, and consolidation would be inexplicable except on the basis of a new contract, as any material alteration of the originals would render them void against intermediate parties; see s. 87 of the Act above referred to.

In truth, the only connection between the old and the new instruments was that, as between the Trustees and the Alliance Bank, the consideration for the issue of the new was the surrender of the old instruments. This cannot, their Lordships think, give the appellants any title to the new instruments, though it may not affect their title to the old ones.

It may be that that if the suits had been instituted against the Improvement

Trust it would have been difficult for that body to resist them. They were in possession of the securities to which the appellants were entitled, and though they affected to cancel them, this would not necessarily defeat the appellants' title. Their Lordships are not called upon to express, and do not express, any opinion upon this question.

Their Lordships agree with the learned Chief Justice of Bombay in thinking that Hunsraj v. Ruttonji (2), so far as that decision dealt with "renewals" of Government promissory notes, was wrongly decided. They notice that the Indian Securities Act (XIII of 1886), which provided for such renewals, gave special statutory protection to the Government in respect of the original securities, and this protection is continued, though subject to more stringent conditions, by Act X of 1920.

With regard to Lee v. Zagury (1) their Lordships agree that it is no authority upon the present case; it was a decision upon a complicated set of facts, and did not affect to lay down any principle of law.

Their Lordships have dealt in this judgment mainly with the Improvement Trust debentures, but they think that the same considerations apply to the Municipal debenture, and that the appeals fail with regard to all of them.

For the reasons given their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the consolidated appeals should be dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs.

Appeal against Original Decree of the Officiating Sub-Judge, Birbhum, dated the 12th September, 1927.

Mr. Karunamoy Ghose, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Braja Lal Chakravarti and Hari Prasnna Mukherji, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decree dismissing their suit.

The plaintiffs are two brothers who, as well as their uncle defendant No. 2 are *shebait*s of their family idol Sree Sree Radha Govinda Deb Thakur. One of the debutter properties of the idol is a 14 annas 2 ganda 2 karas share of an entire estate, No. 1246 of the Birbhum Collectorate, which goes by the name of Lot Kutubpur and includes thanadari lands. This share constitutes a separate account property being revenue-paying estate No. 1246-1. It was sold at a revenue sale held by the Collector of Birbhum on 28th March 1924, and purchased thereat by defendant No. 1. The *shebait*i right of the two plaintiffs extends to a half of the said share and that of defendant No. 2 to the other half.

On 8th July, 1925, the plaintiffs commenced this action on a plaint in which it was averred that there was bitter enmity and long standing litigation between them and defendant No. 2; that estate No. 1246-1 having fallen into arrears for non-payment of the revenue of the January kist of 1924 the estate was advertised for sale to be held on 27th March, 1924; that on that date defendant No. 2 sent his officer Nimai Chandra Ghose to Suri, and the plaintiffs also sent their officer there with money for their share of the revenue; that Nimai Chandra Ghose gave out that he would pay the amount of revenue together with such penalty as the Collector might impose and also filed a petition for that purpose before the Collector; that the plaintiffs' officer, believing that the revenue would be so paid in and finding that a chalan for such deposit had been passed made over the plaintiffs' share and the revenue to Nimai Chandra Ghose and came back; and that thereafter Nimai Chandra Ghose having thus succeeded in misleading the plaintiffs' Officer and sent him away, did not deposit the revenue and fraudulently caused the estate to be put up for sale on the next day and got it purchased for defendant No. 2 in the benami of the defendant No. 1. Certain irregularities and illegalities in the procedure adopted for the sale were also averred. It was also alleged that substantial loss was thus caused as property worth Rs. 50,000 had been sold up for Rs. 18,100 only. The prayers were for setting the sale aside on a declaration that it was illegal, ultra vires and without jurisdiction, and for recovery of possession of the estate together with mesne profits.

Defendant No. 1 in his written statement filed on 29th October, 1925, denied that there were any irregularities or illegalities as alleged in the plaint, or that he was a benamidar for defendant No. 2, or that there was any substantial loss.

On 18th January, 1927, that is to say, about a year and a half after the action was commenced, the plaintiffs made a petition for amendment of their plaint. This amendment was allowed in spite of the objection of defendant No. 1. The amendment in substance was that the plea of benami purchase was given up, and it introduced a statement to the effect that the plaintiffs had been subsequently informed that Nimai Ohandra Ghose did not get the money which he was expecting in order to make the deposit and upon that he entered into an arrangement with defendant No. 1 under which the latter agreed to purchase the property at the sale and then to reconvey the same to defendant No. 2 on receipt of Rs. 2,000 as his profits in the transaction. A prayer was added that the property should be reconveyed to the idol on receipt of the said amount or such other amount as was considered proper.

In the additional written statement which defendant No. 1 filed on 31st March, 1927, after the aforesaid amendment of the plaint, the said defendant denied the arrangement alleged.

Defendant No. 2 took no part in the suit.

Before dealing with the other questions that have arisen in this appeal it would be convenient, by way of clearing the ground, to dispose of a few questions of fact on which the findings of the Court below were against the appellants and the correctness of which findings has been assailed before us on their behalf.

The first question is whether the alteration in the averments made by the amendment of the plaint was made bona fide, the allegation as to a benami purchase by defendant No. 2 in the name of defendant No. 1 being abandoned and the story of a secret arrangement under which defendant No. 1 was to reconvey the property to defendant No. 2 for a profit of Rs. 2,000 being set up. The plaintiff Kshirode Mohan Ghose Moulik stated in his evidence :

"The statements I have made in para. 16 of the plaint (meaning the allegations as to the benami purchase) I got from Rakhal Banerji, Am-mukhtear of Asit (meaning defendant No. 2). That Rakhal Banerji cannot be found now in Suri. I do not know his whereabouts . . . I got the information about the statements made in para. 4 of the amendment petition from Rakhal Babu (meaning the story of the secret arrangement, towards the beginning of January, 1927 . . . I have no good feelings with any men of Asit. I have no faith in Asit. I have no faith in his karmacharis . . . I cited Ashu as witness as Rakhal told me he was present at the time of sale. I did not consult Ashu about what he knows. I cited Nimai and Santiram as witnesses as Rakhal told me that they were present at the time of sale. I did not consult them before, but I expected that they would speak the truth as their masters had been disappointed. I sent for Rakhal also at the beginning of January, 1927, to know what the witnesses would say. I called him at Kshitish's house. Then he told me the real state of matters as stated in my amendment petition. I did not take Rakhal to anybody for repeating his second statements (meaning the story of the secret arrangement. I had no reason to disbelieve Rakhal Babu and so I got the plaint amended."

In our opinion, it is perfectly incredible that the witness could have, without taking any precautions to fix Rakhal to his second statements when he had once gone back upon his first statements, and without assuring himself that the officers of his bitter enemy who were all concerned in the fraud would support his case as witnesses on his behalf, could have thought of getting such an important alteration made in his case. Such a position, in our judgment, is unthinkable. We entirely agree with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on the point and hold that, finding in the course of the year and a half that had elapsed that defendant No. 1 had secured unimpeachable documentary evidence (which has subsequently been produced by him in the case), showing that the purchase had been made by that defendant on his own behalf and with his own money procured by loan and not on behalf of defendant No. 2, the plaintiff joined hands with defendant No. 2 to make a common cause and set up the story of a secret arrangement in order to recover the property.

Next, as regards the truth of the story itself. The story rests upon the evidence of P. W. No. 1 Nimai Ohandra Ghose, the Sardar Dewan of defendant No. 2, P. W. No. 2 Santiram Mukherji another officer of defendant No. 2, and P. W. No. 3 Ashutosh Chatterji, a man of inconsiderable position and a relation of P. W. No. 2. A close scrutiny of the evidence of these three witnesses discloses wide divergence as to the details, and there are clear and irreconcilable contradictions as regards the time, the place and other essential particulars of the transaction which they profess to speak to. Besides, it is improbable to the last degree that such a secret arrangement with such far-reaching consequences could be entered into by these officers of defendant No. 2 on their own responsibility and without any reference to their master or that no greater precaution would be taken by them to guard against defendant No. 1 resiling from it. Defendant No. 2, on whose behalf and for whose benefit this agreement is said to have been entered into, has not ventured to come forward; his officers have made barefaced admissions as having been party to a serious fraud intended to secure for defendant No. 2 an advantage over the plaintiffs by depriving them of their property. It is not suggested that during the long period that elapsed since the sale and till the amendment was applied for, there was any demand for specific performance of the agreement, or any tender of the amount of Rs. 2,000; and indeed it is admitted that there have been no such steps taken. In support of the story of this secret arrangement, it has been attempted to be shown that the officers of defendant No. 2 were scaring away intending bidders in order to help defendant No. 1 to make the purchase, but we are not satisfied that any such thing was really done by them. It is utterly incredible that there was such an arrangement and, indeed, everything points to the falsity of the story so put forward. On the other hand the evidence of defendant No. 1 himself and of such witnesses of his as D. W. No. 4 Baidya Nath Roy, D. W. No. 5 Ananta Lal Ghosal and D. W. No. 6 Debendra Chandra Ghosal—witnesses who appear to us to be perfectly reliable—have given a clear and convincing account as to how the purchase was made. On that evidence we are satisfied that it was a bona fide purchase made by defendant No. 1 for his own benefit. The evidence, oral and documentary, as regards the source of the purchase money need not be discussed as the plea of benami has been abandoned, but we may say, once for all, that we can see nothing suspicious anywhere in that evidence.

Then arises the question whether the plaintiffs' story of their having sent their share of the Revenue through an officer of theirs and that officer having been bluffed by defendant No. 2's officer Niami Chandra Ghose, with the assurance that the Revenue would be duly put in by him, is true. In view of the fact that the allegation of a benami purchase was withdrawn, and in view of our finding that defendant No. 1 was a bona fide purchaser, the question has lost all its importance. But it is as well that we should record our opinion as to the truth or otherwise of the story as it has been discussed before us at considerable length. The story is given by P. W.

No. 1 Nimai Chandra Ghose in these words: "Plaintiffs' man, Ramendra Prosad Ghose Hazra came that day to the Suri Collectorate. He paid me Rs. 500 (the amount of the revenue payable by them, for deposit and then went away between 12 noon and 1 P. M.)"

Plaintiff's Witness No. 4 Ramendra Prosad Ghose Hazra, also deposed to the same effect and also deposed that subsequently Nimai paid him back the said sum of Rs. 500. The plaintiff Kshirode Mohan Ghose Moulik, P. W. No. 11, has also given the same story. But no documentary evidence, showing that Rs. 1,000 had in fact been sent through Ramendra for deposit of the revenue of this estate and also of another estate Madanpur or that Rs. 500 was received back subsequently, has been produced. The said plaintiff when pressed in cross-examination about his account books, said that they were missing, that the man who used to write them had absconded with them and gave other answers which are highly unconvincing and unsatisfactory. It would be surprisingly strange if in the face of so much ill-feeling and enmity between the parties Ramendra, if he had been really sent with the money, would not have taken some precautions for ensuring that the money would be put in, but would be satisfied with an assurance that Santiram would be coming with the amount due on account of defendant No. 2's share. It is important to point out that in the appeal before the Commissioner for setting aside the sale (Ex. 17) the payment of Rs. 500 by Ramendra to Nimai was not alleged. It is interesting to note that long before the institution of the present suit the plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 filed a petition (Ex. N) on 15th November, 1924, objecting, to the mutation of defendant No. 1's name as purchaser of the estate and there they stated:

"That disputes having arisen amongst the co-sharers of the mehal, the revenue of the Collectorate was not deposited in time... that the disputes amongst the objectors have now been settled. They will, therefore, institute a case in the highest Court for setting aside the sale of the mehal sold."

It also appears that in a plaint which defendant No. 2 and another person filed in 1927 (Ex. U) for setting aside the revenue sale held on the 25th June, 1925, in respect of another mehal Paharpur, in which the present plaintiffs are their co-sharers, it was alleged that an officer of the present plaintiffs, in collusion with the purchaser, scared away intending bidders by assuring them that the revenue would be deposited, and ultimately did not put it in with the object of depriving defendant No. 2 of his property. In these circumstances and for the reasons given above, we think we ought to hold that the story is not true.

What has been said above will give an idea as to our view of the facts of the case: shortly put, it is this that for some reason or other the proprietors were not diligent or it may be that each was expecting that the other would pay, or it may again be that they were honestly expecting to be able to pay, but at the last moment the requisite amount was not available. We proceed next to consider the other points that have been urged in the appeal.

The main contention of the appellants is that the sale was without jurisdiction inasmuch as there were no arrears. In the Court below two documents were produced on behalf of the plaintiffs (Exs. 14 and 15) as affording foundation for the argument that there were no arrears. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that these documents did not relate to the estate in question and that, even if they did, Ex. 14 would show that on the 12th January, 1924, on which date the arrears for which the sale took place were payable, the revenue for the months of Aswin, Kartik and Aghrayan was in the arrears. The Subordinate Judge was unable to connect the documents with the estate in question because of the difference in the amount of revenue and also because he thought that Taluk Fateh Chand in Parganna Kutubpur and not Lot Kutubpur was mentioned in them. The difference in the amount of the revenue may not unreasonably be explained by the fact that the estate subsequently lost some of its lands, of which fact however there is no evidence. And there is evidence that the word "Fatehchand" may be read also as "Fatehpur": vide P. W. No. 13. The conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on the question of identity, therefore, does not rest on any very sure foundation. But it is needless to pursue the matter further because the appellants themselves have resiled from the position they took in the Court below and no longer contend that the documents relate to the estate in question. They have, on the other hand, relied on the Subordinate Judge's conclusion that the documents relate to some other mehal; presumably because they see that if the documents be held to relate to the estate in question, they would, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, show that there were arrears due. The appellants have pressed before us the other contention that they urged in the Court below on the authority of the observations of Chatterjee, J., in Amrita Lal Roy v. Secretary of State (1) (46 Ind. Cas 447) and have supplemented it by reference to the recent decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Saraswati Bahuria v. Surja Narain Choudhuri (2). That contention is that as the sale was for recovery of revenue due up to Pous (i. e., December-January) talab (demand), the amount, though unpaid, was not an arrear of revenue within the meaning of s. 2, Act XI of 1859, until 1st February, and for payment of such arrears the last date fixed by the Board of Revenue under s. 3 of the Act was 28th March, and consequently there were no arrears on the date fixed for the sale. The decisions upon which the appellants have relied are entirely distinguishable on the facts. In Amrita Lal Roy's case (1) the observations of Chatterjee, J., were based upon the view that he took of the facts, viz., that upon the documents produced in the case and in the absence of the kistbundi governing the estate, the expression "January kist" or "January talab" was to be taken as meaning the date contemplated in s. 2 of the Act. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Saraswati Bahuria's case (2) also did not intend to lay down any new law: their Lordships, on examining the materials on the record, came to the conclusion that "the revenue was payable in four instalments viz. the 7th June, the 28th September, the 12th January and the 28th March" that the revenue payable on the 28th March became an arrear on the 1st April, of which the last date fixed for payment under s. 3 of the Act by the Board of Revenue was the 7th June and so the sale on the 6th June was without jurisdiction. In the present case, a careful perusal of the papers of the Collectorate, and especially the notices Exs. 13 (a) to 13 (f) and the Arrear List Ex. 18 distinctly mention 12th January, 1924, as the last day for the payment of the revenue which in our opinion can be nothing else than the last date contemplated by s. 3 of the Act and is not the date of the instalments according to the settlements and kistbundi of the mehal as contemplated in s. 2 of the Act. The entries in the touzi Ledgers (Ex. 16 series) upon which the appellants strongly rely, do not in our opinion, militate against this view. It is quite true that the expression "Pous talab" is used in the documents. It should however be borne in mind that since the proprietor is quite safe so long as he pays the revenue by the last date for payment fixed under s. 3 of the Act, the earlier date on which it was payable under the settlement and kistbundi of the mehal lost in course of time all its importance, and was lost sight of in practice and the last date fixed for payment under s. 3 became all important. In our judgment, the expression "Pous talab" used in the documents is not the instalment for Pous according to the settlement and kistbundi of the mehal, but the instalment for which the last date of payment as fixed under s. 3 of the Act falls in Pous, and is loosely used to mean the instalments payable by the 12th January as so fixed. The books of the Collectorate showed the estate in arrears and the relevant entries therein may be presumed to be correct under s. 114, Evidence Act having regard to Illustrations (e) and (f) [Mahammad Solaiman v. Birendra Chandra Singh (3)] and such books must be examined in order to arrive at a finding as to whether there were arrears or not: Jagadishwar Narain v. Muhammad Haziq Hussain (4).

In the judgment of their Lordships in Saraswati Bahuria's case (2) the notice issued in that case under s. 7 of the Act is set out and in that notice it was not the last day fixed for payment of the arrears under s. 3 that was mentioned but on the other hand it was stated that

"Rs. 45-7-3 is due on account of arrears of revenue for the period ending the 21st Chait 1326 corresponding to 28th March, 1919."

These words, their Lordships held, would indicate that the date mentioned was the date of the settlement and kistbundi contemplated by s. 2 of the Act. Their Lordships also considered the other materials on the record and they also supported that conclusion. Of course the learned Judges of the Patna High Court from whose decisions the appeal was taken had held that as there was no necessity to state in a notice under s. 7, the date contemplated by s. 2, the date given in the notice should be taken as the date fixed for payment under s. 3; [see Suraj Narain v. Saraswati Bahuria (5)] but their Lordships of the Judicial Committee did not take that view. The notices in the present case are entirely different. This contention of the appellants, therefore, must be overruled.

The Collector's jurisdiction to hold the sale has also been impugned upon several other grounds to which reference will now be made. Firstly, it has been argued that the estate consisted of malguzari lands and of thanadari lands and that for arrears due on account of revenue for malguzari lands and on account of demands for thanadari lands, one sale could not be held. So far as this contention is concerned, it has no substance because although in the Collectorate ledgers (Exs. 16 to 16-c) separate accounts in respect of the said two items are kept, the A register (Ex. 12) and the D Register (Ex. 8) show that the thanadari lands have been amalgamated with the malguzari lands of the mehal and they together form one estate as defined in s. 1, Act VII of 1868 and that the demands on the two heads have been amalgamated to form a total demand for the estate. Secondly, it has been contended that there was no mehal named Huda Kutubur Fatehpur which was the name given in the notices, but that the real name of the mehal was Lot Kutubpur in Pargana Fatehpur. There is evidence that the mehal is known by the former name, that it is the name which it bears in most of the Collectorate papers. That again is the case which defendant No. 2 gave as of this mehal in Ex. 2. Moreover the number of the estate was also given in each of the notices, and there was not the least chance of anybody being misled as to its identity, nor indeed is there any evidence that anybody was in fact misled. Thirdly, it has been argued that whereas the estate belongs to the idol of whom the plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 are only shebaitis, they have been described in the papers as proprietors. This, if at all, is an irregularity of no substance. Fourthly, it has been contended the sale was without jurisdiction because the Collector's order on the petition for exemption made by Nimai Ohandra Ghose was illegal, being a conditional and not an absolute order of exemption; and the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Lala Gouri Shankar Lal v. Janki Pershad (6) has been cited in support of the contention. It is difficult to understand of what use this contention is to the appellants because it is not their case that the order had the effect of exempting the estate from sale. Their Lordships in that case held that an order under s. 18, Act XI of 1859, for exempting an estate from sale for arrears of revenue must be an absolute exemption, and not an order having effect as an exemption or not according to what may happen or be done afterwards, and that it must not depend on an act which may or may not be performed. The Collector's order in the present case was:

"Exempted on payment of all arrears and penalty Rs. 150 as a special case."

It was not an absolute order, but it only comes to this: that there was no order under s. 18 of the Act exempting the estate from sale. How that would vitiate a sale when it was held, the arrears not having been paid in the meantime, it is not possible to imagine. Fifthly, it has been contended that the adjournment of the sale to the next day was in contravention of s. 20 of the Act and so the sale held was illegal. The order of the Collector as regards this adjournment was in these words:

"To-day was fixed for revenue sale. Four sales were held out of 21 in the sale list. The proceedings could not be finished till 5 p. m. It was brought to my notice that in the case of T. No. 1246-1 Huda Kutubpur Fatehpur with Police (? lands) the defaulting proprietor who was allowed exemption under s. 18, Act XI of 1859, on payment of all arrears and penalty, could not deposit the amount up to 5 p. m. All the bidders have now left the Court. The sale is, therefore, adjourned till to-morrow (noon) 28th March, 1924."

It has been said that s. 20 authorizes the Collector to adjourn a sale when he is unable from sickness, from the occurrence of a holiday or from any other cause, to commence the sale on the day fixed or, if having commenced it he is unable from any cause to complete it; and that the sale in the present case was adjourned to the next day on the ground that the Collector was unable to commence it on the date fixed because he had to wait till 5 p. m. for the deposit to be made which was not a cause ejusdem generis with sickness or holiday and so the adjournment was illegal. In our opinion this argument is based upon an erroneous interpretation of the section. The sale spoken of in the section is the sale proceedings of all the estates that are to be sold on the particular day. That sale had commenced, and 4 out of the 21 estates were sold. The other estates could not be sold because it was already 5 p. m. and all the bidders had left, and the result was that the sale which had been commenced could not be completed. To this case the latter part of the provisions quoted applies, and an adjournment in such circumstances may be granted by the Collector when "from any cause" he is unable to complete the proceedings. The expression "any other cause" in the former part of the provision means a cause ejusdem generis, but the expression "any cause" which occurs in the latter part need not be so. Sixthly, some arguments have been advanced to show that the notices under ss. 6 and 7 of the Act were not duly served. To this arguments. 8, Act VII of 1868, affords a complete answer. It is true that there is a note in the sale list showing that the notice under s. 7 was not duly published as regards the mehal in question and there is a decision of this Court in the case of Rajrani Dasi v. Ganesh Prasad Mahapatra (7), which says that s. 8, Act VII (B. O.) of 1868, would not debar one from proving that the notice had been served in a wrong mehal in contravention of the Act. But non-service of a notice under s. 7 of the Act, which is meant to forbid rai-yats and under-tenants to pay rent to the defaulting proprietor, has no bearing on the question of, and cannot affect, the price fetched at the sale and is consequently immaterial in the present case. Gobind Chunder v. Shirajunnessa (8), Mahommad Azahar v. Raj Chunder (9), Azimuddin Patwari v. Secretary of State, (10) and Sheikh Mahommad Aga v. Jadunandan Jha (11).

Two other objections of comparatively minor importance were also urged. The objection that 30 days did not elapse from the date of publication in the Calcutta Gazette does not even bear examination in view of the provisions contained in s. 6 of the Revenue Sale Law. There is also no substance in the contention based upon the fact that the order for adjournment of the sale, to which reference has been made above, was signed by the Collector at the Lees Club and not at the Collector's office. The signature at the place mentioned did not affect the jurisdiction of the Collector nor did it in any way affect the sale that ultimately took place.

In conclusion it is necessary to state, as regards the value of the property sold, that though the Subordinate Judge has held that its fair price is Rs. 31,000, his calculations are based upon figures that are not correct, and that on a proper calculation on the basis of the figures to be found in the Valuation Statement under the Cess Act (Ex. 11) the value would work out at somewhere about Rs. 22,000. We have not been able to find any materials on which we may hold that the price fetched at the sale was utterly inadequate or that the deficiency that there was due to any irregularity or illegality.

The result, in our opinion, is that this appeal fails. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 69, 70, 370—Summons—Mode of service—Conviction without proper service of summons—Legality—Judgments of Presidency Magistrates—Contents—Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1923), s. 391.

The records of Presidency Magistrates should be properly kept and the provisions of s. 370, Criminal Procedure Code, should be properly and strictly complied with.

A conviction under s. 391, Calcutta Municipal Act, cannot be upheld where the summons has not been properly served on the accused.

A summons is not properly served where it is left with the durwan without any attempt being made to find out the accused.

Messrs. Bepin Chandra Mallick and Rabindra Nath Banerji, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Probodh Chandra Chatterji and Pashupati Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment—The petitioner in this case has been found guilty under s. 391, Calcutta Municipal Act, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 120. The ground on which the rule has been granted is first of all that no summons having been served on the petitioner his conviction in his absence was illegal. The contention appears to be well founded. The summons itself bears the endorsement "served on the durwan." Section 69, Criminal Procedure Code, provides that a summons shall, if practicable be served personally on the person summoned and s. 70 provides that if by the exercise of due diligence he cannot be found in a Presidency Town a duplicate may be left with his servant.

The peon's return does not show that any attempt was made to find out the petitioner. Obviously no attempt has been made to comply with the provision of the Code for service of summons and for that reason the Magistrate's order is illegal. The rule must be, therefore, made absolute and the conviction set aside. I cannot part with the case without dealing with what I can only describe as the extraordinary way in which from start to finish the case has been dealt with in the Magistrate's Court. The record to be appreciated requires to be seen. It consists in a printed form for application of summons which apparently was supplied by the Corporation of Calcutta. It bears at the bottom the signature of the Chief Executive Officer and it was filed in Court on 6th March, 1929. The Magistrate proceeds to use the application as an order-sheet. These orders are not recorded in any particular order. They seem to be recorded anywhere where there is a blank space and finally all round the edge of the piece of paper. It is perhaps for this reason somewhat difficult to follow the order in which the orders are made, and as some of the orders are written over them it is difficult to discover how many orders are passed.

As I have stated it requires to be seen to be appreciated. There seem to be some 30 or 40 orders beginning on 6th March, 1929, and ending on 13th October, 1930, when the case was finally disposed of. As far as can be gathered from them the parties one or both were usually absent. This does not seem to have caused the Magistrate the slightest concern. He merely fixed another date and when on this date parties were again absent fixed another. He fixed some 30 or 40 of these dates.

Finally on 13th October, 1930, the Magistrate noted that accused was absent, offence proved and he fined Rs. 120.

Not the slightest attempt is made by the Magistrate to comply with the provision of s. 370. All he has recorded is that accused M. M. Pandey is fined Rs. 120 under s. 391. Who is the complainant, what was the offence, what was the date of commission, etc., he makes no attempt to record. I may here say that this is not a solitary case. I have a batch of some eight cases tried by the same Magistrate in the same slovenly and unsatisfactory way. The attention of the Chief Presidency Magistrate is drawn to this matter and he is requested to take steps at once so that the record of the Municipal Magistrate may be properly kept and also that the provision of s. 370, Criminal Procedure Code are properly and strictly complied with. There is a proper form for trial of cases and it is to be used. Let a copy of this order be sent to the Local Government.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 370—Presidency Magistrates—Duty to keep records properly.

Presidency Magistrates should see that the records are properly prepared and kept in compliance with the provisions of s. 370, Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal Revision against an order of the Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 13th October, 1930.

Mr. Santimoy Majumdar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Probodh Chandra Chatterji and Pashupati Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The facts of the case are these:

On 4th February, 1928, a gentleman described as a Theatre Inspector brought a charge against the present petitioner Probodh Chandra Guha for not taking out a license under s. 391. Of what Acts s. 391 is a section does not appear, but I am told it is a section of the Calcutta Municipal Act. The parties themselves then do not seem to have taken any further interest in the case. The Magistrate records a number of orders of absentee and fixes a number of dates of which not the slightest notice seems to have been taken. I have referred to the manner in which this Magistrate keeps his record in another case (1261*). I would only remark this record is kept in the same dirty and slovenly way.

At last on 13th October, 1930, nearly three years after the case was instituted, the parties condescended to be present and the Magistrate passed the following extraordinary order the meaning of which I have been unable to discover:

"Agent says P. O. Guha is no longer Secretary.

The Art Theatre Limited are fined Rs. 100 only under s. 391 under which accused is liable for a few months performance also."

*[See 136 I. O. 135—Ed.]

If I understand the order rightly the Art Theatre Limited have been fined Rs. 100 though, as far as I can see, they were not the accused persons but it was P. O. Guha who was the accused. What the remark of the Magistrate—"under which accused is liable for a few months performance also"—I do not pretend to understand

As in other cases no attempt whatsoever has been made in this case to comply with the provision of s. 370, Criminal Procedure Code.

Hardly any of the particulars required to be recorded by the Magistrate have been so recorded.

I might point out that the headings of the application for summons made by the Corporation are not recorded by the Magistrate. I would draw the attention of the Chief Presidency Magistrate to the record and request him to see that records are properly prepared and the provision of s. 370, Criminal Procedure Code observed.

In the present case I have no alternative but to set aside the order of the Magistrate being apparently a meaningless order.

He could not convict the Art Theatre Ltd, as they were not the accused, and so far as I can understand no order has been passed really with respect to the accused P. O. Guha.

Let a copy of this order also be sent to the Local Government.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 231, 233, 234—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 409, 477-A—Misjoinder—Joinder of two or more charges for breach of trust with two or more for falsification of accounts—Legality—Alteration of charge—Accused's right to re-examine witness—Refusal to allow re-examination—Validity of trial.

Three offences of criminal breach of trust may be tried together and three offences for falsification of accounts may be tried together, but as an offence of criminal breach of trust is not of the same kind as an offence of falsification of accounts the trial of two or more charges of criminal breach of trust cannot legally be joined with two or more charges of falsification of accounts. Raman Behari Das v. Emperor (1), followed. [p. 137, col. 1.]

Where after the conclusion of the case and before delivery of judgment, the trying Magistrate made an alteration in the charge and though the accused asked for certain witnesses to be called for cross-examination, his prayer was rejected on the ground that the alteration was immaterial :

Held, that s. 231, Criminal Procedure Code, was mandatory and as the Magistrate had acted in violation of the terms of s. 231 the trial was illegal irrespective of the question whether the accused was prejudiced or not. [p. 137, col. 2.]

Messrs. S. C. Taluqdar, and Monmatha Nath Roy, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Khundkar and Anil Chandra Roy Chowdhury, for the Crown.

M. C. Ghose, J.—The petitioner has been convicted in two separate cases under ss. 409 and 477-A of the Indian Penal Code and under s. 55 of the Postal Act. The prosecution case is that the petitioner was a Post Master in charge of the Hatigarh Postoffice and in that capacity on different dates in the month of December, 1930 he received five value-payable articles for delivery to the consignees on payment of the price. He delivered the articles and received payments therefor but dishonestly misappropriated the sums realised and dishonestly omitted to make proper entries in the Register and in each transaction he is said to have committed an offence under ss. 409 and 477 A, Indian Penal Code, and under s. 55 of the Postal Act. Three of these transactions were tried in one trial and two of them in a separate trial.

It is urged before us that the charges of three distinct criminal breaches of trust could not be properly tried together with the charges of three distinct falsification of accounts, that the two classes of cases could not be joined together and that such misjoinder of charges has vitiated the trial. Section 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure says 'For every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge' and every such "charge shall ordinarily be tried separately." Under s. 234 a person may be charged and tried at one trial for three offences of the same kind committed within a space of 12 months. Therefore, three offences of criminal breach of trust may be tried together and three offences for falsification of accounts may be tried together. But an offence of criminal breach of trust is not of the same kind as an offence of falsification of accounts. Therefore, the trial of two or more charges of criminal breach of trust cannot legally be joined with two or more charges of falsification of accounts. See the case of Raman Behari Das v. Emperor (1), in which it was held that a joinder of three charges under s. 409 with three under s. 477-A relating to different transactions is not warranted by any of the exceptions provided in the Code and is illegal and that a misjoinder is absolutely fatal to the trial.

It has also been urged that the learned Magistrate after the conclusion of the case and before delivery of judgment made an alteration in the charge. The accused person thereupon made a petition asking for certain witnesses to be called for cross-examination. The learned Magistrate rejected the petition. In his explanation the learned Magistrate states that in this case the alteration was in no way material and that the objection raised by the accused was absolutely frivolous. It may be that the alteration did not in fact prejudice the accused in any way but it is to be observed that s. 231 Criminal Procedure Code does not leave any discretion to the trying Magistrate. The section is mandatory. It states that in a case of an alteration of a charge after the commencement of the trial the accused shall be allowed to recall or resubmit and examine any witnesses who may have been examined. In my opinion, the rejection of the petitioner's petition was in violation of the terms of s. 231 and as such has vitiated the trial.

In the circumstances, the convictions in both the cases are set aside and the cases are sent back for a fresh trial according to law.

The petitioners will remain on the same bail pending further orders by the Magistrate.

Pearson, J.—I agree.

THE SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCE OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL—APPELLANT

versus

LUDUR CHANDRA DAS—RESPONDENT.

Opium Act (I of 1878), s. 9 (e)—'Importing' and 'exporting', meanings of—Sending opium from Native State addressed to accused's nominee in British India—Refusal of addressee to accept—Offence, nature of—Place of commission of offence—Opium smuggling—Heavy fines, necessity of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 179, 188—S. 188, whether overrides s. 179.

The offence of importing opium is an offence constituted by bringing it into the territory in question. It does not matter where it was before, provided it was outside the province. If the goods once come across the border of the territory in question, if they come for and on account of the accused with his consent, the offence of importing is complete. It is not necessary to show that the accused did anything outside the territory. [p. 139, col. 1.]

A, who was a resident of Assam, sent from Cooch Behar a parcel (which was subsequently found to contain opium) addressed to B in Assam which B was to receive on his behalf. The Post Master getting suspicious requested B to take open delivery and on his refusal duly opened the parcel and it was found to contain opium :

Held, (i) that A was guilty of importing opium in Assam under s. 9, Opium Act, and the offence was entirely committed in Assam. [p. 139, col. 2.]

(ii) that the offence of possession was not made out as B had refused to take possession of the parcel [ibid.]

(iii) that the offence was not committed in Cooch Behar at all and s. 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code had, therefore, no application to the case. Munshi Lal v. Emperor (1) and Emperor v. Govind Ram (2), followed. [p. 140, col. 1.]

Since the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 188 overrides s. 179 in any case in which s. 188 is applicable. [p. 139, col. 2.]

The trial Magistrate dealing with cases of opium smuggling should impose heavy penalties in cases where traffic is clearly brought home to the accused. [p. 140, col. 1.]

Mr. Kundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

Mr. Manindra Lal Banerji, for the Accused.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, the accused Ludur Chandra Das was convicted by the trial Magistrate of an offence under cl. (c) and also cl. (e) of s. 9 of the Opium Act (I of 1878). On appeal, the learned Additional Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts has set aside both those convictions. The Government has brought this appeal against that order of acquittal made by the learned Judge.

The facts of the present case as proved by evidence are particularly short and conclusive. The accused is an Assamese living in Assam. The part of Assam to which he belongs is a place called Bokakhat. In May 1930, he sent some telegrams to a relation of his named Khagendra Nath Saikia who also lives in Bokakhat. These were sent from Cooch Behar; but the original writing of the telegrams has been produced and proved. The telegrams asked Khagendra not only to send him money but intimated that certain things were being sent by the accused from Cooch Behar to Khagendra in Bokakhat. One telegram ran "silver parcel is sent am penniless wire 150". On the 29th of May or soon after, there arrived by post in the Bokakhat Post Office a parcel addressed to Khagendra. The Sub-Post Master was suspicious and he made arrangements to request Khagendra to take open delivery in the presence of two witnesses of this parcel. Khagendra refused whereupon the parcel was duly opened and it was found to contain opium.

There can be no doubt that the defence which was to the effect that the accused had sent the parcel from Cooch Behar but that the parcel contained silver bangles and that opium had been substituted at a later stage broke down entirely. It was disbelieved and it need not trouble us. Khagendra who gave evidence for the prosecution said that the accused told him that he was going to Tezpur and that he would send letters and parcels meant for his (accused's) own home to the address of Khagendra who was to hand them over to his (accused's) family. A letter (Ex. 5) was seized, as a matter of fact, from Khagendra's house and whether or not Khagendra is just as bad as this accused person, it is at any rate certain that the accused went to Cooch Behar having arranged with Khagendra to receive opium on his behalf and despatched the opium to Khagendra in order that it might get into the accused's own control. In these circumstances and on these facts, the question is whether the accused has committed an offence under the Opium Act (I of 1878) and, if he has committed offence, has he committed the offence in Cooch Behar or in Assam?

For the present purpose, it will be as well to assume that we know nothing about the law prevailing in Cooch Behar and we may even assume—though I daresay it is not in the least true—that peoples who send opium from Cooch Behar to other States commit no offence against that State whatever. Clarifying our ideas in this way we come to ask whether the accused has committed any offence under the Opium Act and we find this: By s. 9 of the Act, any person who in contravention of the Act possesses opium or imports or exports opium is liable to be convicted of an offence. If we ask what is meant by "any person who imports opium", there is a definition. Import means "to bring into the territories administered by any Local Government from sea or from foreign territory or from a territory administered by any other Local Government" and, in like manner, Export means "to take out of the territories administered by any Local Government to sea or to any foreign territory or to any territory administered by another Local Government". It is clear enough, therefore, that the offence of importing opium is an offence constituted by bringing it into the territory in question. It does not matter where it was before provided it was outside the province. The offence is in bringing it in and the word "bring" may be specially noticed as part of the definition. If the goods once come across the border of Assam into Assam, if they come for and on account of the accused with his consent—let alone by his procurement—the offence of importing into Assam is complete; it is not necessary to show that the accused did anything outside Assam. In this particular case, the accused went outside of Assam into Cooch Behar and posted the parcel in effect to Bokakhat for himself which was exactly the same as if he had posted it to his own address and in his own name: but the offence of importing into Assam would be equally complete had the goods been despatched pursuant to the accused's order by some body in New York and it would be equally complete if when the goods crossed the border the accused had been taking a voyage on the high seas for the benefit of his health. The coming of the goods for the accused, on his account and with his consent is bringing them into Assam and is an offence of importing the goods. That this is the right view to take appears from cases which have been decided in other Courts. The first decision is that of Munshi Lal v. Emperor (1). Mr. Justice Walsh said this: "I say nothing to discourage the view that a person who exports from outside the United Provinces to a ware house inside the United Provinces of which he is really the proprietor or temporary possessor, even under a false name, is, in fact, committing an offence under the Act of importing into the United Provinces, although he is also the person who exported from outside. It is perfectly possible for me to send an article for myself from the High Court at Allahabad to my Chambers in London, and, if I did so with a dutiable article without declaration, I should be guilty of importing into England"; and a Bench of the same High Court confirmed this view in the subsequent case of Emperor v. Govind Ram (2) the learned Judges pointing out that the person who imported must be a person who was intending or had the right to take delivery or desired to take delivery inside the area. I am quite satisfied on the evidence in the present case that the substance of the matter is that those goods were sent by the accused from Cooch Behar to himself in Assam on his own account and the fact that they were to be taken delivery of by Khagendra under an arrangement with him has no importance at all. The position under the Opium Act is exactly the same as if he had kept a ware-house in Assam and he had sent the goods to that spot.

In these circumstances, I come to consider the view taken by the Courts below. The trial Magistrate found that the accused was guilty both of possession of this opium and also of importing it and he imposed a fine of Rs. 250 on each of the charges. As regards possession, I cannot say that it appears to me that that offence is at all made out having regard to the fact that the article was not, in fact, taken possession of—Khagendra having refused altogether to take possession of it after he became suspicious. The Magistrate, however, found that the accused caused it to be imported from a foreign territory and he convicted him of that offence. When the case came before the learned Additional Sessions Judge, the learned Judge was not satisfied that there was any proof of possession and, so far as that ruling is concerned, I am disposed to agree with him on the facts of this particular case. But his view on the other question was this that what was shown was an offence of exporting opium from Cooch Behar and he thought that while Khagendra might be placed on his trial for importing opium into Assam the accused had not imported opium into Assam but had only exported it from Cooch Behar. Accordingly the learned Judge took the view that as the offence alleged against the accused was an offence committed in Cooch Behar and as there was no certificate from the Political Agent of Cooch Behar prosecution on that account did not lie. The Magistrate had thought and said that the case was one under s. 179 and not under s. 188 Criminal Procedure Code. Of course, if it was under s. 188, it would be no answer to say that the case was under s. 179, because Mr. Banerji has shown that since the Code was amended s. 188 over-rides s. 179 in any case in which s. 188 is applicable; that is to say, where the question is as to a Native Indian subject committing an offence without and beyond the limits of British India or a British subject committing an offence in the territories of a Native Prince and so forth. It appears to me however that the learned Judge was wrong. The offence of which the Magistrate rightly convicted the accused was of importing the goods into Assam and that offence it appears to me is amply proved. That is not an offence committed in Cooch Behar at all from the nature of the offence. The offence is entirely committed within Assam, and s. 188 Criminal Procedure Code has no application to the case. In my judgment, therefore, the Government appeal must be allowed, the acquittal must be set aside and the accused must be convicted of the offence of importing this opium into Assam. It is very unfortunate that, although this accused has been found to be trafficking in opium notwithstanding the great trouble the Legislature in Assam has taken to stop the evils of opium smuggling, this accused person who had engaged himself in committing such an offence in order to get rich is punished only by a fine of Rs. 250. Trial Magistrates dealing with these cases should have sufficient business sagacity to impose heavy penalties in cases where traffic is clearly brought home to the accused, because obviously a man trafficking in opium can well afford to pay a fine of Rs. 250 and still make a handsome profit. However, in the present case, the question of sentence is not one which at the moment we have any jurisdiction over. It will be sufficient to restore the judgment of the Magistrate and to direct that on this count the penalty imposed by him shall stand, namely, a penalty of Rs. 250 fine, in default, to undergo six months' rigorous imprisonment.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250 (3) —Order directing compensation—Appeal—Power of Appellate Court to go into facts.

There is nothing that debars the Court in an appeal from an order under s. 250, Criminal Procedure Code, directing a complainant to pay compensation, from going into all the facts of the case in order to determine whether the case is false and vexatious, even though in doing so it may have to come to a finding showing that the acquittal of the accused was wrong. [p. 140, col. 2.]

Criminal Revision against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Brahmanberia, dated the 31st July 1930.

Mr. Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Birendra Kumar Dey, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The petitioner who obtained this rule brought a certain case against the opposite party and the Magistrate who heard the case acquitted the opposite party and ordered the petitioner to pay Rs. 100 to the opposite party under s. 250, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that the case was false and vexatious. The learned District Judge in disposing of this appeal held that it was not open to him to go into the facts of the case and it was not open to the petitioner to go into the facts of the case to show that the case was not false and vexatious. He first of all apparently heard both the parties with a view to decide what he described as the scope of the appeal and his conclusion was as follows:

"It, therefore, appears to me that I am not competent to consider whether the accusation was false or whether it was vexatious. But I am competent to consider only whether the order for compensation is proper in the circumstances of the case, that is to say, taking the Magistrate's view of the evidence as it stands and whether the amount of compensation is suitable."

He therefore seems to think that he cannot upset the Magistrate's findings of fact. What, I think, seems to have weighed with the learned Judge is that he cannot set aside the order of acquittal and he seems to think that, as he might have to upset the same finding of fact on which the acquittal was based, he was not allowed to question these findings of fact. The view which the learned Judge has taken is not correct. Section 250 (3) provides that:

"a complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-s. (2) by a Magistrate of the Second or Third Class to pay compensation or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty Rupees may appeal from the order in so far as the order relates to the payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial by such Magistrate" and clearly the section under which the appeal is heard is s. 423 (1) (c) which deals with an appeal from "any other order." There is nothing, as far as I can see, that debars the Judge in appeal from going into all the facts of the case in order that he may determine whether the case is false and vexatious. It may be that in doing so he may come to certain findings of fact which show that the acquittal was wrong. That however is quite immaterial.

Right or wrong, he cannot set aside the acquittal, but he can set aside the order for compensation if it is based on wrong findings of fact.

The rule is therefore made absolute. The order of the learned Judge is set aside and the appeal must be sent down to him for re-hearing in the light of the observations I have just made. It would be open to him in rehearing this appeal to go into all the facts of the case and after going into those facts determine whether the case was false and vexatious and whether the order for compensation was right and whether the amount of compensation was suitable.

An adjudication order does not operate to vest the insolvent's immoveable property situated in a Foreign State in the Official Assignee or when there has been a composition scheme approved of by the Court, in the trustees of the composition under the order approving the scheme. Mogi & Co. In re (10), relied on. [p 142, col. 2.]

But, the language of s. 90 (1), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, is wide enough to confer on the Court the power of granting an injunction restraining proceedings in a Foreign Court by creditors of an insolvent who is so adjudicated in a British Court and the more so when the parties sought to be restrained carry on business within the Court's jurisdiction even if they do not reside there and have assets within its jurisdiction which can be attached in the case of any breach of the injunction. There is also nothing in principle which prevents the Court from restraining such proceedings. Lachmriam Kevalram v. Poonam Chand Pitamber (11), distinguished [p. 142, cols. 1 & 2.]

The jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court is not exhausted owing to the annulment of the adjudication. The Court has jurisdiction to give effect to the scheme it has approved. [p. 142, col. 2.]

Mr. S. C. Bose, for the Insolvent.

Mr. Pugh, for the Respondent

Judgment.—This is an application by the firm of Sumermull Surana lately carrying on business at No. 113, Monohardas Katra, Calcutta, that the firm of Bansilal Abir Chand and Mannalal Dhanraj be restrained by injunction from proceeding with suits instituted by them in Bikanir. Messrs. Mannalal Dhanraj have not appeared and as against them the applicants are entitled to the injunction claimed with costs.

The relevant facts concerning the suit instituted by Bansilal Abirchand are as follows:

According to the applicants the proprietors of the petitioning firm are two in number: Sumermull Surana and Uday Chand Rampuria. The firm were adjudicated insolvent on 18th July, 1930. On 15th August, 1930, the insolvents submitted a scheme of composition to their creditors which provided for payment of six annas in the rupee to the unsecured creditors and also that on the composition being approved by the Court all the estate of the insolvents should vest in the trustee named in the scheme.

The insolvents had shown Bansilal Abir Chand as unsecured creditors in their schedule, their debts being admittedly in respect of commercial transactions in Calcutta. The insolvents say that Bansilal Abirchand had full notice of the meeting held by the Official Assignee on 1st September, 1930, at which the scheme was approved by the requisite majority of the creditors. Bansilal Abir Chand deny that they received notice. They were it is true not represented at the meeting but they have taken no steps to set aside the composition. On 10th September, 1930, the Official Assignee applied under s. 29, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act 1909, and the scheme of composition was approved by the Court; and the adjudication was annulled. Bansilal Abirchand's suit in Bikanir was instituted on 17th July, 1930, i.e., on the day immediately preceding the date of the adjudication order. It is for Rs. 10,497-15 0, which sum admittedly represents business debts contracted by the defendants in Calcutta. The suit is not against the firm of Sumermull Surana as such but against Sumermull Udaychand, Sewchand, Meghraj and Mohunlal. The plaintiffs who are domiciled in Bikanir State and subjects of H. H. the Maharaja of Bikanir say that all the defendants have proprietary interests in the firm which is a joint family business. Written statements have been filed in that suit. It is admitted that the defendants have immoveable property in Bikanir against which the plaintiffs propose to execute their decree, if they obtain one.

Mr. Pugh in opposing the application, argues that the Court has no jurisdiction to make the order. He refers to the Carron Iron Co., v. Maclaren (1), where when an administration decree had been made in England the House of Lords set aside an injunction restraining a creditor's action for debt brought against the executors of the estate in the Scotch Courts. He also relies on Pennell v. Roy (2) and Chapman, In re (3). In the former case the Court refused to restrain a creditor from proceeding against the real estate in Scotland of an English bankrupt for a sum of money equal to the dividend payable on the debt. In the latter case the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, after a Receiver had been appointed, refused to restrain creditors in New York who had instituted suits there against the debtor. It appears that in refusing the injunction the Court attached considerable weight to the fact that it would be ineffectual.

Mr. Pugh also maintains that what is sought here is a perpetual injunction and by reason of s. 53, Specific Relief Act, such injunctions can only be granted in suits and not in insolvency proceedings, and he says that the concluding observations of Sir Arthur Wilson delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Tituram Mukerji v. Cohen (4) at page 192* support this argument. On the question of jurisdiction Mr. Bose has referred to a large number of cases. He argues that since the creditors could certainly be made defendants here even though their business may be carried on through a gomastha, and could be adjudicated here. In Hurruck Chand Golicha, In re (5) and Kostur Chand v. Dhanpat Singh (6) there is nothing to prevent them from being restrained by injunction in the manner his clients ask. I confess I do not think that cases like La Compagnie Generale Trans-Atlantique v. Thomas-Law & Co. (7) and New York Life Insurance Company v. Public Trustee (8) which deal with the residence of a foreign corporation are of much assistance. Having looked into the authorities I have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in principle which prevents the Court from restraining proceed.

ings in a foreign Court where, as here, the parties sought to be restrained to carry on business within the jurisdiction even if they do not reside here, and have assets within the jurisdiction which can be attached in the case of any breach of the injunction. Moreover I am disposed to think that the language of s. 90 (1), Insolvency Act, is wide enough to confer on the Court the power of granting an injunction of the character here asked for.

In a Bombay decision to which I shall shortly refer, although the injunction was refused, it was not suggested that there was any technical difficulty in granting it.

Chiday, In re (9), appears to me a sufficient answer to the suggestion that owing to the annulment of the adjudication the jurisdiction of the insolvency Court is exhausted that that Court retains jurisdiction to give effect to the scheme it has approved, is, I consider, too plain to require argument.

The difficulties of the applicant are in my judgment with regard to the merits. It was pointed out by Rankin, J., in Mogi & Co., In re (10) at page 447 * that adjudication order does not operate to vest the insolvent's immovable property situated in a Foreign State in the Official Assignee.

The petitioners admittedly own immovable property in Bikanir which will be answerable for any decree which is obtained against them there. This property never vested in the Official Assignee and it equally in my opinion has not vested in the trustees of the composition under the order approving the scheme. Mr. Bose says that if a conveyance is necessary to complete the title of the trustees he undertakes to execute one. I do not think that would mend matters, and even if it would I should not be justified in adjourning the application to give an opportunity for taking this step.

The creditors have taken no part in the Calcutta insolvency, much less have they approved the composition scheme, why should they be prevented from seeking the aid of the Courts of their own State for recovering their dues from property that has never been the subject-matter of the insolvency proceeding? It has not been shown that these creditors occupy a privileged position, or that other creditors whether subjects of Bikanir State or not did not have the opportunity of seeking the aid of the Bikanir Courts prior to the insolvency had they wished to do so.

The Bombay case to which I have referred, Lachmiram Kevalram v. Poonam Chand Pitamber (11) where an injunction was refused is distinguished by the fact that the creditor suing in the Foreign Court undertook to give notice to the other creditors of any property he succeeded in recovering so as to enable them to claim rateable distribution. The creditors in this case are not disposed to be so accommodating, but on the other hand, the point as to the vesting of the foreign immovables was not taken. If the creditors obtain a decree they may have difficulty in executing it at all in British India and possibly also against moveables elsewhere. But that stage has not arrived and I have come to the conclusion that the applicants have not been successful in establishing such circumstances as would now justify me in restraining the creditors from proceeding with the Bikanir suit.

The application, therefore, is dismissed with costs as against Bansilal Abirchand. The costs will be as of one day's hearing.

Application dismissed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 55—Fraudulent transfer—Avoidance—Exclusive jurisdiction of Insolvency Court—Referring parties to Civil Court, illegality of.

Under the Provincial Insolvency Act, the insolvency Court is the only Court which has jurisdiction to go into the questions raised under s. 53 of the Act and decide the same and the parties should not be referred to the civil Court for determination of such questions. [p. 144, col. 1.]

Where a Receiver reports to the effect that a transfer is fraudulent and prays that the transfer might be annulled under s. 53, the Court should treat the report as an application under s. 53 and go into the matter for itself after taking evidence. [p. 144, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Hooghly, dated the 14th June, 1922.

Messrs. Sharatchandra Ray Chaudhuri, Bijankumar Mukerji, Apoorabadhan Mukherji and Bhutnath Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Panchanan Ghose and Hiralal Ganguli, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal raises a question under s. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. The matter has arisen under the following circumstances. One Lehajuddin Jamadar was adjudicated an insolvent under the Provincial Insolvency Act on 5th July, 1927. Subsequently by an order made by the insolvency Court a Receiver was appointed to take charge of the properties belonging to the insolvent. The Receiver was asked to investigate whether the insolvent had got any immovable properties. The attention of the Receiver was drawn to the fact that the insolvent had conveyed certain immovable properties to one Osmanali Mandal on 26th May 1926, that is, on a date which was within two years of the date of adjudication of the insolvent as such. The Receiver made an investigation and submitted a report to the insolvency Court. His report was to the effect that the transfer in favour of Osmanali Mandal was not in good faith nor for valuable consideration. He accordingly prayed to the insolvency Court that the said transfer might be annulled under the provisions of s. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. It appears that the Receiver had taken the statements of various people who appeared before him. The matter having come before the Insolvency Court under these circumstances, the question arose whether that Court could take action under s. 53, go into the matter for itself and come to a determination on the point as to whether or not the transfer in favour of Osmanali Mandal was in good faith and for valuable consideration. On that point it was obvious that the insolvency Court had to take evidence; but it did not take evidence, but was content with the report of the Receiver and the statements of the parties who had appeared before the Receiver. No evidence in the legal sense of the terms was taken by the insolvency Court. The Court came to the conclusion that an order under s. 53 of the Act being of a summary character it was not desirable in the circumstances to make such an order. But he referred the Receiver to the Civil Court for determination by means of a suit of the question or questions raised in his report. It is against this order of the insolvency

Court which is dated 14, June 1929, that the present appeal has been directed.

Our attention has been drawn to the circumstances under which the order in question came to be made and s. 53 Provincial Insolvency Act, has been contrasted with s. 55, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. It is clear from the records before us that if the question had to be determined by the insolvency Court under the Provincial Insolvency Act, such investigation has not been done. On the other hand, it is equally clear that if according to the language of s. 53 Provincial Insolvency Act, it is open to the insolvency Court to decline jurisdiction and to refer the parties to a Civil Court for determination of the matter in issue, then what has been done by the insolvency Court is one which it was competent to do and to which no exception can be taken. The question therefore, is whether the Insolvency Court under the Provincial Insolvency Act, is the only Court which can determine the question raised in the section or whether any other Court has jurisdiction to go into the matter.

Mr. Panchanan Ghose, who has appeared for the transferee, contends that according to the decisions in England based on a section which is more or less identical with s. 56, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the insolvency Court is not the only forum which has seisin of matters such as are referred to in s. 55, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. That is no doubt true as far as the decisions go at the present moment; but there is a significant change in the terms of s. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act and it has been held in several cases decided in India that under the Provincial Insolvency Act the insolvency Court is the only Court which has jurisdiction in the matter to go into the questions raised under s. 53 Provincial Insolvency Act, and decide the same and that the parties should not be referred to the civil Court for determination of such questions; see in this connexion the cases collected in Sir Dinshah Mulla's book on Insolvency at pages 48, 49, 429, and 430. Therefore, the view which has found favour in India, is that the insolvency Court under the terms of the Provincial Insolvency Act is the only appropriate tribunal which can determine the question raised under s. 53 of the Act and we are in agreement with this view.

In that view of the matter, the question arises whether such determination has taken place in this case. The learned Additional District Judge has not come to any decision. He has referred no doubt to various circumstances giving perhaps an idea of the inclination of his mind but he has not as stated above come to any decision he having been content with expressing an opinion that it was a summary order which was prayed for and that he was not willing to make such a summary order. That obviously having regard to what has been stated above is wrong and, therefore, the conclusion we have come to is that the report of the Receiver in insolvency should be treated as an application for action under s. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act and that the matter has got to be investigated in evidence to be produced in Court. If the evidence does not satisfy the Court that the transaction in question can be successfully impeached, having regard to the language of s. 53, then obviously the transferee must be held to have acquired a valid title to the properties conveyed by the deed of transfer. If on the other hand, the evidence does not satisfy the Court that the transfer cannot be questioned, then it will be for the Court to determine whether such transfer, in the circumstances of this case should be annulled by the Court. We desire to express no opinion. We have only indicated what should be done.

Therefore, the conclusion is that the matter should be remitted to the Court of the Additional District Judge at Howrah sitting in insolvency and the matter must be investigated afresh on evidence to be produced in Court.

Mr. Ghose points out that certain transactions took place, which were beyond the limit of two years from the date of adjudication. These and various other circumstances will no doubt be brought to the notice of the learned Judge. But having regard to the terms of the order, we prefer not to go into the merits ourselves, but will leave the matter to be tried out afresh on lines indicated above by the learned Additional District Judge of Howrah sitting in insolvency.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), ss. 99, 121—Cause of action before Act III of 1926—Suit after Act—S. 99, whether applies—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective effect—General principles—Law affecting right to sue, limitation etc., whether adjective law.

Held, by the Full Bench Sulaiman, Actg. C. J. and Bajpai, J. dubitante).—Section 99 of the Agra Tenancy Act of 1926 does not apply to a suit in respect of which the cause of action, i. e., the wrongful ejectment or the wrongful resistance to possession arose before the said Act came into force, and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain such a suit is not barred under s. 230 of the said Act. [p. 155, col. 2.]

Per Sulaiman, Actg. C. J.—If a new enactment lays down that a person may under certain conditions sue for certain specified reliefs, and he sues after the Act has come into force it would not, strictly speaking, be giving to the Act a retrospective effect if he avails himself of its provisions. The Act is in force when he is suing, even though his cause of action might have accrued before the Act was passed. It would be giving a retrospective effect if the Court applied that Act to a suit previously instituted. [p. 147, col. 2.]

A substantial right is not assumed to be taken away by a new Act unless it expressly says so. But a right to sue in one Court rather than another or a right to wait for a particular period of time before suing is not a substantive right as they are ordinarily matters of procedure only. [p. 148, col. 1.]

There is nothing in s. 99 which either curtails the period of limitation or fixes the forum. [ibid.]

Where a suit is "of the nature of a suit under s. 99, even though it may not strictly come under that section, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred. [p. 148, col. 2.]

When a question of limitation is raised it ought to be decided in accordance with the Law of Limitation in force at the time of the institution of the suit and not that in force at the time of the cause of action, unless there be any express provision to the contrary in the Act itself. [p. 149, col. 1.]

The fear of a curtailment of the period of limitation or of the taking away of any vested right does not apply to a declaratory suit under s. 121, as no period of limitation is fixed for such a suit. Such a suit is clearly cognizable by the Revenue Court only, even though the denial of title takes place before the Act came into force. [p. 149, col. 2.]

Per Mukerji, J.—Where a suit is against a landholder or a person who pretends to be a landholder having a right to eject the plaintiff, or where the suit is against a person holding a derivative title from such landholder or person claiming as above, the suit should be governed by s. 99. "Claiming through" cannot mean raising a plea by way of defence or making a false claim without the shadow of title. [p. 151, col. 1.]

Second Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 15th November, 1924.

On 23rd June, 1931, Mr. Justice Boys and Mr. Justice Smith made the following Order of Reference To a Full Bench.

This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration, as it is worded, "that the plaintiffs are the owners in possession of 4 bighas and 12 biswas in the holding in dispute specified below, and according to this proportion they (the plaintiffs) are entitled to realise the rent from the subtenants, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have nothing to do therewith." The defendants Nos. 3 to 8 are the alleged subtenants. The holding in dispute was a fixed-rate tenancy comprising 8 bighas 17 biswas and 15 dhurs of which the plaintiffs claimed 4 bighas and 12 biswas.

At a later date a further relief was added that 'an injunction may be issued to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, restraining them from offering obstruction in the plaintiffs' realising the rent from the subtenants.' The plaint is, as usual, not very happily drafted to express what the plaintiffs obviously meant. In para. 4 of the plaint they stated that "Suit No. 194 of 1912 of the Court of the Munsif of Jaunpur has been fought between the parties in which it has been decided that the plaintiffs are the owners in possession of 4 bighas and 12 biswas, this decision is final between the parties and it is binding upon them." Paragraph 5 stated, "A case has also been fought between the parties in the Revenue Court which ordered that these plaintiffs were the owners of the property in dispute."

Now the history of the case, which we shall have to set out in some detail, suggests that what the plaintiffs really meant by these pleadings was that they were the owners of three-fourths (thus roughly described in the judgments) of a fixed-rate tenancy, while the defendants were the owners of the remaining one-fourth, that the plaintiffs and the defendants were not joint tenants of the whole fixed rate tenancy, but owned entirely separately from each other their own shares, and that, therefore, the defendants in interfering with the plaintiffs' collection of their own shares of the rents due by the subtenants were acting as trespassers.

The defendants pleaded that the rights of the plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-title to a fixed-rate tenancy in three-quarters had ceased as long ago as June 25th, 1912, as a result of the ejectment suit brought by the father of the present defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in his capacity as zemindar against the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs.

It will be best now to state the history of the litigation about this property. One Badal Lonia owned a fixed-rate tenancy. He mortgaged three-fourths of this to Bishunath, predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiffs. He subsequently sold the remaining one-fourth to the father of the present defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The description of the shares in the judgments as three-fourths and one-fourth appears to be a convenient method of briefly describing the shares.

On the 22nd of February, 1912, Bishunath brought a suit on his mortgage, making Badal Lonia and the father of the present defendants Nos. 1 and 2 parties, and on the 9th May, 1912, he obtained an ex parte decree.

On the 25th of June, 1912, the father of the present defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in his capacity as zemindar ejected Badal Lonia from the three-fourths of the fixed-rate tenancy, which had been mortgaged to Bishunath, for failure to pay rent. To this suit Bishunath was not made a party, nor is there anything to show that he knew anything about it.

About three years later, on the 14th of October 1915, Bishunath got the three-fourths of the fixed-rate tenancy sold and himself purchased it. Subsequently he applied to the Revenue Court and got mutation on March 8th, 1917, the Assistant Collector's order being upheld by the Collector. The Assistant Collector relied on the Civil Court proceedings in the mortgage suit and told the father of the present defendants that he should go to the proper Court and get a declaration if he felt that he was entitled to it. The Collector in his judgment upholding the order of the Assistant Collector said that he refused to be influenced by any games that the defendants' father might have been up to with the mortgagor in the matter of the ejectment. In the years 1920, 1921 and 1922 some suits were brought by the plaintiffs or Bishunath, their predecessor-in-title, for rent against the sub-tenants. The latter pleaded that they had paid the rent in good faith to the present defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and it being found that the plaintiffs and their predecessors-in-title had not ever collected any rents, there was no ground for holding that the payments of the sub-tenants which were actually made were made otherwise than "bona fide" by them and the suits were dismissed. That completes the history of the proceedings prior to the present suit which was instituted on September 2nd, 1927. The plaintiffs say that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 denied the rights of the plaintiffs in June, 1925, and date their cause of action from that denial, and also from the 4th of April, 1923, when the last of the rent suits was decided against them in appeal. The trial Court dismissed the suit with costs. The lower Appellate Court gave the plaintiffs the declaration asked for and is silent as to the injunction. The defendants now appeal.

Two main questions arise. First, whether Act III of 1926, s. 99, applies to ejectments or obstruction to possession occurring before September 7, 1926. Secondly, what is the exact form of the issue which a Court has to determine when considering the question of its jurisdiction in the light of s. 99 of Act III of 1926. In reference to the first question, whether Act III of 1926, s. 99, is applicable at all to an ejectment or obstruction to possession occurring before September 7, 1926, it has been held by two Judges of this Court in Abdul Hakim v. Mukarram Ali (1)

"that s. 99 can apply only to a dispossession which took place after September 7, 1926."

It is true that the learned Judges were in that case dealing with dispossession from a grove, but the language used is general. In view of the fact that s. 99 only deals with procedure, and does not affect any vested rights it is at least open to question whether s. 99 is not applicable to some cases, at any rate, of ejectment or obstruction to possession of date prior to the commencement of the Act.

The second question is concerned with the interpretation of s. 99 of Act III of 1926 and, more particularly, with the interpretation of the decision of the majority of the Judges in Ananti v. Chhanno (2), i. e. after the judgment of the lower Appellate Court now under appeal. We think that the effect of the judgment of the majority in this Full Bench may be stated as follows:—

(1) 124 Ind. Cas. 478; (1929) A. L. J. 1157; A. I. R. 1930 All. 158; 14 R. D. 106; Ind. Rul. (1930) All. 526.

(2) 124 Ind. Cas. 540; 52 A. 501; (1930) A. L. J. 256; A. I. R. 1930 All. 193; 14 R. D. 201; Ind. Rul. (1930) All. 540 (F. B.).

1. Whether the suit is cognizable by the Court must be determined, in the first place, by the allegations made in the plaint. 2. If upon the allegations in the plaint the suit does not appear to be cognizable by the Court, the plaint will be returned for presentation to the proper Court. 3. If, on the allegations in the plaint, the Court is of opinion that the suit is cognizable by the Court, mere allegations, whatever they may be, in the written statement will not oust the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit. 4. It will proceed to try the issue as to its jurisdiction, and if it finds the facts alleged by the plaintiff to be true, it will proceed to trial of the other issues. 5. If it proceeds to try the suit and finds that the facts alleged by the defendants are true, with the result that it has no jurisdiction, it will dismiss the suit; unless even at that late stage the plaintiff is allowed to amend his plaint so as to make it entertainable in a Revenue Court, in which case the plaint can be returned for presentation to the Revenue Court."

The only difficulty that arises is in reference to the use of the learned Judges of the phrase at page 508*.

"If it found . . . that the facts alleged by the defendant are true."

and the repetition of practically the same phrase at page 513*

"The allegations made in the written statement . . . found to be true."

Taken literally, it would be found that the allegations in the written statement are e. g., the defendant is a land-holder, the defendant has collected rents, and such like statements of fact. We do not think, however, that, the words we have quoted must be taken to mean that the Court in trying the issue of jurisdiction must literally determine the truth or otherwise of such allegations. The issue that it has to frame in order to determine questions of jurisdiction is not whether the defendant is a land-holder, tenant etc., but whether the defendant is "claiming as a land-holder, tenant etc.," in the words of s. 99. But we have it on the authority of the same Full Bench decision that the word "claiming" cannot be held to mean merely pleading a claim. The issue, therefore, which the Court has to determine is in effect whether the defendant is claiming as a land holder, tenant etc., and whether there is a reasonable substance in that claim. We think corroboration of our view that this was what was intended by the learned Judges is to be found in the passage at the bottom of page 512* where they say,

"It has been said that the object of the Legislature was to attract to the Revenue Courts all suits in which any question of tenancy rights is involved. We may accept this but we may also insist that the question must be a real one and not merely a litigious allegation. If there is a real question, the plaintiff will be aware of it; and he will either set it out in his plaint and have it tried by the Revenue Court, or he will conceal it and find that his suit is dismissed by the Civil Court."

Had it been clear that s. 99 of Act III of 1926 was applicable to the dispossession in question in the present suit, which was long prior to the 7th September, 1926, we should have proceeded to apply the judgment of the Full Bench and the view that we take of it to the present case. There is, however, the initial question as to whether s. 99 is applicable at all, and in view of the decision of the two Judges to which we have already referred, we think it desirable that the matter should be considered by a Full Bench. It has already arisen more than once to the knowledge of one of us, and calls for authoritative decision. Another point that might have arisen in this case is the applicability of s. 121 of Act III of 1926, but it does not appear to have been raised in either of the Courts below by either side or by either Court.

In view of what we have said, let the case be laid before the Hon'ble the Acting Chief Justice with a view to the constitution of a Full Bench.

Mr. K. Verma, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. M. Roy, for the Respondents.

OPINION.

Sulaiman, Actg. C. J.—The plaint, as it was filed and as it stands un-amended, was merely for a declaration of title on the allegation that the plaintiffs were in possession. After the arguments were over, the plaintiffs applied that if they were found to be out of possession, a decree for possession might be passed. The plaint may accordingly be treated as a plaint in a suit for declaration of title and, in the alternative, for possession. If the new Tenancy Act of 1926 were to apply, the suit would be under s. 121, and, in the alternative, under s. 99 of the Act.

If a new enactment lays down that a person may under certain conditions sue for certain specified reliefs, and he sues after the Act has come into force, it would not, strictly speaking, be giving to the Act a retrospective effect if he avails himself of its provisions. The Act is in force when he is suing, even though his cause of action might have accrued before the Act was passed. It would be a retrospective effect, if we applied the Act to a suit previously instituted. The present plaintiffs-tenants are being 'prevented from obtaining possession' of a part of their holding, and they have also possibly been 'ejected'. The Act does not say that the ejectment should have been before the Act came into force. It of course implies that they should have been ejected or prevented from obtaining possession, before the suit is filed. The expression 'otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act', to my mind, does not mean that even if they had been ejected in accordance with the provisions of the previous Tenancy Act, they have been conferred a right under s. 99. A statutory right conferred by a new Act may even be made a foundation of a defence to the plea of res judicata. If the plaintiffs were ejected unlawfully before the new Act, they are persons who have been ejected 'otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act'. Surely it cannot be said that in such a case they have been ejected in accordance with the provisions of this Act. If the plaintiffs fulfil the requirements of the section and bring themselves within its scope, there appears to be no reason why they cannot avail themselves of a new enabling section which has come into force before the suit is actually filed.

No doubt a substantial right is not assumed to be taken away by a new Act unless it expressly says so. But a right to sue in one Court rather than another or a right to wait for a particular period of time before suing is not a substantive right. The selection of forum and the period of limitation are ordinarily matters of procedure only. The selection of a Court in no way affects the right of suit itself. The Limitation Act does not necessarily extinguish the right, though it certainly places a bar against remedy by suit.

It seems to me that so far as the old s. 79 and the new s. 99 are concerned, they do not deal at all with the choice of Court or the period of limitation. Under the former section a right to sue was conferred and that right has been re-affirmed under the latter. Indeed, it has been to a certain extent enlarged, if not explained.

The period of limitation has been curtailed, if at all, as a result of s. 232 read with the Fourth Schedule. The forum is fixed by virtue of s. 230 read with that Schedule. There is nothing in s. 99 which either curtails the period of limitation or fixes the forum. This is patent from the fact that if s. 99 were omitted from the Fourth Schedule, the result as to forum and limitation would be different, even though the phraseology of s. 99 were to be left absolutely untouched.

The Legislature apparently intends that disputes relating to agricultural lands should be settled in the Revenue Court and settled promptly. It considers that six months provide an ample time for a tenant to sue. I would much rather consider it a deliberate provision than attribute to the Legislature a blunder due to ignorance that there may be hard cases unprovided for.

Section 230 confers exclusive jurisdiction on Revenue Courts and ousts the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts of suits 'of the nature' specified in the Fourth Schedule. The Legislature instead of saying 'all suits specified in the Fourth Schedule has stated' all suits of the nature specified etc. It would, therefore, seem to me that if the present suit is 'of the nature' of a suit under s. 99, even though it may not strictly come under that section, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred.

No doubt under the old Tenancy Act it was held that a suit between rival tenants was cognisable by the Civil Court. But one possible view would have been that even a rival tenant could obtain adequate relief from the Revenue Court by impleading the land-holder also, and, therefore, the old s. 167 applied to his case. There was certainly no bar to his impleading the rival tenant in a suit under the old s. 95. He might also have impleaded the land-holder in a suit under s. 79 by treating the possession of a person claiming through the land-holder as the constructive possession of the landholder. Similarly, it was held in a number of rulings that if a tenant was prevented from obtaining possession, he was not 'dispossessed.' Here again a different view was possible. Might it not be that the Legislature has merely disapproved of these rulings? On this view, the new Act in no way curtails the period of limitation or alters the forum.

Again, the only question before a Civil Court is one of jurisdiction. The further question, what period of limitation would apply if the suit were filed in a Revenue Court is not at all before us. Whatever, we may say would be a mere obiter dictum and would not be binding on the Revenue Courts. Revision and appeals arising out of suits under s. 99 would lie exclusively to Revenue Courts. In Sch. IV there is no starting point of limitation mentioned where a tenant is prevented from obtaining possession as distinct from dispossession. It may be that the Revenue Court may hold that the six months rule does not apply to such prevention. Or it may be that they may hold that the right to sue on such prevention has been conferred for the first time by the new Act which would give a fresh start for limitation. Or they may hold that such a suit is not barred by limitation at all, as there is no period of limitation fixed for it in the Schedule. Or they may say that in such a case the cause of action accrues year after year, and the rights of the parties must be determined irrespective of any question of limitation. It is unnecessary to speculate what the Revenue Courts may actually hold as it is quite outside our function to do so. All that I can say is that when a question of limitation is raised it ought to be decided in accordance with the Law of Limitation in force at the time of the institution of the suit and not that in force at the time of the cause of action, unless there be any express provision to the contrary in the Act itself.

I would not wish to express any opinion on the case of a rent-free grantee, who was not a tenant, and it is doubtful whether his interest was a 'holding' under the old Act.

I have accordingly grave doubts as to the inapplicability of s. 99. But I must admit that as a result mainly of some of the previous rulings of this Court, there might be great hardship in some cases and plaintiffs may be left without any remedy. As my learned brethren think that this section should not be made to apply where a cause of action on an ejectment had arisen before the Act was passed, I am not prepared to dissent, but solely because of the hardship mentioned above.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are admittedly two of the zemindars of the mauza. After they obtained the ejectment of Badal from the Revenue Court they consistently took up the position that the fixed-rate tenancy was extinguished, and never said that they continued to be co-tenants. I might have been inclined to the view held by the Board of Revenue that ejectment by a few out of several land-holders would bring the case under the old s. 79 also. The entire co-parcenary body cannot be treated as a corporation or as a single juristic unit. All the co-sharers are landholders. For a person to be landholder it was not necessary under s. 3 (5) of the old Tenancy Act that the whole rent should be payable to him. But the majority of my learned brethren think that the question does not arise because it is now found that the defendants are co-tenants and they, therefore must have ejected the plaintiffs in the capacity of co-tenants and not zemindars. As it is not disputed that s. 99 of the new Act would now cover the case of dispossession by some of the land-holders only, the question has lost its importance. I need not, therefore, consider the position under the old s. 79 at any length.

The fear of a curtailment of the period of limitation or of the taking away of any vested right does not apply to a declaratory suit under s. 121, as no period of limitation is fixed for such a suit. Such a suit is clearly cognisable by the Revenue Court only, even though the denial of title took place before the Act came into force.

It follows that if the plaintiff alleges that he is in possession and claims the declaration against the land-holder or persons claiming through him, but, in the alternative asks for possession in case it be found that he was out of possession, his plaint is liable to be returned for presentation to the Revenue Court. The Court, however, may require him to make up his mind whether he would admit his dispossession and ask for recovery of possession. If he does not admit dispossession, the Court cannot allow him to lead evidence to show that he is in possession but must return the plaint. If the plaintiff gives up his allegation of being in possession and amends his plaint so as to turn the suit into one for recovery of possession on a dispossession which took place before the Act, the Court should proceed to try the question of title.

With regard to the interpretation of the rule laid down by the majority of the Judges in the Full Bench case of Ananti v. Channo (2) the referring order accurately represents it. The word 'claiming' does not mean pleading in the written statement. If the suit cannot be thrown out on the allegations contained in the plaint, the Court must proceed to determine the question of fact whether the person sued against was a land-holder, or any person claiming as land-holder, or any person claiming through such land-holder or person. A mere false allegation that he was so claiming would not do. The expression 'claiming through such land-holder or person' is an adjectival clause qualifying the word 'person'. It must be found that the defendant was such a person. One cannot be a person claiming through such land-holder or person, unless he either derives title from him (e. g. a transferee), or holds under him (e. g. as a thekadar, lessee or tenant etc.) or is authorised by him and is acting on his behalf as agent or servant. If such a fact were established on investigation by the Court, then, unless the Court permits the plaintiff to amend his plaint, the suit would have to be dismissed because the allegation, on which the plaintiff came to Court, that the defendant was a mere trespasser would be found to be untrue.

Mukerji, J.—This is a reference to the Full Bench to determine whether the suit brought under the following circumstances is cognisable by the Civil Court in which it was instituted, or whether it should have been filed in the Revenue Court.

The plaintiffs, who are the respondents here, are the sons and legal representatives of one Bishunath Singh. One Badal Lonia was a tenant at fixed rate of a holding comprising 6 bighas and odd of land. The tenancy at fixed rate being transferable under the law, Badal Lonia made a simple mortgage of about three-fourths of this holding in favour of Bishunath on 28th October, 1903. Several years later, on 20th July, 1911, he sold the remaining area of his holding to Sumran Singh, the father of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the appellants before us. Bishunath Singh brought a suit on his mortgage, and made Sumran a party to the suit, along with the mortgagor, Badal. Bishunath obtained an ex parte decree for sale on 9th May, 1912. In due course the decree was executed, the property mortgaged was sold and was purchased by Bishunath Singh himself, who got delivery of possession on 14th October, 1915. In the meanwhile, Sumran, who was a co-sharer in the village took steps to have Badal ejected, and took delivery of possession as against Badal on 25th June, 1912. To these ejectment proceedings Bishunath was no party, and the lower Appellate Court has found that the ejectment proceedings were fraudulent and held behind the back of Bishunath Singh in order to injure him. Bishunath Singh's name was recorded in the revenue papers by an order dated 8th March, 1917, in spite of Sumran's objection to the contrary.

It appears that the fixed-rate tenancy is in the possession of certain sub-tenants, and they pay rent. Bishunath Singh sued the sub-tenants for recovery of rent, but the sub-tenants pleaded that they had paid their rent, in good faith, to Sumran Singh. The suits succeeded in the first Court, but were lost in the Court of Appeal, which gave its judgment on 4th April, 1923. Thereupon, the respondents brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to obtain a declaration that they were the owners of three-fourths of the holding, and to that extent were entitled to recover the rents from the sub-tenants. While the suit was still pending in the Court of first instance, the plaintiffs asked for possession. The plaintiffs' case was that the principal parties, that is to say, the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, were co-tenants and the defendants, as holders of a fractional share in the tenancy, had no right to usurp the entire rent payable by the sub-tenants.

The defence was that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were in possession as zemindars, having ejected Badal before Bishunath could put the tenancy to auction sale in pursuance of his mortgage-decree. They also pleaded that the suit was not cognisable by the Civil Court, and was barred by six months' rule of limitation, inasmuch as s. 79 of the Tenancy Act of 1901 applied to the case.

The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff-tenants' rights had come to an end. In appeal by the plaintiffs, the sub-tenants were exempted, on the ground that the main contest lay between the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The Appellate Court found that the ejectment proceedings were bad and collusive, that the defendants' father could not have ejected the mortgagor-tenant, because the former himself was liable to pay the rent, being a fractional owner of the tenancy, that the land being actually in the possession of sub-tenants, there could have been no dispossession of the plaintiffs and that, in any case, the dispossession of the plaintiffs was not by a zemindar, but by a co-tenant. The learned Subordinate Judge also found that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not the sole zemindars of the holding in question, but were one of 35 or 36 co-sharers owning the holding. On the question of jurisdiction both the Courts below held that the suit was cognisable by the Civil Court.

In appeal the question is whether the suit was cognisable by the Civil Court. The argument of the appellants is that the suit is between co-tenants, and, therefore, falls within the purview of s. 99 of the Tenancy Act of 1926, and that being the case, s. 230 of the Tenancy Act of 1926 barred the jurisdiction of the Civil Court.

There can be no doubt that a suit between rival tenants falls within the purview of

s. 99, inasmuch as it is a suit by a tenant against a person claiming through the land-holder. It was held by a Full Bench of three Judges in the case of Sahdeo v. Budhai (3) that a suit between co-tenants falls within the purview of s. 99 of the Tenancy Act of 1926. The words "claiming through" in cl. (b) of s. 99 mean holding a derivated title from the land-holder. The idea is that where a suit is against a land-holder or a person who pretends to be a land-holder, having a right to eject the plaintiff, or where the suit is against a person holding a derivative title from such land-holder or person claiming as above, the suit should be governed by s. 99 of the Tenancy Act of 1926. "Claiming through" cannot mean raising a plea by way of defence of making a false claim without the shadow of title. Here in this case, the defendants are purchasers of a quarter share of the fixed rate tenancy, and, therefore, they are persons who "claim through" the land-holder. The suit is, on the face of it, governed by s. 99.

The question, however, is whether s. 99 has a retrospective effect, and applies to a case where the cause of action arose before the Act came into force. In the case before us the Court below has granted a decree for possession, and, therefore, we must take it that the prayer for amendment of the plaint for granting possession was allowed by the lower Appellate Court. The dispossession in this case must be taken to have taken place in 1923, when the Appellate Court decided against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' cause of action, for the suit for claiming possession arose in 1923, namely, more than three years prior to the coming into force of the Act of 1926. As stated above, the question is, does this Act apply? If it does, the suit was wrongly brought in the Civil Court, and it will be our duty to return the plaint to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court.

There are solid reasons against holding that s. 99 has a retrospective effect.

Section 99 is not a rule of procedure or adjective law. It professes to lay down remedies for a wrong. The law of remedies is substantive law, and, therefore, ordinarily the law will have no retrospective effect. This is a well-known proposition of law for which no authority need be quoted. It is, no doubt, open to the Legislature to enact a substantive rule of law and yet to give it a retrospective effect. But the presumption as regards interpretation is that, unless and until the Legislature gives the clearest indication that a rule of substantive law will have a retrospective effect, the Court will not give the rule that effect.

(3) 117 Ind. Cas. 337; 51 A. 853; A.I. R. 1929 All. 751; (1929) A. L. J. 849; 13 R. D. 556.

In Craies' Statute Law (3rd Edition by Pease and Gorman) there appears the following opinion at page 326 :

"If the enactment is expressed in language which is clearly capable of either interpretation, it ought to be construed as prospective only."

Again the book quotes Lord O'Hagan as having pronounced the following :

"Unless there is some declared intention of the Legislature clear and unequivocal or unless there are some circumstances rendering it inevitable that we should take the other view, we are to presume that an Act is prospective and not retrospective."

At page 330 appear the following observations :

"It is a well recognised rule that Statutes should be interpreted, if possible, so as to respect vested rights".

Again :

"In the absence of anything in an Act to show that it is to have a retrospective effect, it cannot be so construed as to have the effect of altering the law applicable to a claim in litigation at the time that the Act is passed".

I may lay emphasis on the last quotation. Again at page 331 we have the following :

"It seems a strong thing to hold that the Legislature could have meant that a party who, under a contract made prior to the Act, had as perfect a title to recover a sum of money as he had to any of his personal property, should be totally deprived of it without compensation".

I have quoted enough from the book to show that where an existing right is likely to be taken away by the operation of an Act, unless there is something which compels a Court to give the Act a retrospective effect, it will not give the Act that effect.

In the light thus thrown by decided cases, on the authority of which the observations quoted in Craies are based, I shall consider the provisions of s. 99.

So far as the Allahabad High Court is concerned, it was settled law that a suit between rival tenants was cognisable by the Civil Court, and the rule of limitation applicable was 12 years. No doubt some Judges have expressed a doubt as to the correctness of this proposition, but the proposition has been so long held in this Court that the rule laid down amounted to a rule of law. It is not necessary to quote authorities on the point. In view of this rule of law, the plaintiffs could very well wait for four years before they instituted the suit in 1927 to recover possession from their co-tenants. If the plaintiffs are now told that s. 99 applied to their case because the suit fell within the language of s. 99, the result would be that the plaintiffs would find that six months' rule of limitation, under Art. 12 of the Fourth Schedule of the Tenancy Act of 1926, applied to their case, and their suit was already time-barred in October, 1923, well nigh three years before the Act of 1926 came into force. This is position which is hardly desirable. It was argued that the Legislature really disapproved of the decisions of the High Court in which it was held that suits between tenants were covered by the Civil Procedure Code and not by the Tenancy Act of 1901, and really gave effect to a decision of the Board of Revenue to the contrary. This may be so; but did the Legislature say in so many words, or by necessary implication, that they were not only overruling the opinion of the Allahabad High Court, but were also giving the law framed by them a retrospective effect, with the result described above? I fear there is no such indication of the mind of the Legislature to be found within the four corners of s. 99.

Again, there is a number of cases in which similar hardships would accrue.

A rent-free-grantee was not a tenant under the Tenancy Act of 1901, nor is he a tenant under the Tenancy Act of 1926. Yet the Legislature has deemed it fit to put him down with a tenant under the rule enacted in s. 99 of the Act of 1926. A rent-free grantee, not being a tenant, did not come within the purview of s. 79 of the Tenancy Act of 1901, which provided remedies for ejectment by a land-holder. A rent-free grantee's suit, in case of ejectment by a land-holder, was, therefore, before the passing of the Act of 1926, cognisable by the Civil Court, and the rule of limitation applicable to such a suit was 12 years, and not 6 months. Supposing that a rent-free grantee was ejected a year before the Act of 1926 came into force. When he brings his suit for recovery of his land against the land-holder, he finds, if s. 99 applies, that he has to go to the Revenue Court. So far there is no harm. But he finds also that his suit, by the application of Art. 12 of the Fourth Schedule of the Act of 1926, was already barred by time, six months prior to the promulgation of the Act of 1926. Is it a position desirable? Are we bound to hold that s. 99 has a retrospective effect, although the result of such retrospective effect would be so disastrous?

Again, let us take the case of a suit by a tenant against a person who claims to be a land-holder, although he may not be one. Such a suit, before s. 99 came into force, was undoubtedly a suit cognisable by the Civil Court, and governed by 12 years' rule of limitation. If the tenant was dispossessed by a person claiming to hold the position of a land holder, and claiming a right to eject the tenant, more than six months before the passing of the Act of 1926, he will find, when he brings his suit under s. 99, that it was already time-barred at the date of the institution of the suit, although he never had any reason to suppose that he should bring his suit so quickly.

Then again, let us take the case of a tenant who got a seven years' lease from the land-holder. Let us suppose that having paid the premium and obtained a written and registered lease, the tenant is unable to get possession, and he must bring a suit. To such a suit s. 79 of the Act of 1901 did not apply, for it was no case of ejectment. It was accordingly held by this Court that the tenant's suit, in the circumstances would lie in the Civil Court, and the rule of limitation would be 12 years. If the tenant, after the passing of this Act, brings his suit within a year of his cause of action, namely, the date of the execution of the lease in his favour, he would be told that his suit was already time-barred within six months of the arising of his cause of action. This is a contingency which must be avoided, and we must hold that s. 99 has not a retrospective effect.

Examples may be multiplied to show that similar hardships would arise in other cases also.

But it has been argued that hardship is no good reason for interpreting a law otherwise than it should be interpreted, that if any hardship arises, it is not on account of an application of s. 99, but by the application of the rule of limitation, which is only a procedural law, and that when s. 99 gives only a right of suit and says that a tenant and others mentioned there "may sue", s. 99 must be applied. I shall consider this argument seriatim.

Before I take up any of these arguments, I will point out that the language of s. 99 of the Act of 1926 also points to the conclusion that it is applicable only when a cause of action arises after the Act has come into force. It contains the words "otherwise than in accordance with the "provisions of this Act". A plaintiff is allowed to sue under s. 99, and to ask for the remedies prescribed by it where he finds himself ejected from, or prevented from obtaining possession of his holding. How can it be said, if the ejection of the plaintiff took place, or if the prevention from obtaining possession took place, before the Act came into force? Supposing the plaintiff described above wants to bring his suit at once, and there is no Act of 1926 in force, how will he know that he has been ejected from, or prevented from obtaining possession of his holding "otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1926?" It has been argued that the words "otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act" mean nothing but this, "otherwise than in accordance with law". If that was so, it would have been much easier and more expressive to use the latter expression than the former. By using the words "this Act", I should think, the Legislature intended that this s. 99 should apply only where the cause of action arises after the Act has come into force.

Now I take up the three arguments which I have noticed above.

First I take up the question whether the hardship alluded to above is caused by s. 99, or by the application of the Law of Limitation, and whether, therefore, we should apply s. 99, irrespective of the consequences due to the application of the Law of Limitation. In my opinion, this argument is only partial, and does not take notice of the full consequence of the application of s. 99. Section 99 cannot be read apart from the Law of Limitation that is applicable to a suit under s. 99. The argument of hardship is advanced only to show that it was not the intention of the Legislature to apply s. 99 to cases in which the cause of action arose before the enforcement of the Act. If we were otherwise certain that s. 99 must be applied to a suit of the nature described in s. 99, then it would be immaterial for the purposes of the Court administering justice, whether the Law of Limitation adversely affected or not the litigants; for then we can take it that the Legislature did not care if some cases of hardship did occur. But it is precisely because we do not know in clear terms that the Legislature meant to apply s. 99 to cases where the cause of action arose before the law came into force, and because we know that as a matter of principle, substantive law, or indeed any law, is not to be given a retrospective effect, unless the intention is clear on the point that we have to look to the consequence of the application of the law. So much for the first and second arguments.

The third argument is that the words "may sue" only make the section an enabling one, and not a compulsory one, and wherever the facts of the case bring it within the language of s. 99, it must be applied. This again, in my opinion, is a fallacious argument. Where s. 99 does not apply, because the cause of action arose before s. 99 became the law, the suit is based, not on s. 99 but on older law, i. e. either Civil Procedure Code or Tenancy Act of 1901. The present suit is not under s. 99 of Act of 1926, and there is no compulsion on the plaintiffs to sue according to s. 99.

I come to the conclusion, then, that to the case before us, namely, to a suit by a tenant against a co-tenant for recovery of possession, on the ground that he was dispossessed in 1923, s. 99 has no application.

It follows that the plaintiffs' remedy is in the Civil Court. On the allegations made in the plaint, the suit was cognisable by the Civil Court. The suit was taken cognisance of by the Civil Court. Although the plaintiffs alleged in the plaint that they had been dispossessed by a co-tenant, it was open to the defendants to show that they (the defendants) had dispossessed the plaintiffs, not in their capacity of tenants, but in their capacity of zemindars. In other words if the defendants succeeded in showing that they were the zemindars of the fields in question, and that they had dispossessed the plaintiffs in their (defendants') capacity as zemindars, the Court would be bound to find that it was a case to which s. 79 of the Act of 1901 applied, and the suit would be thrown out on the ground that the plaintiffs came to Court on a false cause of action, which did not give the Civil Court jurisdiction to try the suit. But such is not the case here. It has been found that the plaintiffs' allegation is true, namely, that they were dispossessed by their co-tenants.

The rule of limitation for a suit like this, in which the cause of action arose in 1923, was 12 years, and the present suit is within that time. The result is that the suit was rightly decreed by the lower Appellate Court.

I would, for the foregoing reasons, dismiss the appeal with costs, including Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Boys, J.—This case was referred to a Bench by Mr. Justice Bajpai sitting singly.

It came up for hearing before myself and Mr. Justice Smith.

Before us, the Division Bench, the case was argued as if the plaint was framed as asking for relief against a trespasser. It is immaterial now to consider why this view of the case was accepted in argument, but it may be that it was to some extent due to the pleadings in para. 3 of the plaint, and paras. 13 and 16 of the written statement. The case was, therefore, argued before the Division Bench with reference to the effect on it of the decision in Ananti v. Channo (2), where it was held that where the plaintiff sues as a tenant alleging the defendant to be a trespasser, the case is cognisable by the Civil Court. As the Division Bench was in some doubt as to the meaning of the Full Bench when speaking of the issues to be tried by the Civil Court, the case was referred to a stronger Bench with a view to interpret that part of the Full Bench decision in reference to which the Division Bench was in doubt. We were further of opinion that an important point was involved in the case, namely, as to the applicability of s. 99 of the Tenancy Act, III of 1926, to cases where the ejectment, or the date on which the plaintiff first began to be resisted in obtaining possession, was prior to the commencement of the Act.

On the case coming before a Full Bench of three Judges, attention was drawn specifically to the first paragraph of the plaint which suggests that the position taken by the plaintiff was that he as co-tenant of three-quarters of an undivided fixed-rate tenancy was being resisted by the defendants as co-tenants of the remaining quarter. In this aspect of the case, it is manifest that the decision of this Court applicable is not Ananti v. Channo (2), but Sahdeo v. Budhai (3), in which it was held that where a plaintiff sues for possession as co-tenant, alleging the defendant to be a co-tenant, he must go to the Revenue Court.

If this is all that there was in the case the appeal would have had to be allowed.

There remained, however, the question of the applicability of s. 99, and with this may be considered also the applicability of s. 121, also of Act III of 1926. Section 121, again was not relied on in argument before the Division Bench, but in our referring order we made reference to this section as requiring consideration.

I have no hesitation in holding that s. 99 and s. 121 both deal with substantive rights and are not matters of adjective law. They both declare the right of the plaintiff in certain circumstances to sue. They have nothing to do with the question of venue, or any other matter of procedure; these matters are provided for by s. 230 read with Sch. IV. Nor have they even anything to do with the question of limitation.

To consider s. 99 first: I am of opinion that it is not applicable to any ejectment or resistance to possession, which ejectment occurred or resistance commenced before the passing of Act III of 1926.

In the first place it does not apply to any ejectment, etc., which has been effected "otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act." These words are ambiguous. Literally read, they clearly suggest that the Act is only intended to be applicable to circumstances occurring after the commencement of the Act, for a person could not be ejected or prevented from obtaining possession in accordance with the provisions of this Act came into force. On the other hand, to read the Act thus literally would mean to hold, in the first place, that a person, who had been lawfully ejected prior to the Act under the previously existing law, could be said not to have been ejected "in accordance with the provisions of this Act", and, therefore, under s. 99 a right of suit would be conferred by s. 99. This is manifestly absurd, but in effect any such absurdity would be prevented by the principle of res judicata.

I am disposed to think that the existence of these saving words and the form in which they occur, may be very simply accounted for. A draftsman would naturally set out to say the circumstances under which a person ejected, etc., could sue. It would then occur to the draftsman or to somebody else. "But you have given him a right to sue 'if ejected', and that would cover even lawful ejectment under this very Act". This would suggest naturally incorporation of the words "otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act." It might have occurred, but evidently did not occur, to the draftsman that there was also the case of ejectment according to law under the previous Act.

Enough has been said to indicate that the words are ambiguous and no amount of speculation can remove that ambiguity; and that being so, the most beneficial interpretation must be given to the words, and that is that the Act does not apply to events occurring before the Act came into force. That is the most beneficial interpretation manifestly, for otherwise a suit might by the harsher construction be barred by limitation and might, owing to the change in the law, be barred by limitation months or years before the Act came into force.

It is true that in certain cases a new period of limitation may bar the remedy which a plaintiff would have had before the Statute came into force giving the new period of limitation but I cannot find anywhere that this is a hard and fast rule applicable without exception to all cases, and it appears to me that the present is a case to which certain remarks of Lord Campbell, C. J., are particularly applicable. I quote from Craies' Statute Law, 4th edition of Hardcastle on Statutory Law, 1907, page 331:—

"The question arose whether this Act had a retrospective operation and was to apply to cases of damage done before its passing. The Court decided that it was retrospective, and Lord Campbell C. J., in giving judgment, said: 'if the Act had come into operation immediately after the time of its being passed, the hardship would have been so great that we might have inferred an intention on the part of the Legislature not to give it a retrospective operation, but when we see that it contains a provision suspending its operation for six weeks, that must be taken as an intimation that the Legislature has provided that as the period of time within which proceedings respecting antecedent damages or injuries might be taken before the proper Tribunal. A certain time was allowed before the Act was to come into operation, and that removes all difficulty.'

Now in the present case the hardship caused by holding the Act to be in the sense we are now considering retroactive is manifest, and in the Act itself there is no period of grace allowed to suggest that it was intended to be so retroactive. The Act came into force within seven days (i. e., the necessary period for printing and notifying in the Gazette) from the date of the Governor-General's assent.

As to s. 121, it has been established before us that on the pleadings as eventually settled this must be regarded as not merely a suit for a declaration but a suit also for possession.

I would, therefore, hold that the Civil Court had jurisdiction and dismiss the appeal.

King, J.—I agree with Mukerji, J., that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to try the suit is not ousted by s. 99 read with s. 230 of the Agra Tenancy Act 1926.

As the lower Appellate Court has granted a decree for a declaration and for possession, we must take it that the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint by adding a prayer for possession. Before this amendment of the plaint the plaintiff sought merely a declaration of his right as tenant. The jurisdiction of the Civil Court to try such a suit was clearly barred by s. 121, read with s. 230, of the Tenancy Act, 1926. The material allegations and reliefs set forth in the amended plaint may be taken to be briefly as follows. The parties are co-tenants of a fixed-rate holding, the plaintiff having a three-fourths share and the defendants a one fourth share. The holding is cultivated by sub-tenants. The defendants collect the whole rent from the subtenants and deny the plaintiff's right to any share of rent and thus have wrongfully dispossessed the plaintiff. The cause of action arose on 4th April 1923 when the plaintiff's rent-suit was dismissed by the Appellate Court, and also in June 1925 when the defendants denied the plaintiff's title. The plaintiff prays for a declaration of title to three-fourths of the holding and for recovery of possession.

If we ignore the date of the cause of action, then the suit clearly falls within the scope of s. 99 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1926, and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred by s. 230.

The main question for our determination therefore, is whether s. 99, applies to a suit when the cause of action (i. e., the wrongful ejection, or the wrongful prevention from obtaining possession) arose before September 7, 1926 when the Agra Tenancy Act of 1926 came into force.

I think this question should be answered in the negative, partly on general principles of interpretation but mainly on the interpretation of s. 99 itself.

Before the Tenancy Act of 1926 came into force the plaintiff had a vested right of suing the defendants, his co-tenants, who had wrongfully dispossessed him, for recovery of possession. The suit lay in the Civil Court, as s. 79 of the Tenancy Act, 1901, only applied to a suit by a tenant against his landholder. The plaintiff's case was that the defendants ejected him as co-tenants and not as land-holders, and the Court below has found this to be correct. The period of limitation was 12 years. We may take the cause of action to have accrued on the 4th of April 1923 when the plaintiff's rent-suit was dismissed by the Appellate Court. It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiff had a vested right of suit on the 9th of September 1926. Did he lose that right on the 7th of September 1926 when the new Act came into force?

Now it is a well recognised rule that Statutes should be interpreted, if possible so as to respect vested rights. (Oraies on Statute Law, 3rd edition, page 330). Many cases might be cited to show that Courts have refused to allow Statutes to have retrospective effect, although their language seemed to imply that such was the intention of the Legislature, because, if the Statutes had been so construed, vested rights would have been defeated.

The Gaming Act, 1922, repealed s. 2 of the Gaming Act, 1835, (which made money paid to the holder of securities given for consideration arising out of certain gaming transactions recoverable from the person to whom the securities were originally given) and enacted that "no action for the recovery of money under the said section shall be entertained in any Court." In Henshall v. Parter (4), McCardie, J., held that in accordance with well-established rules of construction, as well as by virtue of s. 38 (2) of the Interpretation Act, 1889, the Act of 1922 does not prevent the bringing of an action under the repealed section of the Act of 1835, after the date when the repealing Act came into force, in respect of a cause of action which had arisen before that date.

It must be observed that s. 38 (2) of the Interpretation Act, 1889, is almost verbally identical with s. 6 of the U. P. General Clauses Act, 1904.

In accordance with well-established rules of interpretation, therefore s. 99 must not be construed as defeating the plaintiff's vested right of suing for recovery of possession unless the Legislature makes it perfectly clear that this was their intention.

Now, if we construe s. 90 as applying to suits where the cause of action arose before the 7th of September, 1926, it is clear that the plaintiff is absolutely deprived of his remedy. The period of limitation for a suit under s. 99 is six months from the date of wrongful dispossession. This means that the suit became time-barred on the 5th of October 1923, about three years before the Act of 1926 came into force.

It is argued that the time within which a suit must be instituted is a question of procedure, and there is no vested right in procedure. This is true, but in the present case if s. 99 were held applicable it would not merely mean that the plaintiff must sue in the Revenue Court instead of in the Civil Court, and that he must file his suit within a shorter period. It means that the plaintiff cannot sue at all, as his suit had become time-barred long before the new Act came into force. Hence the alteration in the rule of procedure would operate as an alteration of substantive law in absolutely depriving the plaintiff of his remedy. This is an undoubted hardship, and this case is by no means likely to be an isolated or exceptional case.

These considerations emphasize the duty of the Court to interpret the Statute, if possible, so as to respect vested rights.

Turning now to the consideration of the language of s. 99 think it may be fairly held to indicate that it is not intended to apply to cases where the cause of action arose before the 7th of September, 1926.

Section 99 provides for a suit by a tenant ejected from, or prevented from obtaining possession of, his holding "otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act." I lay stress on the last words "This Act" means of course the Act of 1926. Now take the case of a tenant ejected in 1923. It was obviously impossible at the time of the ejection to determine whether he was, or was not, ejected in accordance with the Act of 1926, Section 99 clearly could not apply to such a case unless we amplify the phrase so as to mean,

"otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act, if this Act had been in force at the time of the ejection."

But this is very far-fetched. I think the language of the section shows that it was only intended to apply to cases where the cause of action arose after the Act of 1926 came into force. It is only in such cases that it is possible to decide whether the dispossession was, or was not, in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1926.

I hold, therefore, both upon the general rules of interpretation, and upon the interpretation of the section itself, that s. 99 does not apply to this suit, as the cause of action arose before the 7th of September, 1926. The Civil Court therefore had jurisdiction to try the suit.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Bajpai, J.—I agree generally with the opinion of the Acting Chief Justice, but like him I am not prepared to dissent from the order proposed by the majority of the Bench.

(4) (1923) 2 K. B. 193; 92 L. J. K. B. 866; 39 T. L. R. 409; 67 S. J. 537; 129 L. T. 443.

I only wish to point out that I am of the opinion that the law of limitation is a law of procedure and the general rule is that a Statute of limitation is retrospective in its operation and governs all proceedings from the moment of its enactment, even though the cause of action might accrue before the Act came into force. In Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that in a suit brought on the 4th of March, 1907 for the redemption of a mortgage, dated the 2nd of January, 1842, the law of limitation applicable to the case was not Act XIV of 1859, the law in force on the date of the acknowledgments, but Act XV of 1877 which was in force at the time of the institution of the suit. It is said that the application of this principle might work great hardship in cases where the Legislature in its wisdom curtails by a new enactment the period of limitation prescribed for a particular kind of suit, for it might well happen that a litigant in the belief that he had for instance, twelve years for instituting the suit after the accrual of the cause of action might wait for seven years and then, if a new Act is passed and the period is cut down to six years, he will not be entitled to maintain a suit, because he would be beyond time by a year on the date the new Act came into force and his right would be lost for no fault of his whatsoever. This argument assumes that a Legislature would adopt such a drastic measure without making provisions for cases of this kind by inserting a period of grace. I am, therefore, of the opinion that no argument can be advanced based only on the hardship of the situation, because I am sure that where the Legislature cuts down the period of limitation, it will always—provide for hard cases by putting in a period of grace, when a period of limitation is prescribed for the institution of a particular suit, it does not create any right in favour of anybody; but simply prescribes that a suit of that nature has to be filed within that particular period and, if it is not so filed, the remedy is lost, although the right remains. That the right remains and is not extinguished is clear by the fact that, if a new enactment is passed and prescribes a longer period of limitation, the suer would be entitled to avail himself of that extended period of limitation and obtain redress. I wish however to make it clear that the law of limitation is not always a purely adjective law, inasmuch as in certain cases it provides for the creation of rights by prescription and the corresponding extinction of rights (s. 28 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908) and if those rights have vested in individuals under one law of limitation, they cannot be divested by the introduction of a new law of limitation or by an amendment in the law. It is only when the retrospective application of a Statute of limitation would destroy vested rights that it is not to be construed retrospectively, otherwise the ordinary rule is that rules of limitation are rules of procedure and no one has a vested right in any period of limitation.

By the Court.—The suit, as amended by the addition of the prayer for possession, was cognisable by the Civil Court, and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, including Counsel's fee in this Court on the higher scale.

Second Civil Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 3rd July 1928.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant

Mr. P. L. Banerji (with him Mr. Ambika Prasad Dube), for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-respondent and the defendants-appellants are co-sharers in a certain zemidari. There are six plots of land which were up to the year 1924, but for how long it has not been ascertained, entered in the name of a certain Jhakri who was the pujari of the plaintiff-respondent. This Jhakri was dismissed from service and surrendered these holdings to the defendants appellants. These had their own names entered in the revenue papers as khud kasht holders in the year 1924 (1332 Fasli). When the new Agra Tenancy Act came into force on 7th September 1926 these persons became under the definition of "sir" in s. 4 of that Act "Sir-holders" being co-sharers, who were recorded as being in possession of these plots as khud kasht in the year previous to the passing of the Act. The plaintiff Sri Thakurji Asthapat brought this suit for possession of the plots and for mesne profits claiming that he and not the defendants was the "sir-holder". The suit was partially decreed by the first Court. The plaintiff was given a decree for joint possession over the plots, but not for exclusive possession, and his suit for mesne profits was dismissed. He appealed against this decision and a cross-objection was preferred by the defendants. In the cross-objection the defendants claimed that the land was their "sir" and the plaintiff was not entitled to joint possession. The lower Appellate Court however, took the view that although the defendants' names were entered as khud kasht holders the entry was not bona fide and that the land, although it became "sir" became the "sir" not of the defendants but of the plaintiff who was in the opinion of the Court, the real khudkasht holder, at least up to the year 1924. The finding of the Court below that Jhakri represented Sri Thakurji and held the khud kasht land on his behalf can perhaps not be challenged in second appeal, but the effect of this finding is only this that in the year 1924 one of the co-sharers was occupying some of the joint land as khud kasht, under the law which was then in force. No sir rights were acquired by a co-sharer in respect of land which he was occupying as khud kasht after the passing of the Act No. III of 1901, and there is no question of good faith in this matter. All that can be held is that after the year 1924 the other co-sharers were in possession. How they obtained possession is immaterial, but they certainly occupied the land and cultivated it as their khud kasht for the two years which elapsed before the passing of the new Tenancy Act. There is nothing in that Act which enables a Court to go back to the manner in which possession was obtained by a co-sharer. The Court has merely to decide that the co-sharer was in possession of certain land as khud kasht previous to the passing of the Act and is bound on that finding to hold the land to be the "sir of that co-sharer. It would be unreasonable for the Court to say that such and such land is certainly cultivated as khud kasht by A, but he took it from B and so B ought to be recorded as "sir-holder" and not A. This in effect is what the lower Court has done, and I cannot uphold this finding. In my opinion the defendants-appellants were properly recorded as "sir-holders" in these plots. The plaintiff respondent is their co-sharer, but he is not entitled to have any decree given him for joint possession in the plots which his co-sharers hold as "sir". The suit therefore should be dismissed entirely. I allow this appeal with costs throughout, set aside the decrees of the the Courts below and order the suit to be dismissed with costs.

It is open to a party to plead a trade usage in conflict with the provisions of the Indian Contract Act, but if a party relies on a trade usage its incidents and details ought to be indicated with clearness and precision and where there is an issue between the parties as to the existence of such an usage the onus of proof lies upon the party propounding the same. [p. 159, col. 2.]

Even if a re-sale is illegal for want of notice, if a breach of contract on the part of the buyer is established, the seller can claim damages on the basis of the difference between contract price and the market price on the date of the breach. [p. 160, cols 1 & 2.]

Where there is evidence legally sufficient to support a finding as to the existence of an usage, the High Court cannot set aside that finding on the ground that the quantum of evidence is meagre and scanty. But where the usage has not been pleaded with precision and the evidence adduced is vague and inconsistent a finding may be over-set by the High Court on the ground that it was not justified by the pleadings and was not supported by evidence of a relevant character. Judgment.—This and the connected appeal arise out of a suit for damages, consequent upon a breach of contract relating to the purchase of two grain pits, situate in Mauzas Sambhalka and Bhuniyori respectively. The plaintiffs claimed Rs. 948-12-3 for principal and interest up to the date of suit as also pendente lite and future interest.

Plaintiffs alleged and the defendants did not dispute that the latter had agreed to purchase the two grain pits at certain rates detailed in the plaint, and that earnest money had been duly paid but that the defendants had failed to pay the balance of the price and take delivery. The balance was payable up to Chait Sudi 15th and delivery ought to have been taken upto Chait Sudi 2nd corresponding to the 17th of March 1923.

Plaintiffs averred that there was a trade usage in the grain market of Shamli that where the buyer failed in his obligation as to the payment and delivery on due dates, the seller was entitled to re-sell the grain pits according to the market-rate and that in pursuance of this usage the plaintiffs re-sold the grain pit in Sambhalka. This resulted in a loss to the plaintiffs of Rs. 587-1-3. They claimed this sum together with Rs. 138-5 interest upto the date of the suit. This grain pit belonged to the plaintiffs.

No re-sale was held of the second grain pit which was alleged to have been purchased from Kallu Mal Kedar Nath. Plaintiffs alleged that they had to pay to Kallu Mal Kedar Nath Rs. 141-3 for this grain pit. They claim for recovery of this sum and Rs. 41-12 as interest.

The suit was contested on the ground that the contract between the parties was really of the nature of a wager, that a claim for damages for its breach was not legally maintainable, and that the plaintiffs were not competent to sell the grain pit at Sambhalka without complying with the provision of s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act.

The Court of first instance found that the plaintiffs had not, as a matter of fact, purchased the second grain pit from Kallu Mal Kedar Nath and were not in a position to sell the grain pit to the defendants on the 25th of June 1922 when the bargain was struck relating to this grain pit and held that the claim regarding this was untenable. It decreed the plaintiffs' claim for Rs. 587-1-3 principal and Rs. 138-5 interest as to the other grain pit.

Both the parties appealed. The lower Appellate Court allowed the plaintiffs' appeal and dismissed the cross-appeal. The result was that the plaintiffs' claim stood decreed in its entirety.

The defendants in their appeal to this Court contend that the plaintiffs were not entitled to re-sell the grain pit situate in Mauza Sambhalka without complying with the conditions laid down in s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act. In answer, the plaintiffs set up a trade usage under which it was not necessary for them to serve a notice upon the defendants as a condition precedent to their selling the grain pit.

It is open to a party to plead a trade usage in conflict with the provisions of the Indian Contract Act. If a party relies upon a trade usage, its incidents and details ought to be indicated with clearness and precision; and where there is an issue between the parties as to the existence of such an usage, the onus of proof lies upon the party propounding the same.

The defendants denied that the plaintiffs had re-sold the grain pit in Sambhalka. On this point there is no clear finding by either of the Courts below. In the view we are about to take, it is not necessary to call for a finding as to whether there was a re-sale or not. Their main contention was that in no case could damages be assessed on the basis of the difference between the contract price and the price fetched on a re-sale, since no notice of the projected sale was given to the defendants under the imperative provision of s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act.

Plaintiffs do not aver that they ever gave any notice to the defendants of the contemplated sale.

Where the property in the goods had, passed to the defendants, but the latter were in default and refused either to pay the balance of the price or to take delivery of the goods on the due dates, two remedies were available to the plaintiffs; (1) to claim compensation on the basis of the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of the breach or (2) to re-sell the property under s. 107 and recover the difference, if any, between the contract price and the price realised by the re-sale. The present suit is not to enforce the first remedy, nor is it a suit to recover losses sustained by a resale held under s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act. A trade usage has been set up by the plaintiffs the details of which have been given in para 3 of the plaint. It has not been pleaded that by force of this usage the plaintiffs were competent to sell the grain pits belonging to the defendants without any notice to them of the projected sale. The Court of first instance neither framed nor tried an issue as to the existence or the incidents of the usage as alleged by the plaintiffs.

The lower Appellate Court deals with the question subsidiarily in its treatment of s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act. It held that the provision of s. 107 was not mandatory but was optional, a view with which we entirely disagree. The claim for recovery of loss caused by a re sale may be an optional remedy. But the plaintiffs cannot be permitted to re sell the goods in defiance of the conditions imposed by s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act unless they establish a trade usage at variance with its provisions. We have already observed that the plaintiffs have not pleaded that under the usage prevailing in the grain market of Shamli it was not necessary to give the defendants a notice of the contemplated sale where the latter are guilty of a breach of the obligations under the contract. The lower Appellate Court holds that the usage is proved, but its finding rests upon the statements of two witnesses Gokul Chand and Kishori Lal which have not only no bearing upon the question of notice but are vague and nebulous to a degree. The following is the summary of their statements as given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court

"Gokul Chand has given the custom when he comes to say that the vendor has to wait till Chait Sudi Ist., when he will inform "Itala dekar", the vendee, if his shop subsists (i. e. if the vendee is to be found), and then the grain pit can be re-sold by the vendor. Kishori Lal, plaintiff, has said that a vendor could re-sell it without any enquiry from the vendee."

The statement of Gokul Chand does not support the usage and is open to the construction that it is necessary to give a notice to the purchaser. Kishori Lal does not say a word about notice but speaks of the necessity of an enquiry from the vendee. Upon the data accepted by the lower Appellate Court, the inference, in affirmance of the usage as now set up before us, was wholly unwarranted. Where there is evidence legally sufficient to support a finding as to the existence of an usage, this Court cannot set aside that finding on the ground that the quantum of evidence is meagre and scanty. But where the usage has not been pleaded with precision and the evidence adduced is vague and inconsistent, a finding may be over-set by this Court on the grounds that it was not justified by the pleadings and was not supported by evidence of a relevant character. We therefore hold that the plaintiffs have failed to prove a trade usage entitling them to sell the grain pit without notice to the defendants.

The plaintiffs' claim however cannot be permitted to rest here. We are clearly of opinion that a breach of contract on the part of the defendants having been established, the plaintiffs are entitled to claim damages on the basis of the difference between the contract price and market price on the date of the breach.

Before we can finally dispose of this appeal we think it desirable to have a finding from the Court below on the following issue.—

What was the difference between the contract price and the market price of wheat in Shamli on the 17th of March 1923?

Parties shall be at liberty to produce further evidence. The lower Appellate Court is directed to submit its finding within two months of the receipt of the record. Upon return of the finding ten days' time will be allowed for objections.

We are of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to interest for the period pendente lite and future rights up to the date of realisation. The contention about interest is therefore overruled. No reason has been assigned why interest for the period between the institution of the suit up to the date of realisation should be refused.

Where there is no reference in the sanad that a grant is for religious and charitable purposes but is made in consideration of the piety and learning of the grantees who are Brahmans, the grant though it may be described by the word ‘Dharmarth’, is not to the devasthan but is a personal one. *Chintaman Balaji Dev v. The expression “land held under a treaty” used in the Summary Settlement Act refers to cases in which the root of the title is a treaty. First Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Ahmednagar, in Civil Suit No. 1 of 1925.

Mr. Navalkar (with him Mr. Virkar), for the Appellants.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, (with him Messrs. D.R. Patwardhan and K. V. Joshi), for Respondents Nos. 2, 3.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, Government Pleader, for Respondent No. 4.

Baker, J.—In the year 1790 A. D. the village of Takli in the Ahmednagar District was granted by the Holkar Darbar by a Sanad to Bhanudas, the great-grandfather of the plaintiffs and his brother Eknath. The property descended to the male issue of the grantees and ultimately to Manohar and Eknath uncles of the plaintiffs who are the sons of Eknath's sister. From the year 1875 the inamdars had been mortgaging the inam to various persons and ultimately by a decree of the High Court the right of Eknath to redeem the property, Manohar being dead, was declared to be foreclosed.

The present suit was brought by the plaintiffs, the nephews of Eknath, for a declaration that the inam being for religious and charitable purposes is inalienable and consequently the mortgagees were not entitled to deprive the inamdars of it. Eknath was defendant No 5 in the suit as he did not join as plaintiff. He has since died.

The prayers of the plaintiffs were for a declaration to the effect that the income of the village of Takli is not liable to be mortgaged by Manohar and Eknath for their personal debts and that no property in the said income of the village has passed by the foreclosure decree of the High Court passed on April 13, 1917; that the mortgage transactions in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 may be declared to be void and no longer binding on the religious endowment created by the inam patra in connection with the village of Takli and for an injunction against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 for preventing them from claiming any income of the said village from defendant No. 4, the Collector, in virtue of the said foreclosure decree and that defendant No 4 should be directed to pay the income of the Dumala village of Khare Takli to the plaintiffs and their heirs and successors. The defendants in the suit were the mortgagees, the Collector of Ahmednagar and Eknath, who did not join as a plaintiff.

Various objections were taken by those of the defendants who defended the suit, viz, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who were the sub-mortgagees of defendant No. 1 and also by the Collector.

The District Judge of Ahmednagar held that the suit would not lie as regards the injunction prayed for though it would lie as regards the declaration. He held that the suit was barred under Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act; that the adjudication of the Inam Commission in 1852 and the summary settlement in 1863 were binding on the plaintiffs; and that the grant of the suit inam was not a grant for religious and charitable purposes, but was a personal grant of a heritable and transferable nature, and so the alienations by Manohar and Eknath were not void; the income of the said village was not liable to alienation for the debts of the mortgagors and that the mortgage transactions of 1875 A.D. resulting in the foreclosure decree of the Bombay High Court were binding on the inam income, and consequently dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs make this appeal. The arguments in this appeal have gone on for three or four days but the questions in issue lie in a narrow compass. The main objections which have been brought against the suit by the defendants are that by virtue of the foreclosure decree in 1917 by which the right of Eknath to redeem the mortgage was declared to be for ever lost and his interest in the property is gone, the plaintiffs who are his heirs are equally bound and the principle of res judicata will apply to the present suit. The second point is whether the nature of the grant is, as contended by the plaintiffs of a religious and charitable nature and, therefore, inalienable or whether it is a personal grant to the holders, viz, the family of Eknath, and, thirdly, whether the suit is barred by limitation.

There are also certain cross-objections which have been filed and certain applications: one for amendment, one for security for costs, and one for an injunction which will be dealt with at the end of the judgment.

The first point is as regards the effect of the order of the High Court in 1917. In order to understand the case it will be necessary to give a brief history of the transactions between the inamdars and the mortgagees. The grant, as I have said, was in 1790. The Inam Commission in 1852 held the property to be personal inam, a decision which was confirmed at the summary settlement under Bombay Act II of 1863. In 1875 the then holders of the inam mortgaged the property to defendant No. 1 Pohekar. In 1876 the inamdars sold a part of the equity of redemption to one Khemchand. There was a subsequent mortgage to Pohekar and a decree was obtained on the second mortgage in 1892 by Pohekar and in 1896 the mortgaged property, i.e., the inam, was put up for sale and was purchased by Pohekar but that proceeding was subsequently set aside by the District Judge of Ahmednagar. In 1898 there was a sub-mortgage by defendant No. 1 Pohekar to Bagde, the father of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who are the contesting defendants in this case. In 1903 Bagde sued for possession and in 1904 he got a decree. In 1907 there was a redemption suit by the two jahagirdars and Khemchand, who, as I have already said, was a purchaser of one-third of the equity of redemption. In the course of that suit an injunction was granted by the Court against the Bagdes preventing them from recovering any portion of the income of the village. The proceedings in this suit ended in a decree for Rs. 10,000 and odd. An appeal was made to the High Court by Khemchand as he objected to the amount which was found due under the mortgage. The jahagirdars did not appeal but were made respondents. In 1911 the High Court found in Appeal No. 37 of 1910 that Rs. 10,000 and odd were due on the mortgage and passed a redemption decree, the usual provision being made for the right to redeem being for ever foreclosed if the money was not paid within the period directed by the Court. The money was not paid and in 1917 on the application of the mortgagee the High Court declared that the right of the mortgagor was foreclosed. The date of that order is July 9, 1917. Although the appeal had been lodged by Khemchand one of the mortgagees alone the jahagirdars were also parties to the suit. The decree referred to the whole mortgage and that was the understanding of the parties. The effect of this foreclosure decree was to extinguish the right of Eknath and his brother Manohar to redeem the mortgage. After it had been passed there was an application made by Eknath to the High Court, which is Ex. 31, page 32, in which for the first time the theory is put forward that the property was property set apart for religious and charitable purposes and, therefore, inalienable, and the High Court in disposing of this application states that "the decree is binding on the parties to the litigation and it is not possible to entertain the application for amendment at this distance of time. If the property really belongs to the Devasthan and if it has been improperly diverted from its use for the purposes of the Devasthan it may be open to those who are interested in the Devasthan to file a proper suit with a view to question the validity of this alienation." The application was rejected. This was in September, 1924, and in 1925 the plaintiffs, who are the nephews of Eknath and Manohar, bring the present suit.

It has been argued on behalf of the defendants that the present suit is really a last attempt on the part of Eknath to get back his property when all other means have failed, and it has been contended that inasmuch as the validity of the mortgages has been finally decided by the High Court in this litigation in the case of Eknath it would not be competent to him to re-open the question. So also his nephews who claim as his heirs are equally barred.

On behalf of the appellants it has been strenuously contended that the capacity of the plaintiffs to bring the present suit is not as the heirs of Eknath, but as persons interested in the Devasthan or rather the religious foundation, as there is no temple but only a tomb of the ancestors of the parties at which an annual festival is held, or as successors in the vahivat of the foundation. It was somewhat difficult from the present case to ascertain the exact position which the plaintiffs seek to occupy. My own impression is that they vary their position from time to time as it suits their purpose. The matter, however, is made clear by a reference to the judgment of the lower Court in which it is stated at page 5, line 15:—

"As the suit went on, it was pointed out to the plaintiffs' Counsel that the suit could not be maintained by the plaintiffs in two different and inconsistent characters, and finally the Counsel for the plaintiffs informed the Court that the suit was brought by the plaintiffs as presumptive heirs of Eknath and not as devotees or worshippers or strangers to the grant interested in the performance of these festivals."

It so happened that during the pendency of this suit Eknath died on December, 16, 1926, and an application had been made by the plaintiffs for leave to amend the plaint in order to join a prayer for possession to the other prayers for a declaration and injunction which they have made. That has been opposed by the defendants and it is a matter to be dealt with later. But it is pointed out that the plaintiffs in the present case claim what interest they have in the inam by virtue of their relationship to Eknath. It, contrary to what has been stated in the lower Court, which I have just repeated, viz., that they are the heirs or presumptive heirs of Eknath, we assume that they are persons who are suing as interested in the vahivat of this foundation, the fact still remains that their interest arises from their relationship to Eknath. They do not sue as strangers or as members of the Hindu community who are interested in the performance of the ceremonies at the tomb of their ancestors, but by virtue of their relationship to the family of the jahagirdars, of whom they are now the sole male representatives. If this is so, it appears to me that the suit would be barred inasmuch as the validity of the mortgages has been finally declared by the High Court in the case of Eknath and that the plaintiffs who now stand in the shoes of Eknath would be barred exactly in the same way as Eknath himself would be barred.

Numerous cases have been quoted by the learned Counsel on either side, but the matter seems not to require very much authority. The learned Counsel for the respondents has relied on the case of Madhavrao Hariharrao v. Anusuyabai (1). The point really is, as has been pointed out by the learned Counsel for the appellants, whether under s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code the parties are litigating under the same title. It is quite true that a mortgagor suing in one capacity will not be barred when he sues in a distinct capacity. In fact he is a different person: Drummond v. Attorney-General (2). But, as I have already pointed out, the capacity in which the plaintiffs now sue is, by virtue of their heirship to Eknath, the same capacity in which Eknath himself stood. But this point is not really of very great importance in view of the findings at which I am going to arrive. I will state it again later on, because even supposing that the view which I have taken here is not correct, yet when we go into the facts it will be seen that the bar of res judicata does apply to the present case. It has been contended by the the learned Counsel for the appellants that this case was not set up in the lower Court and, therefore, it is not open to the respondents to take advantage of it now. It is, however, a point of law, and since no further evidence is required in the present case than the record of proceedings in the High Court, I do not think that there is any reason why it should not be taken in first appeal.

Passing on to the next point as to the nature of the grant in the present case the following circumstances will appear. First of all, both by the Inam Commission in 1852, and, secondly, by the summary settlement in 1863 this property has been regarded not as Devasthan property but as private inam of the holders. Secondly, throughout the history of this property it appears to have been dealt with by the holders as if it were their private property. Thirdly, during the whole of this complicated litigation which went on for many years in connection with the mortgages executed by Eknath and his brother Manohar to the various mortgagees, viz, the Pohekars and the Bagdes, which ultimately went up to the High Court, we do not find any plea set forth by the mortgagors that the land was inalienable and, therefore, the mortgages were not binding upon them. And, lastly, we have the terms of the sanad itself which have been interpreted by the learned District Judge and which I shall have to refer to in some detail. Now, so far as regards the determination by the Inam Commission it has been contended by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the object of the Inam Commission was to determine the liability of the land to pay dues to Government and that the Courts are not precluded from going into the real nature of the grant. As regards the adjudication in the summary settlement under Act II of 1863 it is contended that that does not apply to lands held under a treaty, and this land is not held under a treaty. The decision of the Inam Commission is Ex. 66. The entire village was claimed as hereditary inam and the decision was that the village of Takli minus the ancient haks and inams to be continued in inam so long as there shall be in existence any male lineal descendant of Ramchandra Gosavee bin Bhanoodas Gosavee Wusmutkar. The decision under the Summary Settlement Act which is contained in the sanad (Ex. 92) describes the property in column 11 as permanent (enfranchised private property). In neither of these documents is there any reference whatever to the property being granted for religious purposes. Under Sch. II, r. 2 of Act XI of 1852, i. e., the Act setting up the Inam Commission, the decisions of the proceedings of the Inam Commissioner were appealable to the Government whose orders were final, and that that was so, was held in Vasudev Pandit v. Collector of Puna (3). Similarly, in Ramrav Govindrao v. Secretary of State (4) it was held that the decision of the Inam Commissioner was, by virtue of the provisions of r. 2, Schedule A, of Act XI of 1852, final as regards the land and interest concerned in the decision. Then as regards the decision under the Summary Settlement Act it is contended that that Act does not apply to the land in dispute because land under a treaty is specially exempted under the Act. The learned District Judge has pointed out that no treaty was produced before him and he was not prepared to hold that the land was held under a treaty. The basis of the argument is that the village originally belonged to Holkar's Government and it is contended that it came in possession of the British Government by a treaty with Holkar. A reference has been made to Bombay Regulation XXIX of 1827 which deals with the bringing under operation of the Bombay Regulations the territories in the Deccan and Khandesh. That Regulation deals both with the territories which were acquired by conquest from the Peshwa and from other States by treaties and agreements and so far as I can see it is not at all clear from this Regulation that this particular village Takli was acquired directly by treaty by the British Government from Holkar's Government. A reference will be found at the top of page 3 of Volume I of the Bombay Code in which the villages constituting the Zila of Ahmednagar are mentioned and the reference is "The Peshwa's share of the two Parganas Bijapur and Gandapur, together with the village of Takli." That would quite easily mean that the village of Takli was held under the same conditions as the other two villages. Supposing that at this time in 1827 Takli belonged to the Peshwa it must have passed to the British Government by conquest and not by treaty. However, assuming that there was a treaty with Holkar by which certain villages in the Deccan were handed over to the British Government, that does not make the land in question "lands held under a treaty" under the definition in the Act of 1863. The learned Counsel for the appellants has relied on the case of Kalabhai v. Secretary of State for India (5). That, however, does not bear on the point in dispute. The expression "lands held under a treaty" used in the Summary Settlement Act has been construed to refer to cases in which the root of title was a treaty. This will be found in In re Vasudeo Harihar (2). In order to hold that it was held under a treaty it must be shown either that the original title was under a term of a treaty which remained in force or that the treaty of cession guaranteed title. Nothing has been shown in the present case, as I have already said, and it is open to doubt whether Takli was not a part of the Peshwa's dominions along with the other two villages which are referred to in the same paragraph. I do not say that the terms either of the Inam Commission's decision or the summary settlement are so definite as to make it impossible to hold that this grant was for religious and charitable purposes. But the inference to which they give rise is that it was ordinary personal inam. There is no reference to the grant being for religious and charitable purposes as is contended for by the appellant.

Turning to the sanad itself it has been translated at page 67 of the record and is again translated by the learned District Judge at pages 8 and 9 of the judgment, and I do not think that it is necessary to set it out in full again, but the point to be noticed about it is that it does not expressly say that the grant is made for religious purposes. The contents are that the members of the family of the present plaintiffs made an application to the Holkar's Government representing that they celebrated the festival of Eknath Shasti and the death anniversary of the late Rama Bawa their uncle at large expense. There is an annual allowance of Rs. 360 from the Sirkar on which they could not manage and requesting that the grant of a village may be kindly made as a new inam, in charity. Thereafter the sanad goes on to say "Taking into consideration the learning and piety of the applicants and that the amount of the annual allowance does not serve the purpose of the subsistence of your family and the expenses of the festival, and recognizing that you are dependants of the Sarkar from old, it appears meritorious and desirable that for the provisions of your expenses, with the annual allowance, a village should be granted in charity as a new inam", and consequently the village in question was granted to them. It is now here stated in the sanad that the purpose of the grant is the maintenance of the festivals above mentioned nor is any stipulation made as to the portion of the income if any which should be allocated to the festivals as distinct from the expenses of the family. This distinguishes the case from those cases which have been quoted by the learned Counsel for the appellants such as the Chinchvad case, Chintaman Balaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (7) and the cases in Irapa bin Malapa Naik v. Apasaheb Irbasapa Desai (8), Collector of Thana v. Hari Sitaram (9) and Rupa Jagshet v. Krishnaji Govind (10), in which there was a grant to the Devasthan as such or in which the income was by the terms of the grant divided in certain proportions, a fixed proportion being set apart for the purpose of the maintenance of the temple or religious services. Some stress has been laid by the learned Counsel for the appellants on the fact that the word Dharmartha appears in two places in the sanad and it is argued that the grant must be considered to be for religious purposes. But if the grant were made to the Brahmin petitioners in consideration of their piety and learning, the grant would still be one which might be described by that word. I agree with the construction which the learned Counsel for respondents has put upon the sanad, viz., that the grant appears to have been in favour of the Brahmin petitioners in view of their having performed certain religious functions and being unable to meet their expenses out of the grant already made to them. In this connection it may be observed that one of the plaintiffs has very clearly admitted, at page 72 of the record, in his deposition that there is another grant out of which the expenses of the festivals are met. This possibly may be the allowance from Par Savgan referred to in the sanad. It is not stated in the sanad that the revenues of the village or any part of them are to be devoted to the maintenance of the festivals in connection with the tombs of Eknath Shasti and Rama Bawa. This taken in conjunction with the finding of the Inam

Commission, the terms of the sanad under the summary settlement, and the manner in which the holders of the inam have dealt with the property as their private property, lead me to hold that the view taken by the learned District Judge on this point is correct and that the grant is not a grant of such a nature that it would be inalienable as being for the support of a religious institution or to meet the expenses of religious observances.

This being the case, the question of res judicata again comes in, because the High Court having held the mortgage binding on Eknath whose right of redemption has been declared to be for ever foreclosed, that decision would be binding on the plaintiffs who are his heirs. That is sufficient for the decision of the appeal but there is further the question of limitation.

The present suit is a suit for a declaration and injunction and as such falls under Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act, the limitation applicable being six years from the date when the cause of action arose. The cause of action in a suit to set aside an alienation arises when the alienation is made and not when the alienation becomes known to the plaintiffs. That has been held in Venkatachella Reddiar v. Collector of Trichinopoly (11). The alienation in this case was as long ago as 1875. The plaintiff attained majority in 1897 and his suit would be barred in 1900, three years later. It has been contended by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the Article applicable is Art. 141. That, however, applies to suits for possession and this is not a suit for possession but a suit for a declaration and injunction. It has been further contended that no cause of action arose to the present plaintiffs until 1921 when at the request of the mortgagees their names were added as co-vahivatdars along with Eknath. But as long ago as 1911 the High Court confirmed the decree in the redemption suit holding that Rs. 10,000 and odd were payable by the mortgagors Inamdars to the mortgagees Bagdes the present respondents Nos. 2 and 3, and again in 1917 on the application of the mortgagees the order declaring the right of redemption of the Inamdars to be for ever barred was made by the High Court. That is an order made in a suit to which Eknath was a party. He subsequently attempted unsuccessfully to get that order reviewed. It is difficult to see why in any case the cause of action should not have arisen to the plaintiffs when the alienation of the alleged Devasathan property by the Inamdars was asserted in a Court and held to be valid and binding on the mortgagors who are the uncles of the present plaintiffs.

There is, of course, in the present case no question of a temple or an idol. The objects of the so-called charity are only the celebration of the death anniversaries of Eknath Shasti and Rama Bawa. But that would not prevent the grant from mentioning that the revenues of the village were to be devoted to the expenses of the observance of those festivals if as a matter of fact the primary object of the grant was the maintenance of the festivals and not rather the maintenance of the family who conducted the festivals. In these circumstances I have no doubt that the finding of the lower Court in this point as regards the sanad is correct. That being so, as a question of the validity of the mortgage could not be raised by Eknath himself, it cannot be raised by the present plaintiffs who are his heirs. Any interest, as I have already stated, which they claim in the alleged charity can only be derived by them from their relationship to the family of the grantees, and I have already referred to the statement in the judgment of the lower Court that it was ultimately admitted that the plaintiffs brought the present suit as presumptive heirs of Eknath. Lastly, a suit of this character is, in my opinion, one in which the cause of action arises at the date when the alienation of the so-called inalienable property is made, and, therefore, in any view of the case the suit is time-barred and the appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Turning now to the cross-objections it has been objected that the learned District Judge was in error in fixing the value of the suit for the purpose of Pleader's fees at Rs. 13,000, viz., ten times the income of the property; the average income is stated to be Rs. 1,300 and it is argued that as the defendants have lent money on mortgage at an average rate of six or six and a half per cent. the value of the property should be sixteen and a half years' purchase which would amount to Rs. 21,000. As regards this point the exact value of the property is uncertain. I do not think there are sufficient materials on record for differing from the view taken by the learned District Judge.

The second point taken is that the Judge

(11) 33 Ind. Cas. 45; 38 M. 1064 at p. 1070.

was wrong in refusing two sets of Pleaders' fees to defendants Nos. 2 and 3. It is contended that under the Bombay Pleaders Act the defendants having employed two Pleaders were entitled to two sets of Pleaders' fees. Sections 20 of the Bombay Pleaders Act says:—

"Where a party has, before the first hearing of a proceeding engaged more than one Pleader the fees of two pleaders may be taxed in the bill of costs in the following cases."

The present case falls under cl. (a) "in any original suit, of which the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 5,000". It is not disputed that there were two Pleaders apart from Mr. Patwardhan who conducted the case on behalf of the defendants. But the learned Judge says that one of the Pleaders was very junior and, therefore, the Judge in the exercise of his discretion did not allow the double sets of Pleaders' fees. The rule, however, is laid down in Tulsi v. Omkar (12), that in cases under s. 20, cls. (a), (b), and (c) of the Bombay Pleaders Act, 1920, the fees of two Pleaders shall be taxed in the bill of costs, unless the Court otherwise directs. The reason given by the lower Court for disallowing the fee of one Pleader on the ground that he was junior appears to me to be somewhat inadequate. I would, therefore, vary the decree by allowing two sets of Pleaders' fees so far as regards defendants Nos. 2 and 3 with costs in proportion. Defendant No. 4, the Secretary of State for India, is of course entitled to his costs.

The remaining applications may be dealt with briefly. The plaintiffs applied to amend their plaint on the ground that by reason of the death of Eknath during the pendency of the suit they became entitled to possession of the property as distinct from the declaration and injunction which they sought at the time the suit was instituted. That application came on for hearing with the appeal and has been objected to by the other side on the ground that it would involve the introduction of questions foreign to the suit as originally brought and might necessitate additional evidence apparently on such questions as adverse possession and the like. It was also suggested that there might be some question as to the relationship of the plaintiffs to Eknath but that position has not been at all expressed. I think in view of the result of the appeal this question has now lost all importance and that it is not necessary to allow the amendment. This application is dismissed with costs. Opponent No. 4 to get his costs separately.

Then the defendants made an application to this Court that security for costs might be taken from the plaintiffs as they were not residents of British India. A rule was issued in that application but no order has been passed as by consent it was to be brought on with the appeal. I may point out that the object of taking security for costs from an appellant is that if an order for security is made and is not complied with the appeal abates. But when an appeal has been heard and decided on the merits, as in the present case, the object of asking for security altogether disappears and, therefore, no order asking for security need be made. No order as to costs.

The remaining application is the one regarding the giving of security by the respondents for the revenues which they recovered from the village during the progress of the suit. For some reason or other this appeal has been five years before hearing. As security has been given the rule will be discharged with costs. The application has very little importance. Costs of this application will follow the result of the appeal.

Nanavati, J.—I entirely agree.

There is only one point on which I think it might be desirable to add a few observations. The central point in this appeal is the construction of the sanad. If the sanad of 1790 did not create a religious endowment in favour of any shrine or religious institution, it follows that the whole case of the appellants falls to the ground. The case rests on the basis that the sanad gives the inam for the purpose of a religious endowment and, therefore, the inam is inalienable. But if the true construction of the sanad is that the inam is a personal inam for the benefit of the grantees, then it is clear that appellants cannot succeed, whatever may be the result as to the contention on the other points in the case. Now it will be seen that in the earlier portion of the sanad the recital is made as to the representations on which the inam was sought and the last sentence of that paragraph runs:—

"Therefore, if the grant of a village were kindly made as a new inam, in charity, we shall arrange about our expenses from it, and invoke blessings for your prosperity."

That is to say the petitioners themselves asked for the inam in order to arrange about their expenses from the grant.

Then in the second paragraph what was taken into consideration by the grantor is also set out and there again it is stated that it appeared to the Sarkar meritorious and desirable that for the provision of their expenses with the annual allowance a village should be granted as a new inam. So that what was asked for and what was taken into consideration was the fact that the grantees had to be provided with their expenses.

And in the final clause of the sanad it is stated that "you, and your sons and grandsons, etc., from generation to generation, should enjoy the inam, along with the annual allowance." As the learned District Judge observes, the Darbar did not show the least interest in these festivals, or in the way in which the grantees were to use the income of the village. The grantor did not even by implication suggest that any portion, leave alone any definite portion of the income of the inam was to be devoted to the festivals which the petitioners were said to be in the habit of observing, and there is not a single clause which suggests that the grant was conditional on a continued celebration of those festivals. In these circumstances I think it is hopeless for the appellants to induce the Court to hold that the sanad confers the inam in favour of a religious endowment. It is quite clear that the inam was for the personal benefit of the grantees and their heirs and that being so, it was clearly alienable by the rightful holder for the time being.

The Chinchvad case, Chintaman Balaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (7) is clearly distinguishable as a definite portion of the revenues of the inam had been at some stage allocated for the purpose of the religious endowment leaving the balance for the benefit of the grantees' family. No argument can, therefore, be founded on this case, which could help the appellants.

First Civil Appeal No. 195 of 1925.

KALIDAS DAMODAR AND OTHERS—

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

RUKSHAMANI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS.

Will—Construction—Charitable trust—Gifts in alternative—Previous gifts invalid but residuary gift valid—Effect—Persons entitled to manage or apply to Court to enforce trust—Death of trustees—Power of sole surviving trustee to appoint by Will.

Generally speaking, if a trust is of a charitable or public nature, the Advocate-General or the Collector is the only person who can apply to the Court to enforce the trust. In the case of a private trust it is the beneficiary interested who can apply. Where a Will provides for the funeral of the testator or the disposal of his body in the performance of which no person has any direct interest, no one can insist on these provisions being carried out. Even the nearest relative of the testator has in that capacity no locus standi to apply to the Court to enforce the provisions of the Will in which no one is directly interested. [p. 169, col. 2; p. 170, col. 2.]

Where a Will provides that if one of the trustees dies, the others may appoint any one in his place and no such appointments are made with the result that only one trustee is left behind, it is not open to such trustee to appoint new trustees by his Will either in his own place or in place of others for the simple reason that by the time the Will operates he ceases to be a trustee. [p. 170, col. 1.]

Where there are no trustees left, the heirs of the testator are the proper persons to manage the trust. Kashinath v. Gangubai (3), followed. [p. 170, col. 1.]

A testator provided in his Will that the residue of his property should be spent in distributing brass vessels or in giving dinner to Brahmans in Shukaltirth or in providing water wells wherever there be scarcity of water and the surplus, if any, should be utilised in the Sadavarta of Shukaltirth. The objection directed against the Will was that the first two objects not being charitable the Will failed entirely:

Held, that the ultimate gift to Sadavarta of Shukaltirth was by itself a good residuary gift, and even if any of the previous gifts failed, the result was that the property in respect of which the gift failed fell into the residue and passed to the Sadavarta. [p. 169, col. 1.]

First Appeal from a decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Broach, in Civil Suit No. 110 of 1925.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with him Mr. K. V. Patel), for the Appellants.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Respondents.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal from the First Class Subordinate Judge at Broach. The relevant facts are that the testator, one Dulab, died on February 20, 1902, having made a Will dated February 17, 1902, by which he appointed five persons as trustees. The last surviving trustee, one Gordhar, died on March 7, 1925. Gordhar by his Will appointed defendant No. 2, in effect, as trustee of the Will of the original testator. Defendant No. 1 is the daughter and heir of Gordhar. The plaintiffs are the heirs of the original testator, Dulab, and they commenced this suit in the year 1925 and claimed, in the first place, that the Will of Dulab is invalid; secondly, and, in the alternative, that if the Will is valid, then according to the true construction of cl. 6 thereof there is an intestacy as to residue and they are entitled under the Indian Succession Act.

The learned trial Judge held that the Will of Dulab was well executed, relying on the facts, first, that it was registered, secondly, that a certificate of succession was obtained, thirdly, on the oral evidence as to attestation, and, fourthly, on the lapse of time which had expired between the date when the Will was made and the date when it was challenged, and Mr. Thakor, in this Court, has agreed that it is not possible for him to challenge those findings.

The next point to determine is as to the construction of the Will. By cl. 4 the testator states that he is the owner of certain properties, and that the same are his own property, and are to be gifted and managed in the manner he proposed thereunder. Then, by cl. 5 he appointed five persons, including Gordhan, to be trustees. Then cl. 6 is the material clause, and by that clause the testator provides that as soon as he dies his trustees should own and possess and manage the properties, and then he provides as follows:—

"The funeral ceremony expenses of my brother Shivalal is left undone. If I am alive I shall do the same, else if I die, my trustees by a majority of votes as they think best according to the custom and my repute in the case should perform the funeral ceremony expenses both of my deceased brother's as well as of mine. Besides the said trustees should do by a majority of votes and as they think best, the Gorani Nat after the death of Bai Amba my aunt (father's sister) who is now living. None should object therein and all objections to the same shall be void."

Then there are some directions to pay legacies, which are not material, and then in sub-cl. (iii) of cl. 6 the testator provides:—

"Whatever properties are left after deductions (of expenses and payment of debts) as in paras. 1 and 2 should be sold of and moneys and credits be collected by the said trustees and out of the said collected amount, the trustees should by a majority of votes utilise the same, with the object of perpetuating my brother's as well as my name either in distributing brass (vessels) or in giving dinner to Brahmins in Sukaltirth, or in providing water wells wherever there be scarcity of water and if any amount is still left in surplus the same should be utilised in the Sadavarta of Shukaltirth."

And then cl. 7 provides:—

"If by chance any of the said trustees dies either before or after my death, the surviving trustees should appoint a new one in his place and that the said newly appointed trustee shall have the same authority and powers as the others."

Mr. Thakor on behalf of the plaintiffs says that the gift under sub-cl. (iii) of cl. 6 of the Will is void. He says that the direction to distribute brass vessels is not charitable and is too vague to be enforced, and he says that the direction to give dinner to Brahmins in Shukaltirth is also not charitable, and, being unlimited in point of time, is void. He agrees that the provisions for providing water wells and the gift to the Sadavarta are both charitable, but he relies on the principle which is, I think, established by the authorities that where gifts are in the alternative and some are charitable and some non-charitable then if the non-charitable gifts are void the whole gift is void.

We have been referred to Mulla's Hindu Law and certain cases therein referred to on the question whether a gift for giving food to Brahmins is charitable, the cases particularly referred to being Lakshmi-shankar v. Vajinath (1) and Dwarkanath Bysack v. Burroda Persaud Bysack (2). I desire to keep an open mind as to that, because I think it is not necessary to decide the point, and I am not sure whether the cases go as far as is claimed. On my reading of the Will the ultimate gift by the words "and if any amount is still left in surplus, the same should be utilized in the Sadavarta of Shukaltirth" is by itself a good residuary gift, and therefore if any of the previous gifts fail the result is that the property in respect of which the gift has failed falls into residue and passes to the Sadavarta. That being so, Mr. Thakor's clients, the plaintiffs, have no interest in the residuary estate.

Mr. Thakor's next point is that even supposing that is so, and assuming that the defendants are the properly constituted trustees of the Will, nevertheless, his clients as the heirs of the testator, have a right to see that the provisions of the Will are carried out. I know of no authority for that proposition. Generally speaking, if a trust is of a charitable or public nature, the Advocate-General or the Collector—that is the officer corresponding to the Attorney-General in England—is the only person who can apply to the Court to enforce the trust. In the case of private trust it is the beneficiary interested who can apply. There are no doubt sometimes provisions in a Will, for instance as to the funeral of the testator or the disposal of his body in the performance of which no person has any direct interest. In such cases, so far as I am aware, there is no one who can insist on these provisions being carried out. It is not, I think, the law that a person who claims to be the nearest relative of the testator has in that capacity a locus standi to apply to the Court to enforce the provisions of the Will in which no one is directly interested.

(1) 6 B. 24.

Then, the next point is as to whether the defendants are the properly constituted trustees of the Will. Clause 7 provides that on the death of a trustee the surviving trustees can appoint any one in his place. Originally there were five trustees, of whom four died, leaving Gordhan, and I have no doubt that Gordhan in his lifetime as the surviving trustee could have appointed new trustees, notwithstanding that cl. 7 refers to the plural "surviving trustees". But in my view cl. 7 does not authorise the last surviving trustee to appoint a new trustee by Will in his own place or in the place of the others. When the Will takes effect he has ceased to be a surviving trustee, and I think, therefore, that the language of cl. 7 does not cover that case, and that the defendants were not, therefore, properly constituted trustees of the Will.

Then, Mr. Thakor says that, if that is so, the plaintiffs, as the heirs of the testator, are the proper persons to manage his estate as the trustees, and for that he refers to a passage in Mulla's Hindu Law at page 440 and to a decision of this Court in Kashinath v. Gangubai (3). I think there is some force in that contention, and that it may well be that there being no trustees the plaintiffs are the persons entitled to manage the trusts of this Will. But the defendants in their evidence say that they have handed over the whole property to the Sadavarta, and if they have done so, and if the Sadavarta is satisfied that they have got everything which they can get, then it seems to me that there is no trust left to manage. There is no evidence that the trustees, either the original trustees or the survivors of them, ever exercised the discretion given to them under cl. 6 (iii) of the Will to apply part of the estate in distributing brass vessels or in giving dinners to Brahmins or in providing water-wells. Having regard to the lapse of time and the impossibility now of getting any evidence as to what the trustees did in the matter, I think, we must assume that the trustees elected not to exercise their discretion by using the testator's property in any of those ways. I think, therefore, that the position is that the Sadavarta of Shukaltirth has become the sole residuary legatee, and, as I say, if, in fact, they have got the whole of the residue then there is nothing to manage. But the evidence of defendant No. 2 seems to me not very satisfactory. He says he has handed over the property to the Sadavarta's trustees, but he does not know their names and it is not suggested that he has executed any legal conveyance, and I am not prepared to assume that the property has all been correctly accounted for.

It seems to me impossible to pass a final order in this matter without ascertaining the views of the residuary legatee, that is to say, the trustees of the Sadavarta of Shukaltirth, and I think that inasmuch as the plaintiffs are asserting that they have a right to manage this property, it is for them to bring the residuary legatee before Court. I think therefore, that the appeal will have to stand over till April 16, in order to enable the plaintiffs to bring before the Court the trustees of the Sadavarta, and, if they think fit, the Advocate-General, and we can then find out what is the proper way of dealing with the matter.

The defendants who say that they have handed over the property to trustees of the Sadavarta should give every facility to the plaintiffs to enable them to find out who those trustees are and effect service upon them, and of course in dealing with the question of costs we shall have regard to the way in which the parties have behaved.

Income Tax Act and assessed to income-tax in British India, are not to be taken into account as part of the total income of an assessee who resides outside British India for the purposes of income-tax assessment. [p. 172, col. 1.]

Where the assessee is a person liable to assessment to Indian income-tax in respect of part of his income, a refund of Indian income-tax is admissible in respect of the sums or dividends received by him from such companies. [ibid]

Certificates under s. 20 of the Income-Tax Act, signed by the principal officer in the United Kingdom of such companies can be regarded as valid certificates for the purpose of s. 48 (1) of the Income-Tax Act and refund granted on their production.

Civil Reference made by the Commissioner of Income-Tax, Bombay Presidency.

Sir Jamshed Kanga, Advocate-General, with him Mr. A. Kirke Smith, Government Solicitor, for the Commissioner.

Mr. Binning, (with him Messrs. Little & Co) for the Assessee.

Beaumont, C. J. - This is a Reference by the Commissioner of Income Tax under s. 66 asking for our opinion on three questions which he states in para. 8 of the case.

It appears that the assessee, Major Goldie, is entitled to income, derived from four sources set out in para. 4 of the case. The first is dividends paid in India by companies registered in British India. The second source is dividends paid in the United Kingdom by companies doing business in British India but registered in London and having their head offices in London, and, I understand, also having their share register in London, though that fact is not stated. The third source is interest earned in British India and the fourth source is income accruing, arising and received outside British India.

The questions arise in respect of the second source, i. e., dividends paid in the United Kingdom by companies doing business in British India, but registered in London and having their head offices in London. The particular companies from which the income is derived are admitted to be companies within the definition contained in s. 2 (6) of the Indian Income Tax Act.

The first question is, whether the assessee is liable to be assessed in respect of income derived from those companies, and it appears to me to be quite clear that he is not so liable. The companies themselves have paid income-tax in respect of income which accrues or arises in India, but the dividends which those English companies pay to the assessee, who is resident in England, are simply a debt payable by an English debtor to an English creditor, and the source from which the debtor obtains the money with which he pays is irrelevant. It seems to me clear that these dividends are not income which accrues or arises in British India, and they are plainly not received in British India. Therefore, by virtue of s. 4 of the Indian Income Tax Act, that income is not liable to assessment.

The second question which arises is as to whether the assessee is entitled to a refund under s. 48 of the Indian Income Tax Act. That section is in these terms:—

"48 (1) If a shareholder in a company who has received any dividended therefrom satisfies the Income Tax Officer...that the rate of income-tax applicable to the profits or gains of the company at the time of the declaration of such dividend is greater than the rate applicable to his total income of the year in which such dividend was declared, he shall, on production of the certificate received by him under the provisions of s. 20, be entitled to a refund on the amount of such dividend (including the amount of the tax thereon) calculated at the difference between those rates."

There is no doubt that the present assessee, Major Goldie, is a shareholder in a company as defined by the Act who has received a dividend therefrom. Therefore, he is a person to whom, prima facie, the section applies. He has then got to satisfy the Income-tax Officer that the rate of income-tax applicable to the profits or gains of the company in question at the time of the declaration of such dividend (which was eighteen pice) is greater than the rate applicable to his total income of the year.

Now, in order to ascertain what his total income of the year is one has to look, first of all, at the definition in s. 2 (15) of the Indian Income Tax Act, which says:—

"'total income' means total amount of income, profits and gains from all sources to which this Act applies computed in the manner laid down in s. 16;"

therefore, he must have a total income to which the Act applies, that is by virtue of s. 4 an income accruing, or arising or received in British India. If he has got such a total income, then it seems to me that he comes within the section. In the case of Major Goldie he has such an income. He is assessable in respect of the first source of income, being dividends paid in India by companies registered in British India, although having regard to s. 14 (2), if the company has paid the tax, the shareholder will not have to pay it over again. He is also assessable in respect of the third source of income, which is interest earned in British India. Therefore, it seems to me that he is entitled to claim a refund.

In ascertaining the amount of his total income for the purposes of calculating a refund the provisions of s. 48 (4) have to be borne in mind. That sub-section does not contain, in my view, a further definition of the total income, but for the purposes of s. 48 it adds certain sources of income to the total income defined in s. 2 (15), and it provides that total income is to include, in the case of any person not resident in British India, all income, profits and gains wherever arising, accruing, or received, which, if arising, accruing or received in British India, would be included in the computation of total income under s. 16. So that for the purpose of ascertaining the total income under s. 48, you have to take the total world income, that is, in the case of Major Goldie, all the sums set out in para. 4 of the case, which I understand to be gross income before any deduction in respect of English or Indian income tax. As I understand from the case that this total world income would be liable to be assessed at the rate of twelve pies, and as the company has been assessed at the rate of eighteen pies I think that the assessee is entitled to a refund at the rate of six pies.

With regard to the actual questions put to us, we are disposed to think that they are too wide to be answered in the actual form in which they are put.

I propose to answer question (1) by saying that dividends received outside British India from sterling companies registered and with their share register in the United Kingdom but satisfying the definition of a company in s. 2 (6) of the Act and assessed to income-tax in British India, are not to be taken into account as part of the total income of the assessee for the purposes of income-tax assessment. No question of super-tax arises, and I do not propose to deal with that.

With regard to question (2), I think the answer should be that the assessee being a person liable to assessment to Indian income-tax in respect of part of his income, a refund of Indian income-tax is admissible in respect of the sums or dividends received by him from the companies referred to in the answer to question (1).

Question (3) has not been argued and it is admitted that the answer should be in the affirmative.

I think I ought to say, in view of the observations of the learned Commissioner appearing in the case, that the question whether the assessee would be entitled to the deduction claimed if he had no income assessable to tax under the Indian Income Tax Act does not arise, but my own view is that in such a case the shareholder has no total income to which the Act applies, and, therefore, s. 48 would have no application in such a case.

No order as to costs.

Murphy, J.—I would answer the questions in the same sense. Major Goldie's income consists of four items. Of these the first was a dividend paid in India by a company registered in British India, and the second a dividend paid in the United Kingdom by a company doing business in British India but registered in London and having its head office in London. The third an item of Rs. 10 interest paid him in India and the last income accruing wholly outside British India. Two of these are items on which income-tax would ordinarily be assessable in India, and one of which is totally exempt from the tax.

The question before us is whether the second kind or (b) income derived from the dividend paid by the company registered in England but doing business in India can be included within the definition of "total" income under s. 23 (3). This is a charging section only and refers to "total" income without defining it. The definition is in s. 2 (15), and is as follows:—

"'total income' means total amount of income, profits and gains from all sources to which this Act applies computed in the manner laid down in s. 16;" and s. 16 includes in total income sums actually exempted from the tax under the proviso to sub-s. (1) of s. 7, provisos to s. 8, sub-s. 2 of s. 14, and sums falling within s. 15. Major Goldie's (b) item of income would fall within sub-s. (2) of s. 14 as having already paid income tax in the hands of the company. But Major Goldie is not resident in India, and the dividend was paid to him by the head office of the company in England. I think that in those circumstances the Act does not apply to this item, and that it cannot be reckoned as part of his total income under the definition.

But, as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, the questions put to us really turn on whether Major Goldie is or is not entitled under s. 14 (2) to a refund of the income-tax already paid on this dividend by the company, being the difference between the rate at which the company has paid, and the rate at which he would have to pay according to his total income.

Major Goldie has some income in India, which is assessable under the Act, though being below the minimum it would not in his case be taxed, and it seems to me that being an assessee, he is entitled to a refund of Indian income-tax on sums received by him as dividend from the company referred to under item (b) on his income.

I, therefore, answer the questions put to us as has been done by the Honourable the Chief Justice.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 27 (2)—Costs of proceedings in higher Court—Discretion of Court.

Section 27 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act, is limited to the proceedings in the Court of first instance, and does not apply to proceedings in higher Courts. Costs of such proceedings are in the discretion of those Courts.

First Appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Thana, in Reference No. 28 of 1921.

[Judgment on the merits was delivered by Murphy, J.]

Beaumont, C. J.—In this case it has been argued that the question of costs is governed by s. 27 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act. That argument involves this that the words in sub-a. (2)

"When the award of the Collector is not upheld, the costs shall ordinarily be paid by the Collector," govern the whole proceedings both in the Court of first instance and in any subsequent Courts of Appeal. I think that is not the right view. I think s. 27 (2) is limited to the proceedings in the Court of first instance. The word 'upheld' would not be applicable to any other Court except the Court of first instance, because that is the only Court in which the question of upholding the Collector's award arises, and in any other Court the question would be as to whether the decision of the lower Court and not of the Collector should be upheld. Moreover, the claimant's argument would give rise to this singular result that if a Collector makes an award which is varied and not upheld in the District Court and the claimant then unsuccessfully appeals to this Court and then to the Privy Council the claimant would be entitled to the costs of these unsuccessful appeals. That cannot, I think, have been intended. I think, therefore, the costs are in our discretion.

Under the Hindu Law if a father's liability arises directly from a criminal act, i. e., an act for which the father may or may not have been successfully prosecuted, but which can be presumed or proved to be criminal on the evidence on the record, the son would not be bound to pay the father's debt. Second Appeal against a decision of the Assistant Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 47 of 1927.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and R. J. Thakor, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. A. Phadnis and H. V. Divatia, for the Respondents.

Patkar, J.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from defendant No. 3 and the joint family estate of the other defendants the sum misappropriated by the deceased Bhimashankar Motiram who was the guardian of the minor appointed by the District Judge of Ahmedabad.

The learned Subordinate Judge passed a decree against the estate of the deceased Bhimashankar Motiram in the hands of the other defendants and the joint estate of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and a personal decree only against defendant No. 3 on the ground that he had signed a statement on 17th August, 1925. Defendant No. 1 is the widow, defendant No. 2 the son, and defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are the brothers of the deceased Bhimashankar. On appeal by the defendants no cross-objections were filed by the plaintiff, and the learned Assistant Judge varied the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and passed a decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and made them personally liable.

It is urged in this second appeal that the decree, in so far as it made defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 personally liable in the absence of any cross-objections, was erroneous, that defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 were not liable personally for the debts of the deceased, and that the son defendant No. 2 was not liable to pay the debt of his father as it was tainted with illegality and immorality.

The learned Assistant Judge had no jurisdiction to vary the decree of the Subordinate Judge and pass a personal decree against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 in the absence of any cross-objections. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the lower Appellate Court had jurisdiction under O. XLI, r. 33, Civil Procedure Code, to pass a personal decree against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4. It appears, however, from the plaint that no personal decree was asked for against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4, but a decree was prayed for against the estate of the deceased Bhimashankar Motiram and against defendant No. 3. In the absence of any claim made in the plaint for a personal decree against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4, we think that the order of the Assistant Judge passing a personal decree against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 was erroneous.

We do not agree with the view of the learned Judge that defendant No. 3 was liable personally for the money misappropriated by the deceased Bhimashankar simply on the ground that he made a statement in August, 1925. There was no consideration for the agreement contained in that statement, and we think that the learned Judge was wrong in passing a decree against defendant No. 3 personally.

We think that defendants Nos. 1 and 4 could not be liable personally for any statement made in the written statement. As regards the liability of defendant No. 2 to pay the debt of his father, there is a conflict of judicial opinion as to the meaning of the word Vyavaharika in the text of Ushanas cited in the Mitakshara, in the commentary on verse 47, and Mayukha Oh. 5, s. 4, p. 15. In the case of Durbar

Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1) it was held that the son was not liable to pay the debt of his father which was not Vyavaharika, i. e., a debt which the father ought not "as a decent and respectable man to have incurred," and the son is answerable for the debts legitimately incurred by his father and "not for those attributable to his failings, follies or caprices." This case has been considered by this Court in the subsequent cases of Ramkrishna Trimbak v. Narayan (2) and Hanmant Kashinath v. Ganesh Annaji (3), and has not met with approval in the decisions of the other High Courts Chhakauri Mahton v. Ganga Prasad (4), Venugopala Naidu v. Ramanadhan Chetty (5), and Sumer Singh v. Liladhar (6). Ayavaharika has been translated in Durbar's case (1) by Knight, J., "as unusual or not sanctioned by law or custom", by Mookerji, J., in Chhakuri's case (4) as "not lawful, usual or customary", and by Sadashiva Ayyar, J., in Venugopala's case (5) as

"not supportable as valid by legal arguments and on which no right could be established in the creditor's favour in a Court of Justice."

The conflict of opinion is also reflected in the commentaries and translations. Apararka explains it as not righteous or proper, and Balambhatta as not for the benefit of the family. Colebrooke translated it as "debts for a cause repugnant to good morals," and Gharpure as "not legal or capable of being recovered by a suit." It is unnecessary to decide in the present case the precise meaning of the words "Vyavaharika."

With regard to the pious obligations of the son to pay the debt of his father, the matter has been fully considered by this Court in the case of Hanmant Kashinath v. Ganesh Annaji (3), where a distinction is made between the liability of the sons to pay the father's debt in respect of money which was misappropriated by the father and money for which the father was liable on account of breach of civil duty. The son is not liable to pay the debt when such debt consists of money misappropriated by the father, and in support of the proposition the cases of Mahabir Prasad v. Bas-

deo Singh (7), Pareman Dass v. Bhattu Mahton (8) and McDowell & Co. v. Ragava Chetty (9) are pertinent. On the other hand, where the debt is incurred by the father on account of a breach of civil duty the son would be liable to pay the said debt though the father may be subsequently liable to be prosecuted for criminal misappropriation, according to the case of Natasayyan v. Ponnusami (10), Kanemar Venkappayya v. Krishna Chariya (11), Gurnatham Chetty v. Raghavalu Chetty (12) and 4 Ind. Cas. 1090, Tirumalayappa Moodelliar v. Veerabudra (13). The decision in the case of Darbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1) has been criticized in Chhakauri Mahton v. Ganga Prasad (4) where it was held that the distinguishing line must be drawn between a criminal offence and a breach of civil duty and where the taking of money is not in itself a criminal offence, a subsequent misappropriation by the father cannot discharge the son from the liability. It would follow from the decided cases that if the liability arises directly from a criminal act, i. e., an act for which the father may or may not have been successfully prosecuted, but which can be presumed or proved to be criminal on the evidence on the record, the son would not be bound to pay the father's debt. I may, in this connexion, refer to the case of Jagannath Prasad v. Jugal Kishore (14). In the present case, the plaintiff alleged in the plaint that the amount was misappropriated by Bhimashankar. The removal of the money from the safe was in itself a criminal offence. In the case of Hanmant Kashinath v. Ganesh Annaji (3) a decree was passed against the father for his failure to account as a trustee and there was no evidence that the property not accounted for was criminally misappropriated by the father who admitted his position as a trustee and the receipt of the property, and the conduct of the father amounted merely to a breach of civil duty as trustee.

The liability in the present case appears on the facts proved in the case to be the direct consequence of an act of the father which would be clearly an offence of criminal misappropriation and therefore it would follow that the son defendant No. 2, would not be liable to pay the debt of the father incurred by means of criminal offence.

I think therefore that the decrees of both the Courts must be reversed and a decree will be passed in favour of the plaintiffs for the amount claimed from the estate of the deceased Bhimashankar Motiram in the hands of defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 4 will bear their own costs throughout and defendants Nos. 1 to 4 will pay the costs of defendant No. 5 throughout.

Barlee, J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover from defendant No. 3 and the joint family estate of the other defendants, who are the widow and the son of Bhimashankar Motiram and his brothers, the sum which they alleged had been misappropriated by the deceased. The only question of fact at the trial was whether the deceased Bhimashankar had misappropriated money belonging to the plaintiff. The money had been in his charge. The plaintiff is a minor and the deceased was his guardian and the money admittedly was kept in the locked box. The deceased on 20th July 1925, suddenly fell ill and went on leave and died three days later. The news of his death was received at the taluka kacheri on 23rd Saturday. The box containing the plaintiff's money was opened on the 25th. In the interval between Bhimashankar's going on leave and the opening of the box, it had been in the keeping of one of the mamlatdar's clerks. In these circumstances it is contended by the learned Counsel for the appellants, i. e., the members of Bhimashankar's family that there can be no inference that it was Bhimashankar who had abstracted the money from the box. It may be conceded that on this evidence a Criminal Court would probably not have found as a fact that Bhimashankar had abstracted the money. But this is not a criminal case, and the onus of proof on a private plaintiff is not nearly so heavy as the onus on the Crown. We cannot say, therefore, that no inference is possible from the evidence which is recorded in the case. That being so it is not permissible for us to interfere with the finding of fact.

For the purpose of this case, then, we must hold that Bhimashankar committed a criminal offence, and the only question before us is as to whether the members of his family, his widow, son and brothers, are personally liable as found by the learned Assistant Judge. I agree entirely with my learned brother that there can be no personal liability on them. One person cannot be personally liable for the debts of a deceased person. I agree also that the liability can be placed only on the estate of the deceased.

The principal question which we have to decide concerns the liability of the deceased's sons's share in the family property. A son though under a pious obligation to pay the lawful debts of his father, is not bound to pay debts due to certain specific causes specified in the texts, and in particular is not bound to pay such as are termed Avyavaharika. This has been interpreted to mean:

"such debts as his father as a decent and respectable man ought not to have incurred," Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1), and the defendants respondent's learned Advocate has tried to bring the debt in suit within this category on the strength of a passage quoted in Hanmant Kashinath v. Ganesh Annaji (3), from the case of Natesayyan v. Ponnusami (10) where it was stated that "upon any intelligible principles of morality a debt due by the father by reason of his having retained for himself money which he was bound to pay to another would be a debt of the most sacred obligation."

But in that case the retention of the money did not amount to a criminal offence and in Hanmant Kashinath v. Ganesh Annaji (3), Scott, O. J., adopted the view of Mookerjee, J., in Chhakauri Mahton v. Ganga Prasad (4), that a distinction must be made between such acts as amount to offences and mere civil breaches of trust. In consequence the estate of the minor appellant is not liable for the debt due to his father's criminal breach of trust.

I agree that the decree of the lower Court must be modified as indicated by my learned colleague.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 7 (11) (cc), 12—
Suit for possession against tenant holding over—Valuation—Decision as to class to which suit belongs—Appeal, competency of.

Section 12, Court Fees Act, applies merely to the valuation of the property for the purpose of calculating the Court-fee when there is no question as to the schedule of the Act with reference to which the valuation is to be made, and it does not apply to cases in which it is contended that the property has been wrongly valued and that the relief has been improperly estimated by putting it under a wrong article of the schedule in the Act. Therefore, an appeal lies against a decision as to the class to which a suit belongs although it does not lie against a decision as to the valuation of the suit in that class. Dada v. Nagesh (1), Studd v. Mati Mahto (2), and Tara Prasanna Chongdar v. Nrisingha Moorari Pal (4), followed. Vithal Krishna v. Balkrishna Janardan (3), referred to. [p. 177, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Patkar, J.—At any rate, the Court can interfere in such cases under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, or s. 5 of Regulation 11 of 1827, if no appeal lies [p. 177, col. 1.]

Under s. 7 cl. (11) (cc), Court Fees Act, one year's rent is the proper valuation of a suit for recovery of immoveable property from a tenant, including a tenant holding over after the determination of the tenancy. [ibid.]

Second Appeal against a decision of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 201 of 1924

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. P. Murdeshwar and M. M. Nadkarni, for the 2nd Respondent.

Patkar, J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover two years' rent and possession of the property with mesne profits and costs. The plaintiff paid Court-fee on Rs. 156-5-0. The learned Subordinate Judge held that he ought to have paid Court-fees on Rs. 3,000 on the ground that the net profits from the land during the next year before the date of presenting the plaint were Rs. 200 and that the value of the land was deemed to be 15 times the net profits under s. 7 cl. 5, sub-cl. (c), Court Fees Act, and on the plaintiff's failure to pay the Court-fee stamp the plaint was rejected. On appeal, the learned Assistant Judge confirmed the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge.

On second appeal, a preliminary point was raised on behalf of the respondent that where the Judge allots a particular kind of suit to any of the classes of the Court Fees Act, he has jurisdiction to decide the question of valuation and under s. 12, Court Fees Act, on appeal would lie. It is urged that in cases falling under s. 7 cl. 4 the valuation rests with the plaintiff and under Art. 17, Court Fees Act, the valuation is fixed and therefore, in these cases the Court has no jurisdiction to decide the question of valuation and an appeal would lie but in other cases the Court has jurisdiction to decide the question and therefore, an appeal would not lie under s. 12, Court Fees Act. On behalf of the respondent reliance has been placed on the decision in Dada v. Nagesh (1), where it was held that an appeal would lie from a decision on the question as to the class under which a suit falls, and reliance is also placed on the decision in Studd v. Mati Mahto (2). It appears somewhat difficult to reconcile the decision of the Full Bench in Vithal Krishna v. Balkrishna Janardan (3) with the remarks in the case of Dada v. Nagesh (1). It was held in Dada's case (1) that an appeal lies against a decision as to the class to which a suit belongs although it does not lie against a decision as to the valuation of the suit in that class. The same view was taken in Studd v. Mati Mahto (2), and Tara Prasanna Chongdar v. Nrisingha Moorari Pal (4). If we follow the decision in Dada v. Nagesh (1) an appeal would lie against the decision of the Subordinate Judge wrongly assigning a suit to a particular class in the Court Fees Act. If, on the other hand, no appeal lies, the Full Bench decision has held that this Court can interfere in revision either under s. 622 corresponding to s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, or Regulation II of 1827 s. 5.

On the merits we have no doubt that the proper valuation for the present suit was Rs. 74-15-6 Rs. 51-5-0 is the amount of the arrears of two years' rent with interest and under cl 11 (cc), s. 7, Court Fees Act, one year's rent Rs. 23-10-6 would be the proper valuation of a suit for recovery of immovable property from a tenant, including a tenant holding over after the determination of tenancy. The plaint in the present case, therefore, would be properly valued if the Court-fees are paid on Rs. 74 15-6. As a matter of fact, the plaintiff has paid Court-fees on valuation of Rs. 156 5 0. We think, therefore, that the learned Judge was wrong in rejecting the plaint.

We would, therefore, reverse the orders of both the Courts rejecting the plaint and direct the Subordinate Judge to try the suit on the merits. Each party to bear his own costs throughout.

Baker, J.—I agree. It has been held by practically all High Courts that s. 12, Court Fees Act, applies merely to the valuation of the property for the purpose of calculating the Court-fee when there is no question as to the schedule of the Act with reference to which the valuation is to be made, and it does not apply to cases in which it is contended that the property has been wrongly valued and that the relief has been improperly estimated by putting it under a wrong article of the schedule in the Act. This has been held by the Calcutta High Court in In re Omrao Mirza v. Mary Jones (5) and Studd v. Moti Mahto (2), by the High Court of Allahabad in Chunni v. Ramdial (6) and by the High Court of Madras in Annamalai Chetti v. Cloete (7) and Kanaran v. Komappan (8). Some difficulty might arise on account of certain expressions in the Full Bench case of Vithal Krishna v. Balkrishna Janardan (3). But as a matter of fact that case has been considered by this Court in Dada v. Nagesh (1), which expressly refers to it, and there is also the case of Sardarsingji v. Ganpatsingji (9), and the effect of all these cases is that an appeal lies against a decision as to the class to which a suit belongs although it does not lie against a decision as to the valuation of the suit in that class. I, therefore, agree that the appeal lies.

That being the case, on the merits there can be no doubt that the suit in question is covered by cl. 11, s. 7, Court Fees Act, and therefore, the fees payable are to be calculated according to the amount of the rent of the immoveable property to which the suit refers payable for the year next before the date of presenting the plaint.

The order of the lower Court, is, therefore, wrong and it should be set aside.

Hindu Law—Family arrangement—Widow's estate under family arrangement, nature of—Succession to widow's estate.

In a family arrangement the compromise is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is. The claim does not rest on contract only but upon a title acknowledged and defined by the contract. Rani Mewa Kunwar v. Rani Hulas Kunwar (6), followed.

The estate which a widow gets under a family arrangement is an absolute estate and forms part of stridhan and on her death devolves on her own her heirs and not on the heirs of her husband. Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v Mahadvo Prasad Singh (2), followed. [p. 181, col. 1.]

Once P died separated from his brothers, the defendants in the present case, leaving behind certain self-acquired property, but the documents relating to it were in the name of the defendants. After his death the property was divided between the widow of P and the defendants. On her death her daughter's daughters claimed the property which had fallen to the share of their grandmother. The defendants pleaded that the property devolved on them:

Held, that the partition between widow of P and the defendants was in the nature of a family arrangement and as such the widow's estate was absolute and devolved upon the plaintiffs. [p. 181, cols. 1 & 2]

Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Baker, J, in Second Appeal No. 458 of 1927, confirming the decree of the District Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 312 of 1925, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge at Chiplun, in Civil Suit No. 32 of 1924.

The judgment of Baker, J. was as follows:— This case involves a point of Hindu Law. The facts are simple, and are set out in the judgments of the Courts below. The plaintiffs, who are the grand-daughters of one Parvatibai, sued to recover possession of the plaint property, their case being that the property is the stridhan property of Parvati, that Parvati's daughter Dwarakabai died during the lifetime of Parvati leaving no male issue, and plaintiffs as her daughters are Parvatibai's heirs. The defendants who are respectively the brother of the husband of Parvati, and his son contend that on the death of the widow, they, as reversioners of the husband of Parvati, are entitled to the property. It is admitted that if the property is the stridhan property of Parvati, her grand-daughters, the present plaintiffs, are the heirs, whereas if it was property of her husband, the defendants are the heirs. It seems that the husband of Parvati, and his brother, defendant No. 1, were separate, and after the death of Pandurang, the husband of Parvati, who died in 1894, a farkhat was passed between Parvati and defendant No. 1 and his son. This is Ex. 38, and the decision of this case will depend on the construction of that document. The first Court was of opinion that the language of the document was perfectly clear and conferred an absolute estate on Parvati in the share allotted to her. He, therefore, awarded the plaintiffs' claim. On appeal the District Judge of Ratnagiri was of a contrary opinion and he, therefore, ordered the suit to be dismissed. Plaintiffs make this second appeal.

Exhibit 38, which is a partition deed dated January, 20, 1902, passed by the present defendants to Parvati, the widow of the deceased brother of defendant No. 1, Pandurang, recites that Pandurang was the sole owner of certain properties and had become separated from the defendants twelve years before his death, his death having occurred seven years before. It then proceeds to allot certain property to Parvati subject to the payment of certain family debts. The important portion of the document is the concluding paragraph, which states:—

"We hereby declare that we have no right, title and interest whatsoever in the said property under any circumstances whether you adopt a son and give it to him or whether you give it to your daughter or whether you alienate to anybody in any way as fullowner thereof."

The learned Judge of the first Court was of opinion that this conferred an absolute estate in the share allotted to her. The learned Judge of the Appellate Court held that Ex. 38 could not be considered to alter the character of the property for intestate succession. He says:—

"I grant that, in her lifetime, Ex. 38 gave Parvati an absolute right over the property. She could have alienated the same or given away the same to anyone. I also grant that as she was given an absolute power of disposal she could have even made a Will about the property according to her pleasure. But in the absence of any alienation by her in her lifetime or any Will made by her about its disposition, I think the property remained as the property held by Parvati as widow of Pandurang and inheritable by her husband's heirs and not her stridhan heirs, see Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu Ammal (1), Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2)

"I can only read in Ex. 38 an intention to authorize Parvati to alienate or give away the property in her lifetime or to will it away but no intention to alter the character of the property so as to make it descendible to her stridhan heirs in case of intestate succession."

Now of the two cases before the learned District Judge, Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu Ammal (1) has not been referred to in arguments and seems to have a very remote bearing, if any, on the point before the Court. It lays down that while one of two daughters cannot by any alienation alter the character of the daughter's estate so far as the right of survivorship or that of the reversioners is concerned, she may alienate her interest in the property or have that interest taken in execution of a decree against her. The bearing of this in the present case is not clear to me, and I need not further refer to this case. The other case, which is a Privy Council case, (Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2)), lays down the following proposition. According to the Mitakshara there is no substantial difference in principle between a woman's property acquired by inheritance and that acquired by partition. It was held, "therefore, reversing the decision of the Courts in India that the share which the mother in a joint Hindu family obtains after the death of the father on partition of the joint family property between the mother and the sons, is not her stridhan, but is given her for her maintenance, and on her death it devolves upon the heirs of her husband and not upon her own heirs. The Privy Council in this decision, after referring to the cases by which it was held that property acquired by inheritance by a woman from her husband is of the same nature as property acquired on partition, say (page 242*):—

"If the share given to a widow on partition is given to her as a substitute for that to which she would be entitled upon inheritance, then, according to the foregoing authorities, it would seem reasonable that it should follow the same rule of descent and revert on her death to her husband's heirs. If, on the other hand, it is given to her by way of provision for her maintenance, it seems equally reasonable that when the necessity for her maintenance has ceased the property should revert to the estate from which it was taken. Of course, the members of a joint family effecting a partition may agree that a portion of the property shall be transferred to the widow by way of absolute gift, as part of her stridhan, so as to constitute a provision for her stridhan heirs; but, in the absence of any such intention, their Lordships do not feel justified in putting property acquired by a widow, on a partition of the joint estate, upon a footing different from that on which property coming to her by way of inheritance has been placed."

It follows, therefore, that the share acquired by a widow on partition does not become her stridhan, but should be regarded in the same light as property acquired by her as heir of her husband, unless there is an express intention to the contrary, and the learned Counsel for the appellants has rested his case mainly on the passage of the judgment of the Privy Council that I have just read, which is at the bottom of page 242. The present case is not precisely a case of inheritance or of partition. From the terms of Ex 33 it would appear that the necessity of a partition or rather of a partition deed between the brother of Pandurang and the widow of Pandurang, arose in this way. Although Pandurang was separate, as the document recites, from his brothers, and although the properties had been acquired by his exertions and were practically his self-acquisition, the documents relating to them appear to have been in the names of other members of the family. This will be found in the earlier portion of the farkhat. It recites:—

"While we were living jointly your husband the deceased Pandurang Vishnu acquired properties by his own exertions. The sale-deed as well as mortgage-deeds of the said properties were taken in the names of those who were present at home on various occasions, but irrespective of these documents your husband Pandurang is the sole owner of the said property. We acquired nothing by our own exertions."

The effect, therefore, of this farkhat is to admit that these properties are the self-acquisition of Pandurang, and although the deeds may be in the name of other members of the family, they as a matter of fact have no right to the property. Now, this is not precisely, in my opinion, a partition of a joint estate, but rather a recognition by the members that these properties are the separate self-acquisitions of Pandurang, and as such would belong to him solely, and on his death, as he died separate from his brothers, his widow would succeed to them in the ordinary course under Hindu Law, but she would, under Hindu Law, succeed to them as the heir of her husband, and would only take a widow's estate in regard to them as laid down by the Privy Council in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2). The argument of the learned Counsel based on the observations of the Privy Council at page 242* is based on a partition by the members of a joint family agreeing that a portion of the property should be transferred to the widow by way of absolute gift. It seems to me that in order that there should be a transfer by the other members of the family of any property to the widow by means of an absolute gift, we must presuppose that the other members of the family had an interest in the property which they could transfer. I can quite see that supposing certain properties were the joint property of the family, so that the persons executing the farkhat had an interest according to their shares in that property, they can very well transfer it to the widow in any way they choose by resigning all their rights in it and thus making it her absolute property, and that it can be contended in such cases that such property would form her stridhan. But this is not quite a case of that character. As I read the farkhat, the admissions of the defendants would show that the properties which they were transferring to the widow were properties in which they never had any interest from the beginning, that is to say, these properties were the absolute property of Pandurang. They were his self-acquisition, and the other members of the family even in the period of jointness had no interest in them as they have admitted. What then is the result? The result, as it seems to me, is that the last paragraph of the Ex. 38, which I have already given, cannot be regarded as a family arrangement by which these persons gave these properties to Parvati in gift, for this reason that they had no interest which they could transfer by way of gift or otherwise, for you cannot of course make a gift of that which does not belong to you. The expressions at the end of the farkhat are merely designed to show that they have no claim upon this property, and it seems to me that Parvati took this property which belonged to her husband as her husband's heir. If that is so, it could not be her stridhan, as it would be property inherited by her from her husband under the ordinary Hindu Law and she takes a widow's estate in it, and on her death it would revert to her husband's heirs. For these reasons I am in agreement with the view taken by the learned District Judge, but not perhaps for precisely the same reasons. I admit that until a very short time ago I was prepared to hold that the concluding paragraph of Ex. 38 evidenced such a family arrangement as is referred to in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh' case (2) by the Privy Council, but on reading Ex. 38 again, I am decidedly of opinion that the admissions made by the male executants of that document show that they did not assert any title at all in those properties which were handed over to Parvati, and, as I have already said, there cannot be any question of a gift of property which does not belong to you. Therefore, the property must be taken to be property inherited by her from her husband, and that being so, under the ruling of the Privy Council, the property at her death would descend in the ordinary course, and does not become her stridhan.

For these reasons I confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

From this judgment a Letters Patent Appeal was filed by the plaintiff.

Mr. Jayakar (with him Mr. K. A. Padhye), for the Appellants.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with him Mr. G. B. Chitale), for Respondent No. 1.

Patkar, Actg. C. J.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of the property in suit by inheritance to their grandmother, Parvatibai, the widow of Pandurang, who died in the year 1924. Defendant No. 1 is the brother and defendant No. 2 is the nephew of Pandurang the husband of Parvatibai.

On January 21, 1922, there was a deed of partition, Ex. 38, between Parvatibai on the one hand and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the other, under which outstandings to the extent of Rs. 2,100 were allotted to the widow and she had to pay debts amounting to Rs. 1,500 to the creditors. The widow, therefore, got property worth Rs. 600. The defendants, on the other hand, got property worth Rs. 1,133 subject to the liability to maintain Rukhmabai, another widow in the family. The material portion of the document is as follows:—

"We hereby declare that we have no right, title and interest whatsoever in the said property under any circumstances whether you adopt a son and give it to him or whether you give it to your daughter or whether you alienate to anybody in any way as full owner thereof."

Parvatibai purchased the equity of redemption in the property in suit which was mortgaged to the family, and paid off the sub-mortgage in favour of a stranger out of her own separate property, and enjoyed the property as full owner from 1902 till her death in 1921.

The learned Subordinate Judge held on the construction of the document that Parvatibai was at liberty to bestow the property on her daughter or to dispose of it as owner in any way she liked, and that the executants had no right whatever over the property and that the document conferred, in terms, an absolute estate upon Parvatibai in the share allotted to her. He, therefore, came to the conclusion that the property was the absolute property of Parvatibai, and that the plaintiffs, her grand-daughters, were entitled to that property by inheritance and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs.

On appeal, the learned District Judge agreed with the construction of the learned Subordinate Judge so far as the power of alienation was concerned, and held that Ex. 38 gave Parvatibai an absolute right over the property, and that she could have alienated the same or given away the same to anyone, and that she could have willed it away at her pleasure, but he was of opinion that the property remained as the property held by Parvatibai as widow of Pandurang and inheritable by her husband's heirs and not her stridhan heirs.

On second appeal, Baker, J., was at first inclined to hold that the concluding paragraph of Ex. 38 evidenced a family arrangement referred to in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2), but eventually came to the conclusion that the document, Ex. 38, should not be regarded as a family arrangement on the ground that the defendants had no interest which they could transfer by way of gift or otherwise, and, therefore, agreed with the view of the lower Appellate Court. Plaintiffs have filed this Letters Patent Appeal.

It is urged on behalf of the appellants that Ex. 38 is a partition-deed in which an absolute estate is given to the widow and falls within the remarks of the Privy Council in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2).

In construing the document, Ex. 38, we have to look to the circumstances existing in 1902, and not at the time of the present litigation. According to the document, Ex. 38, the property comprised in Ex. 38 was the self-acquired property of Pandurang. Pandurang had become separated from the defendants but the documents relating to the lands were taken in the name of the defendants, and it was agreed that the property of Pandurang should be partitioned between Pandurang's widow, Parvatibai, and the defendants. Property to the extent of Rs. 2,100, subject to the payment of debts of Rs. 1,500, was allotted to Parvatibai, and property worth Rs. 1,133 was allotted to the defendants subject to the right of maintenance of Rukhmabai.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the defendants could not alter the devolution of inheritance so far as the property of Pandurang was concerned, and that the document merely evidences an agreement by the defendants not to dispute the alienations made by the widow Parvatibai.

The question depends on the construction of Ex. 38. Parvatibai, described as the full owner of the property, is given a right to alienate property by sale, or mortgage, or by any way whatsoever, and the defendants declared that they had no right, title or interest under any circumstances. It has been held by the Privy Council in the cases of Bhaidas Shivdas v.

Bai Gulab (3), Shalig Ram v. Charanjit Lal (4), and Jagmohan Singh v. Sri Nath (5) that where there are words indicating that an absolute interest is given to the widow, she takes an absolute property. It was observed in the last case that there is no magic in the use of any particular words or form of words and the document must be construed as a whole and if it confers the estate out and out with no reservation, right of alienation, would be included even if not expressly conferred. In Ex. 38 the power of alienation is expressly conferred. These decisions relate to Wills or gifts in favour of a wife or widow. But in the case of a partition deed between a Hindu widow and the other male members of the family, it was held by the Privy Council in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2) that the estate a widow gets by right of inheritance stands on the same footing as the estate acquired on partition subject to this condition that the members of the joint family effecting the partition may agree that a portion of the property shall be transferred to the widow by way of absolute gift, as part of her stridhan, so as to constitute a provision for her stridhan heirs. If this document is construed to be a partition-deed, we think that the absolute estate conveyed under Ex. 38 would fall within the remarks of the Privy Council at page 131* in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2). It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondents that the document is not, in fact, a partition-deed, that the property belonged to Parvatibai's husband and the defendants had no right to give an absolute estate to the widow and had no right to alter the mode of devolution.

I think, however, in the circumstances of the present case, as the deeds relating to these lands stood in the names of the defendants there was a dispute between the parties as to the title relating to this property, and the document evidences a family arrangement which settled the dispute between the parties and was binding on them.

It is urged on behalf of the respondents that Ex. 38 cannot be construed to be a family arrangement, because the defendants had no right to the property and that the property belonged to Parvatibai's husband. When there is a settlement of a dispute or a family arrangement it must be construed as a settlement of the dispute between the parties in whom there is presumed to be an antecedent title of some kind, according to the view taken by the Privy Council in Rani Mewa Kunwar v. Hulas Kunwar (6) (page. 166)*:—

"The compromise is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is. The claim does not rest on contract only, but upon a title to the land acknowledged and defined by the contract."

I may also refer in this connection to the case of Krishnaji v. Motilal (7). In Ram Charan Ramanuj Das v. Gobinda Ramanuj Das (8) it was held that when two parties enter into an agreement, whether it be of compromise or in some other respect, each procures the advantage of the agreement from the other, and no further advantage need be looked for to support the agreement. In the present case the defendants were not entitled to any property of Pandurang and under the agreement they were given property to the extent of Rs. 1,100. That, in our opinion, is sufficient consideration for the agreement on the part of the defendants to give an absolute title to the widow under Ex. 38, and the document, Ex. 38, in our opinion, under the circumstances of the present case, must be regarded as a family arrangement between the parties. The documents relating to the lands stood in the name of the defendants and this circumstance would vest the apparent legal title in the defendants though the properties were the self-acquisitions of Pandurang, the husband of Parvatibai. There was, therefore, uncertainty as to the rights of the rival claimants, and Ex. 38 composed the disputes between the parties and must be considered as a family arrangement by a settlement based on the acknowledgment of a pre-existing title in the parties to the document. There was no intention to alter the devolution of the estate as at the date of the document Dwarkabai, the daughter of Pandurang, was living and would have succeeded to the property in any event. We think, therefore, that the estate which was given to the widow under Ex. 38 was an absolute estate and formed part of her stridhan, and, therefore, the plaintiffs as the granddaughters of Parvatibai are entitled to succeed to this property in preference to the defendants who are the reversioners.

With regard to the house in suit, it has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that it was acquired by Parvatibai out of her own funds, and it appears from the evidence that he was in possession of independent means. We think that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is right, and we would, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs throughout on the respondents.

Murphy, J.—The question to decide is, who is the heir of Parvatibai who died in 1921, and the answer depends on the character of the property and the parties' previous dealing with it, for if it is stridhan it should go to her grand-daughters, and if not to the defendants, the reversioners of Parvati's deceased husband.

It appears that on Parvati's husband's death the greater portion of the property stood in the defendants' names was in their possession, and had been long enjoyed by them. It is obvious that as against the widow they were in a strong position. There is no direct evidence as to what happened, but it must have been what is clearly brought out by Ex. 38. This document opens with admissions made by defendants, much against their interest, in view of the facts I have mentioned in connection with their relation to the property. They admit that the property had been self-acquired by Parvatibai's husband, that he was separate from them, his brothers, at his death and that they had themselves no interest. It then recites an agreement to divide it with the widow, the greater part going to the defendants, while they recognise the widow's right to the remainder, to be dealt with as her absolute property, and not as widow's estate. At the time, the heir was Parvatibai's daughter Dwarkabai, but since her death in 1911, Dwarkabai's daughters can only inherit her stridhan.

The original Court's view was that, by the agreement, the defendants had undertaken to allow the property going to Parvatibai to be hers absolutely, so far as they were concerned, and decreed the suit. The learned District Judge took another view, and reversed the decree holding that, though Parvatibai might have disposed of it in her lifetime, it remained the estate of her husband during her widowhood, and on her death reverted to his heirs. My learned brother, Baker, upheld this view on second appeal, but gave leave to appeal to a Bench. His view was that defendants had originally no interest to give away, and could, therefore, confer nothing on Parvatibai. But actually they had a paper title, documents and possession. It seems to me that the admissions in Ex. 38 were really part of a price for what they got, and the position really was that in consideration of getting a present portion they undertook to waive any right they might acquire in future as reversioners—that is, so far as they were concerned, to recognise that it became Parvatibai's absolutely. The terms of the instrument are very wide and as things have turned out, though the reversion was then a possibility it has now opened, and it seems to me that the case falls within the explanation in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2). It is not, I think, a question of altering the devolution of property, only of an agreement for consideration not to claim the portion reserved to Parvatibai as reversioners, should the reversion open out and as such, I think, a perfectly legal settlement.

I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment whose decree should be restored and the appeal allowed.

Civil Application No. 1038 of 1930.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109—Letters Patent (Bombay High Court), cl. 39—Privy Council, leave to appeal to—High Court decree in pursuance of directions from Privy Council—Application for leave to appeal, whether competent.

Where the High Court in pursuance of the directions given by the Privy Council takes account between the parties and passes a decree on the basis of those accounts, an application for leave to appeal against such decree is not competent either under s. 109, Civil Procedure Code, or cl. 39 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court as the decree cannot be said to have been passed on appeal to the High Court. [p. 185, col. 1.]

Clause 39 of the Letters Patent first refers to a final judgment, decree or order made on appeal i. e. made on appeal on the Original Side or under the Civil Procedure Code, or appeals from the mofussil and the latter part of cl. 39 refers to a final judgment, decree or order of the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction made by individual Judges of the High Court or by a Division Bench from which an appeal does not lie to the High Court under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. [ibid.]

Mr. B. J. Desai (with him Mr. R. G. Rao), for the Applicant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. B. J. Thakor), for the Opponents.

Patkar, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from the decision of the High Court after taking accounts in pursuance of the directions given by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

The appeal to the Privy Council arose in connection with certain suits brought by one Kevaldas and his family and subsequently one Tulsidas to enforce certain deposit receipts given by the company on October 31, 1911. Kevaldas alleged that he agreed with the company to have preference shares allotted to him to the extent of the face value of the debts owing by the company to him and his nominees represented by the amount of the deposit receipts, with accrued interest and some addition to current account which was incurred between October 31, 1911, and the actual date of his resignation. The company contended that there was no binding agreement in that behalf and that in any event there was due to the company a sum exceeding the amount of the receipts and that no money was due to him on the cross claim of the company.

The Subordinate Judge found in favour of Kevaldas that there was a binding agreement to allot preference shares in satisfaction of the debt substantially represented by the deposit receipts and decreed specific performance accordingly. The High Court found against Kevaldas on both the points. The Privy Council held that at most the alleged contract with reference to the preference shares was mainly to satisfy a just claim, and if Kevaldas by reason of the cross claim had really nothing due to him, he was not entitled to the issue of preference shares, and inasmuch as the balance was in favour of the company, the suit failed.

The Privy Council after confirming the finding of the High Court that the company was entitled to recover repayment of the sum paid to Tulsidas, viz, Rs. 86,000, the parties were given an opportunity of agreeing to the figures if possible on the footing of the view expressed. All the parties agreed to the convenient procedure of expressing in one decree the financial result of the relations between the parties including the decrees standing against each party, and though the appellant substantially failed, the decree of the High Court was varied, and the High Court was directed to take an account to ascertain how much should be credited to Kevaldas in respect of the amount of the deposit receipts with interest and in respect of the dividends claimed to be deducted by the respondents in the execution schedule, the dividends to be credited as they fell due with interest, if any interest was payable under the articles. On the other hand, the company were entitled to be credited with the payment to Tulsidas and to the decree of Rs. 1,46,453, with interest less the sums realised in execution. Marten, O. J. and Murphy, J., thereupon, on April 1, 1930, gave certain directions to the Commissioner as to the manner in which the account should be taken, and on April 14, confirmed the Commissioner's report and directed the plaintiff to pay to the defendant company the sum of Rs. 1,33,723-6-10 with interest at six per cent. from March 31, 1930. The final decree passed by the High Court, therefore, in pursuance of the directions given by the Privy Council to take an account between the parties.

It is urged on behalf of the opponents that the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council does not fall under s. 109, cl. (a), of the Civil Procedure Code, as it is not a judgment, decree or order passed on appeal by the High Court, nor does it fall under cl. 39 of the Letters Patent on the ground that it is not a final judgment, decree or order of the High Court made on appeal. It is contended on behalf of the applicants that though the decision of the High Court is not a judgment, decree or order passed on appeal within the meaning of s. 109, cl. (a), or the first part of cl. 39 of the Letters Patent, it is a final judgment, decree or order of a Division Court from which an appeal shall not lie to the said High Court under the provisions contained in cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, and, therefore, an appeal would lie to the Privy Council on the ground that it is a final decree or order passed in appeal, though not strictly on appeal, by the High Court.

The decree passed by the High Court is in pursuance of the directions of the Privy Council and is not passed on appeal by the High Court. If the High Court had sent down the case to the Subordinate Judge for disposal, and an appeal had been filed by any of the parties against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, the judgment or decree passed by the High Court would have been a judgment or decree passed on appeal. A judgment, decree or order passed by the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction is not necessarily a judgment, decree or order passed on appeal.

The question is discussed in the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. British India Steam Navigation Company (1). The relationship of a superior and inferior Court and the power on the part of the former to review the decisions of the latter must be present in order to constitute jurisdiction on appeal: see Chappan v. Moidin Kutti (2). We are not concerned here with the precise point decided in these cases to the effect that an order passed by the High Court in the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction was an order made on appeal within the meaning of cl. 39 of the Letters Patent.

In Wharton's Law Lexicon, 13th Edition, "appeal" is defined as the judicial examination of the decision by a higher Court of the decision of an inferior Court. According to Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, Vol. 1, page 98,

"an appeal is the right entering a superior Court and invoking its aid and interposition to redress the error of the Court below."

See Attorney-General v. Sillem (3).

In the present case the order passed by the High Court was in pursuance of the directions given by the Privy Council and was not passed in any proceedings taken by the parties in order to review or modify the decision of an inferior Court. In Rajah Enaet Hossein v. Ranee Rowshun Jahan (4) a distinction is made between a final judgment, decree or order made in the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction and one made on appeal, and it was held that an order made by a High Court in an application to review its judgment in a case of appeal to the Privy Council previously heard was not an order made on appeal within the meaning of cl. 39 of the Charter so as to enable the Court to admit an appeal against such order to Her Majesty in Council. A similar view was taken in Sunder Koer v. Chandishwar Prosad Singh (5).

I think, therefore, that the judgment, decree or order from which the application for leave to appeal is made in the present case is not one made on appeal though it was made in its appellate jurisdiction in pursuance of the directions given by the Privy Council presumably with the consent of both the parties. The application, does not, therefore, fall under s. 109, cl. (a), of the Civil Procedure Code, or the first part of cl. 39 of the Letters Patent.

This position is not seriously contested on behalf of the applicants, but it is contended on their behalf that the judgment, decree or order of the Court in the present case was a final judgment, decree or order of a Division Court from which an appeal does not lie to the said High Court under the provisions contained in cl. 15. I think that cl. 39 of the Letters Patent first refers to a final judgment, decree or order made on appeal i. e., made on appeal on the Original Side or under the Civil Procedure Code on appeals from the mofussil, and the latter part of cl. 39 refers to a final judgment, decree or order of the said High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction made by individual Judges of the High Court or by a Division Bench from which an appeal does not lie to the said High Court under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. It is contended on behalf of the applicants that cl. 39 deals with three categories of cases, first, a judgment, decree or order made on appeal; secondly, made in exercise of its original jurisdiction, and, thirdly, by a Division Court from which no appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, and it is, therefore, contended that though the present judgment, decree or order is not passed on appeal, it is a judgment, decree or order of a Division Court from which no appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. I think that cl. 39 deals only with two categories of cases, first, judgment, decree or order made on appeal, and, secondly, made in exercise of original jurisdiction whether by individual Judges or by a Division Court from which no appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. This view is consistent with the decision in

An Attorney, In re (6), where it was held that cl. 39 of the Letters Patent empowers the High Court to declare the fitness of an appeal to the Privy Council in any matter not being of criminal jurisdiction, if it is a final judgment, decree or order of the Court made on appeal or in exercise of original jurisdiction.

I think, therefore, that the present application does not fall either under cl. (a) of s. 109 of the Civil Procedure Code or cl. 39 of the Letters Patent. The only remedy, in my opinion, for the applicants is to apply for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

For these reasons I would discharge the rule with costs.

Murphy, J.—The first question in this application is whether under the provisions regulating appeals to His Majesty's Privy Council we have power to grant leave to the petitioners.

These proceedings are the last tangle of a web of litigation in which one Kevaldas, formerly the agent of the Bharatkhand Cotton Mills at Ahmedabad, has involved himself and the Mill. The many disputes have been going on since 1909. They culminated in three appeals to His Majesty in Council which were consolidated into Privy Council Appeal No. 118 of 1927, and were disposed of by their Lordships on November 1, 1929, the result being a variation of this Court's decrees, by deleting paras. 2 and 5 of the final one. As their Lordships were unable to obtain the precise figures to find place in the final decree, they were pleased to direct that this was a task which must devolve on the Courts in India and the matter so came before a Division Bench of this Court of which I was a member, judgment being delivered by the Honourable the Chief Justice (Sir Amberson Marten) on April 1, 1930 and April 14, 1930—the second judgment being on the report of the Commissioner for taking accounts. The main points arising for decision then were, whether a sum of Rs. 47,672 recovered in execution in March, 1920, should be paid towards principal, or go to reduction of interest, the decision being in favour of the second alternative; whether interest should be allowed on dividends, a question decided in the negative; and, lastly, whether interest on the deposit receipts should be simple or compound, the answer given being that it should be simple.

Lastly, it was decided that the accounts on these lines should be taken by the Commissioner of this Court. Accounts were accordingly taken and the Court adopted the learned Commissioner's report, and made a decree for Rs. 1,33,723-6-10. These findings are the petitioner's grievance, expressed in a petition covering fifty-one paragraphs. Seth Kevaldas did not appear before the Commissioner, for reasons stated in the petition, and those proceedings were ex parte.

Mr. B. J. Desai for the petitioners has frankly admitted that owing to the nature of the proceeding in this Court, the question whether petitioners have a further right of appeal, or not, is not free from doubt; and we have not been able to find a precedent.

The provisions of ss. 109 and 110 of the Civil Procedure Code cover orders passed "on appeal." The decree in question was made under the direction of their Lordships of the Privy Council in pursuance of that Court's decree, and did not come before this Court "on appeal," it having already dealt with the matter on appeal. Mr. Desai accordingly leans more towards making out his clients' right to be granted leave by cl. 39 of the Letters Patent. Prima facie, the provisions of cl. 39 apply to proceedings on the Original Side of this Court rather than to matters coming to it from the District and Subordinate Courts in the Presidency, as does this one—but this objection is probably not insuperable.

Sections 109 and 110 seem to me clearly not to apply. This Court's decree does not fall under cl. (b) and cannot come within cl. (a) for it was not passed "on appeal" unless we hold that it is really a continuation of the three original appeals, which, in view of the intervening decree of a higher Court, cannot be the case. In a sense, it may be said to be a final decree, a preliminary one only having been made by His Majesty's Privy Council; but here again it is not on appeal. I believe the case does not fall under cl. (c) either.

The provisions of cl. 39 of the Letters Patent are as follows, omitting now unnecessary expressions and phrases:—

"may appeal to Us...in any matter...from any final judgment, decree, or order of the [said High Court... made on appeal, and from any final judgment, decree, or order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by Judges of the said High Court, or of any Division Court, from which an appeal, shall not lie to the High Court under the provisions contained in the fifteenth clause of these presents."

Mr. Desai's argument has been that there are three classes of cases contemplated:

- (i) orders made on appeal,
- (ii) in exercise of original jurisdiction,
- (iii) in exercise of either original or appellate jurisdiction by a Division Court from which there is no appeal to the High Court.

He would bring this order within the last class, and so base the petition now in question.

I think that the clause cannot be read in this way—the plain intention of the clause is—I believe—to make provision for two classes of cases only, and the third class can only be extracted from it by reading in what is not there, for the expression "made in the exercise of original jurisdiction" appears to govern the following clause "or by any Division Court," which is not, I think, a third term, importing orders not made on appeal or in the exercise of original jurisdiction, but all other orders, whether in the first, or second class made by a Division Court. Had this been the intention it would have been easy to express it clearly otherwise, and since it has not been done, I must conclude that it was not the object of the Letters Patent.

I agree, therefore, with the order pronounced by my learned brother Patkar, J.

† Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 34.—Interest subsequent to date of suit—Power to award though not claimed in plaint.

Having regard to the terms of s. 34, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has power to award interest after suit whether claimed specifically in the plaint or not.

First Appeal against a decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia.

Mr. Oka, (with him Mr. A. A. Adarkar for Mr. M. V. Bhat), for the Appellant.

Judgment—This is an appeal from an order of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia. The plaintiff was suing on the promissory note for a sum of Rs. 6,725 and interest at 12 per cent. per annum. The learned Judge gave judgment for the plaintiff holding that the amount claimed on the promissory note had been advanced in cash and not as the defendants contended merely in account and at the end of his judgment he says:—"Since the plaintiff has not claimed any interest subsequent to the date of the suit, I pass no order for the payment of any such interest to him." Then the actual order he makes is that the defendants do pay to the plaintiff the amount claimed and costs by annual instalments of Rs. 900 each and then there are provisions as to the dates of payment of the instalments and as to what is to happen if default is made. The judgment was given on November 8, 1927, and apparently on November 15, 1927, the Pleader for the plaintiff made an application to the learned Judge to alter his order in respect of interest after suit. The plaintiff's case was that it was intended that interest after suit should be asked for in the plaint and such interest would have been asked but for a mistake of the Pleader's clerk in copying the plaint. The application was heard by the learned Judge on February 19, 1928 and he then says:—"It is a pity that the applicant's Pleader did not read the plaint before he filed it in Court or while the evidence was being recorded. Had he taken care to read the plaint at least when the evidence was being recorded and made even an oral request to the Court that his client desired to claim subsequent interest also and that the same might be awarded by the Court, the Court would certainly have considered that request." Then the learned Judge goes on to point out that interest subsequent to the date of the suit is discretionary and he says he has exercised his discretion against the plaintiff and that he has no power to alter his order and that if the applicant is not satisfied, his remedy lies in appeal. But it is to be noticed that the learned Judge does not say in his supplemental judgment that had he appreciated that he had power to give interest subsequent to suit, though not asked for in the plaint, he would have done so at any particular rate. Had he said that, it would have helped us in dealing with this matter. If the learned Judge meant to say by his original judgment that he had no jurisdiction to grant interest after the suit because it was not asked for in the plaint, I think he was wrong because it seems to me that having regard to the terms of s. 34 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court has power to give interest after suit whether claimed specifically in the plaint or not. But that is not the fair result of the original and supplemental judgments. I think the learned Judge exercised his discretion, and in so doing took into account the fact that interest after suit had not been claimed. I do not think that he meant to say that his sole reason for refusing interest after suit was that it was not claimed and that he would have given it had it been claimed. The defendants were agriculturists and the order for payment is by instalments and I am not satisfied that the learned Judge would have made the same order for payment by instalments if he had been awarding interest after suit. The matter is a discretionary one and I do not think there is any ground here on which we can properly interfere with the discretion exercised by the learned Judge. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed.

Criminal Application No. 202 of 1931.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Sch. II—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 124-A—Sedition case, trial of—Courts competent to try—Magistrate's discretion as to forum of trial—Consideration governing discretion—Interference with Magistrate's discretion by High Court—Accused, right of.

Under the Criminal Procedure Code, Sch. II, an offence under s. 124-A, Penal Code, is triable by the Court of Session, Chief Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class specially empowered. The Magistrate has a discretion to decide in what way the case shall be tried having regard to the alternatives given by the schedule. The Magistrate must have regard to the importance of the case and to the fact that the maximum penalty under the section is transportation for life. He must consider also whether if he sends the case to the Court of Session there will be Jury assessors and in that connection he may consider which of the two tribunals his own or the Court of Session is the more satisfactory tribunal for deciding the case. Though the Magistrate's discretion is subject to review by High Court, the High Court will not interfere with his discretion except on certain definite grounds. Emperor v. Krishnaji Prabhakar (1), commented upon. [p 188, col. 1.]

The Legislature does not provide that in every case in which the trial at Sessions will enable the accused to have a Jury he is entitled to that privilege. [p. 188, col. 2.]

Mr. Munshi (with him Messrs. Manilal Kher, Ambalal and K. N. Dharap,) for the Applicant,

Mr. P. B. Shingne, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—In this case the petitioner is about to be charged under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, the nature of the offence being that he made a speech in which it is alleged that there were seditious passages, and he now applies that the First Class Magistrate, Alibag, in whose Court the case is pending, may be ordered to commit the case to the Court of Session at Thana for trial.

Now, under Sch. II to the Criminal Procedure Code it is provided that the method of trial for offences under s. 124-A may be either the Court of Session, Chief Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Magistrate of the First Class specially empowered by the Local Government in that behalf. In the present case the matter has been inquired into by a Magistrate of the First Class specially empowered by the Local Government at Alibag, and he has expressed the view that if he thinks a prima facie case is made out against the accused he will frame a charge and try the case himself. Now, it seems to me that under the Criminal Procedure Code the Magistrate has a discretion to decide in what way the case shall be tried having regard to the alternatives given by the schedule. No doubt that discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner. The Magistrate must have regard to the importance of the case and to the fact that the maximum penalty under the section is transportation for life, though if he tries the accused himself he cannot give a longer term of imprisonment than two years. He must consider no doubt also whether if he sends the case to the Court of Session there will be Jury or assessors and in that connection he may consider which of the two tribunals, his own Court or the Sessions Court is the more satisfactory tribunal for deciding the case. No doubt also his discretion is subject to review by the High Court. But if we are asked to review the Magistrate's discretion we can only do so on certain definite grounds, and as far as I can see, no grounds are suggested in this case which would not apply to practically every case under s. 124-A.

We were much pressed with the decision of this Court in Emperor v. Krishnaji Prabdkar (1). In that case the seditious statement had been published in the accused's newspaper which had a very wide circulation, and therefore, on the facts the case is distinguishable from the present case. Both the learned Judges who decided that case disclaimed the intention of laying down a rule that in every case under s. 124-A the proper tribunal was a Sessions Court. But with all deference to the learned Judges I am bound to say that some of their reasons seem to me to tend to that result. They rely, for instance, on the fact that under s. 124-A the maximum penalty is transportation for life, and they express the view that a Jury is the more appropriate tribunal for cases under the section. We have, however, to face the fact that the Legislature has not seen fit to provide that in every case in which the trial at Sessions will enable the accused to have a Jury he is to be entitled to that privilege. It seems to me that if we interfere with the discretion which the learned Magistrate has exercised in this case we shall in effect be striking out of the schedule of the Code the provision that offences under s. 124-A may be tried by a Magistrate.

We have no jurisdiction to do that, and, in my opinion, there is no ground on which we can interfere with the discretion of the Magistrate. The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Barlee, J.—I agree. Mr. Munshi's first argument was that the accused, who is an editor of a newspaper and a publicist of some distinction in Maharashtra should be given the benefit of a Jury trial on that account. I cannot agree with him that the position in life of an accused person should weigh with us in any way.

His second argument was that a Jury will be better able to understand the case since its decision will depend upon the interpretation of speeches and an estimate of the probable effect which the words used by the accused if they are proved to have been used by him, must have had on the general public. This argument, too, I cannot accept. It seem to me, from my experience of Juries in the mofussil that a trained First Class Magistrate of experience is far more likely to be able to understand the evidence and to interpret it correctly than a chance collection of gentlemen who have no training in such matters.

The real question in these matters is, in which Court will there be the fairer trial, or rather, as the onus is on the applicant, whether it is likely that the trial before the First Class Magistrate, Alibag, will be at all unfair? This, I take it, is the real reason for his application. Mr. Munshi very properly has not said anything against the Magistrate, but after all the Magistrate is a Government servant, and in a case in which Government are peculiarly concerned, naturally an accused person may have some apprehension that there will be some bias in favour of the Government in the mind of the Magistrate. This view I can sympathize with, but in my opinion it cannot prevail. We must take the law as it stands and the law is that a case of this nature may be tried by a First Class Magistrate, a Government servant, in spite of the fact that in all such cases Government are directly interested. There is no provision for a Jury trial as no doubt there would have been, had the Legislature thought that in such cases an accused person should be given the benefit of trial by a Jury of his own countrymen. For this reason I agree with his Lordship the Chief Justice that we cannot accede to the request of the applicant.

Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s. 11—Scope and object of—'Fact', meaning of—Order by City Survey Officer whether an act—Civil suit, when lies.

Section 11, Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, is applicable to an order or decision of a City Survey Officer. The word 'act' in s. 11 of the Act is wide enough to cover a judicial or a quasi-judicial act i.e., the passing of an order or decision by a Revenue Officer. [p. 189, col. 2.]

Section 11 requires that all appeals allowed by law must be availed of before a civil suit can be filed for the object of the section is to protect the Government from being exposed to law suits out of the orders of its subordinate officers before its superior officers have been afforded the opportunity of considering and it may be, of disallowing the executive orders of its subordinate officials. [ibid.]

Where an order by a City Survey Officer has been confirmed on appeal to the Collector, a civil suit is competent for no further appeal to Commissioner is necessary to be filed in such cases. [p. 191, cols. 1 & 2.]

First Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Broach and Panch Mahals in Civil Suit No. 15 of 1925.

Mr. B. G. Rao, Assistant Government Pleader, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. A. Adarkar, for Mr. M. H. Mehta, for the Respondents.

Patkar, J.—The question urged on behalf of the appellant in these appeals is whether the suits are barred under s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act X of 1876. The learned District Judge held that s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act did not apply because s. 11 contemplates an act i.e., a positive act of dispossession and would not cover an order or decision by the City Survey Officer. We think the learned District Judge erred in holding that the section did not apply to an order or decision by the City Survey Officer. The word "act" is wide enough to cover a judicial or a quasi-judicial act, viz., the passing of an order or decision by a Revenue Officer. Section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act contemplates the presentation of all such appeals allowed by law before bringing the suit. All such appeals would refer to appeals against the act or omission. Section 203 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, Bombay Act V of 1879, prescribes an appeal against the decision or order passed by a Revenue Officer. Section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act would be rendered nugatory if the contention that act does not include an order or decision were accepted. In Natha bin Naroji v. Secretary of State for India (1), it was held that passing an order is clearly an act and so comes within the provision of s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. The section is not a complex statute of limitation for protection of Government, but the object, as stated in Ranchod v. Secretary of State for India (2) is to protect Government from being exposed to law suits arising out of the orders of its subordinate officers before its superior officers have been afforded the opportunity of considering, and, it may be, of disallowing the executive orders of its subordinate officials.

In Dayal v. Secretary of State (3), where a suit was filed for reversal of order of the Collector directing removal of an encroachment and for an injunction, it was held that the omission to file an appeal from the Collector's order to the Revenue Commissioner or Government barred the suit under s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act.

(2) 22 B. 583 at p. 587.

(3) 59 Ind. Cas. 122; 22 Bom. L. R. 1069.

In Sakharam v. Secretary of State (4) it was held that s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act did not apply in the circumstances of that case, because the act or omission which was the cause of action was not an order or decision in respect of which there was a right of appeal under the Bombay Land Revenue Code. The result would have been different if the act was an order or decision against which there was a right of appeal. As a matter of fact, appeals had been presented though beyond the period of sixty days, and it would appear from page 335* that the District Judge felt that he would not be justified in relying on the bar under s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act on the authority of Ranchod's case (2). The act complained of in that case appears to be an act of Government in giving the river bed for cultivation and was not an order or decision of a Subordinate Officer against which an appeal lay.

In Nathuram v. Secretary of State (5), the decision is based on the ground that there was no order of a Revenue Officer, the plaintiffs were allowed to continue to hold the land rent-free, no opportunity was given to the plaintiffs to put forward their case, and no order or decision was passed but only notice of demand to pay assessment was given all of a sudden.

It has been held in Anant Nulkar v. Secretary of State (6), following the decision in Dongar walad Dagadu Patil v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 252 of 1915, decided by Beaman and Heaton, JJ., on January 30, 1918, Unrep.) that if an act is preceded by an order, s. 11 would apply. In Dongar walad Dagadu Patil v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 252 of 1915 decided by Beaman and Heaton, JJ. on January 30, 1918, Unrep.) it was held that the plain meaning of s. 11 is that where acts are done under the orders of the Revenue Authorities, no suit will lie in respect of such acts until the aggrieved party has exhausted his rights of appeal against the order or orders, and that the intention was to prevent the aggrieved party from running prematurely to Courts before they had obtained the final decision of the highest Revenue Authority to whom they could go for much more summary justice. In Bhikhabhai Doelabhjee v. Secretary of State (1919 F. A. No. 2 of 1916, decided by Macleod, C. J. and Heaton, J., on July 28, 1919, Unrep.) the same view was taken and it was observed as follows :—

"This undoubtedly is a suit against Government on account of an act of a Revenue Officer, the act being the issuing to the plaintiff of a notice under s. 202 of the Land Revenue Code requiring him to vacate certain land. Now no appeal whatever was presented in this matter to any superior Revenue Officer. But such an appeal might have been presented as is enacted by s. 203 of the Land Revenue Code which provides for appeals against decisions or orders passed by Revenue Officers. In all probability there was a decision by a Revenue Officer in this case though it does not appear to be on record."

It is urged on behalf of the respondent that s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act does not apply because the City Survey Officer is not a Revenue Officer. The Survey Officer appears to be a Revenue Officer, and is included in Chap. II of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and is described as a Revenue Officer in several sections of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. Whether the City Survey Officer is a Revenue Officer has not been decided in any of the decisions which have been brought to our notice. The question has to be decided by reference to the duties of the City Survey Officer under Bombay Act IV of 1868, or s. 131 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, or s. 50A of the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901, and by reference to the definitions of "land revenue" and "Revenue Officer" in the Bombay Land Revenue Code and the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. In Secretary of State v. Yemnappa Sangappa (F. A. No. 34 of 1923, decided by Macleod, C.J. and Coyajee, J., on March 3, 1925, Unrep.), the question was considered but not decided, and in Valabhai Mithabhai v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 105 of 1925, decided by Macleod, C. J. and Coyajee, J., on February 3, 1926, Unrep.) it was held that it was not proved that the City Survey Officer was a Revenue Officer. It is not, however, necessary to decide the point in the present appeals, for, we think, the argument on behalf of the respondents based on the notice in these cases is well-founded. The notice given in these cases runs as follows :—

"If any person desires to appeal against the above-mentioned order he should appeal in the prescribed manner to the Collector within 60 (sixty) days from the date of the said order. If no suit in a civil Court is filed within one year from the date of the final decision of such appeal or if no appeal is preferred from the date of this order, no civil Suit can be instituted in any Court to set aside or vary the said order."

3, 1925 (Unrep.) that such a notice having misled the parties in not filing the appeal against the order, the defendant, the Secretary of State, should not rely on s. 11 as a bar to the suit. A similar view was taken in the case of Chunilal v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 215 of 1925 decided by Macleod, O. J. and Coyajee, J., on January 21, 1926, Unrep.) and the case of Annapurnabai Krishnarao v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 190 of 1926, decided by Patkar and Baker, JJ., on August 13, 1930, Unrep.). In the present case we are informed that except in one case (F. A. No. 300 of 1926) the parties appealed first to the District Deputy Collector and then to the Collector, though it appears from the plaint in Appeals Nos. 301 and 432 that appeals were only filed to the District Deputy Collector. The facts in the cases to which I have referred are somewhat different from the present case, for in those cases the parties did not appeal at all. But in the present case the parties first appealed to the District Deputy Collector and in most of the cases appealed to the Collector. The wording of the notice, which is similar to form "O" at page 74 of Anderson's Land Revenue Rules and similar to the notice in the cases referred to above, leaves it to the wish of the party to appeal against the abovementioned order and suggests that if he desired to appeal, he should appeal to the Collector within sixty days from the date of the said order, and if no suit is filed within one year from the date of the final decision of the appeal, no civil suit can be instituted in any civil Court to set aside or vary the said order. The notice is likely to mislead the party into believing that it was optional to file an appeal, and in case the party desired to appeal it would be sufficient if an appeal is filed to the Collector.

We, therefore, think that the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant that the bar under s. 11 should apply on account of the failure to file appeals to the Commissioner is not well-founded. Further, it appears from the City Survey Manual at page 46, para. 112, that "appeals against the decisions of enquiry officer lie to the Collector only, and the power of hearing them cannot be delegated and they must be preferred within sixty days prescribed by the Code."

The City Survey Officer is not a direct subordinate of the Collector, and an appeal would lie to the Collector under the Government Notification No. 14447 dated November 29, 1927. We are not satisfied in these cases that further appeals to the Commissioner were necessary to be filed, and having regard to the terms of the notice in the present case we think that the appellant cannot rely on the bar under s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. We are, therefore, of opinion that the present suits are not barred by s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act.

Broomfield, J.—I agree. The District Judge was, in my opinion, clearly wrong in his view that the order of the enquiry officer was not an act within the meaning of s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. I think that matter is sufficiently clear even without authorities. The word "act", being derived from the Latin "actum", means "a thing done." Webster's Dictionary quotes this passage from Holland's Jurisprudence. "Jurisprudence is concerned only with outward acts. An 'act' may therefore be defined for the purposes of the science as a determination of will producing an effect in the sensible world." The passing of an order or the making of a decision is just as much an act, i.e., a thing done, as the physical act of dispossession, for instance, mentioned by the learned District Judge. Moreover, the authorities on the point are perfectly clear. There are numerous decisions, besides that in Dayal v. Secretary of State (3) which the District Judge rather surprisingly thought he was at liberty not to follow. We have been referred to some unreported decisions of this Court in Dongar walad Dagadu Patil v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 252 of 1915, decided by Beaman and Heaton, JJ. on January 30, 1918, Unrep.) Bhikhabhai Doolabhjee v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 2 of 1916, decided by Macleod, O. J., and Heaton J., on July 28, 1919, Unrep.) Sakharam Gopal v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 9 of 1915, decided by Heaton and Shah, JJ., on August 22, 1917 (Unrep.) and Anant Nulkar v. Secretary of State (6). There is also the decision in Sakharam v. Secretary of State for India in Council (4). The ratio decidendi there appears to be that the only kind of act which can be referred to in s. 11 is an order or decision, because the Land Revenue Code does not provide an appeal from any physical act but only from orders and decisions. The ruling in Nathuram v. Secretary of State (5) has been cited by both the parties to the argument before us. It appears to me, however, to be very clearly in favour of the view that "act" in s. 11 means "order". The decision in that case would apparently have been precisely the reverse of what it was, and s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act would have been held to apply, if there had been there the kind of order which we have in the present case. It would be easy to refer to any number of authorities, and I may mention Abaji v. Secretary of State for India (7) and Ranchod v. Secretary of State for India (2), in which it has been held by implication that an order, such as we have in this case, is an "act" within the meaning of s. 11. Indeed, I doubt very much if any authority could be found in which that section has been applied where the "act" referred to was not an order or a decision.

Though the reasons given by the District Judge are unsatisfactory, his decision is correct on other grounds. In each of these cases it appears that the enquiry officer issued a notice in the form "O" given at page 74 of Anderson's Land Revenue Rules. That being so the same doubts and difficulties arise as in the case which was dealt with by this Court in Secretary of State v. Yemnappa (F. A. No. 34 of 1923, decided by Macleod, O. J. and Coyajee, J., on March 3, 1925 Unrep.) Chunilal v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 215 of 1925, decided by Macleod, O. J. and Coyajee, J., on January 21, 1926 Unrep.) and Annapurnabai Krishnarao v. Secretary of State (F. A. No. 190 of 1926, decided by Patkar and Baker, JJ., on August 13, 1930, Unrep.) The form of notice has been given by my learned brother. It is clearly a very ambiguous and misleading document. It might reasonably appear to the recipient of such a notice that it was not necessary for him to appeal at all and that it would be sufficient if he brought a suit within one year of the enquiry officer's order; and so in one of the cases to which I have just referred, Secretary of State v. Yemnappa, (F. A. No. 34 of 1923, decided by Macleod, O. J. and Coyajee, J. on March 3, 1925, Unrep), it was held that the party had been misled and that s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act should not be applied although in that case no appeal had been filed at all. Further, the recipient of such a notice might reasonably suppose that even if he did appeal—and the parties in these cases all of them did appeal—the appeal lay to the Collector and to no other authority. The District Judge says that ignorance of the law is no excuse, but supposing that the parties concerned had shown the utmost caution that could be expected from them, and had looked up the City Survey Manual and the notifications of Government in the matter, they would have found in the first place the provision in para. 112 of the Manual which states that appeals lie to the Collector only. They would have next found the notification of Government No. 14447 dated November 29, 1917, in which the Collector has been appointed to hear and determine appeals from the orders of an enquiry officer, without any mention of any further appellate authorities. It appears to me that the position of the present parties is much stronger than the position of the parties in Secretary of State v. Yemnappa (F. A. No. 34 of 1923, decided by Macleod, O. J. and Coyajee, J., on March 3, 1925, Unrep) and as it was held that s. 11 should not be applied there a fortiori it could not be applied in the present case. For, here, after all, the parties have adopted both the alternative remedies which appear to be offered to them by the notice in question.

As regards the other points in the case I do not think I need add anything to what my learned brother has said, except that I may refer to the decision of this Court in Valabhai Mithabhai v. Secretary of State (1926 F. A. No. 105 of 1925, decided by Macleod, O. J. and Coyajee, J., on February 3, 1926, Unrep) In that case this Court held that s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act could not be applied because Government had not satisfactorily proved that a Survey Officer is a Revenue Officer within the meaning of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. We have listened to a long argument on the question whether assuming that an enquiry officer is a Revenue Officer any appeal would lie under the provisions of the Land Revenue Code from the decision of the Collector, who has been appointed by Government to hear and determine appeals from the enquiry officer's orders. On the materials placed before us, the point can only be said to be extremely doubtful and we might, therefore, have disposed of the preliminary point before us on the same lines on which it was disposed of in Valabhai Mithabhai v. Secretary of State (1926 F. A. No. 105 of 1925 decided by Macleod, O. J. and Coyajee, J. on February 3, 1926, Unrep), viz., that Government has failed to prove that the case can be brought within the provisions of s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act.

Company—Directors, appointment of—Poll, demand of—Poll not taken—Original meeting continuance of—Suit by share-holders for declaration that appointment of Directors is invalid, competency of.

The Directorate of a Life Insurance Company was composed of two policy-holders' Directors elected by the policy-holders and of a certain number of share-holders' Directors. The Ordinary General Meeting for the election of share-holders' Directors was fixed for the 13th October, 1930. The Articles of Association had contained a provision that the number of share-holders' Directors should be six and that two should retire in rotation their places being filled by election at the meeting. But the number had been by amendment of the articles reduced to five and it was provided as a special case, that at the General Meeting of 1930 the six Directors should vacate office and that no more than five should be elected in place of them. At the meeting held on 13th October, 1930, votes were taken by show of hands and five persons were declared elected. A poll was then demanded and the Chairman then directed that it should be held at the Company's Office on 20th October, and appointed the manager of the Company Returning Officer for the purpose of taking it. On October 16th the two policy-holders' Directors appointed two other persons thus bringing the Directors up to four. On the 20th October the Returning Officer did not appear and no other arrangement being made for holding the poll, the share holders who had assembled dispersed. No other attempt was made to take a poll and the four persons at that time claiming to be Directors after a couple of days co-opted 3 more Directors, thus bringing their number up to the maximum. Four of the share-holders filed a suit praying inter alia that these appointments might be declared invalid and that the Court should direct a poll to be taken to elect the five share-holders' Directors :

Held, that the taking of a poll was a mere enlargement of the meeting at which it was demanded and the original meeting continued until the poll had been taken. [p. 195, col. 2.]

Held, further, that so long as the meeting continued the five Directors' posts remained vacant and neither the provision for the automatic re-election of the old Directors on failure of their posts being filled up in the meeting, nor the provision enabling Directors to appoint any duly qualified person as Director could come into operation. [p. 196, col. 2.]

Held, also, that as the five persons were installed as Directors in contravention of the articles the mode of constituting them was ultra vires the Board of Directors and the suit by some of the share-holders who had been deprived of their fundamental privilege of choosing their own management was competent. [ibid.]

Held, also, that plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit even though the share-holders under the articles could by special meeting remove the Directors from the office by three-fourths majority. [p. 199, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Waller, dated the 25th November 1930 and passed in the exercise of the Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in C. S. No. 491 of 1930.

Messrs. V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar and K. Venkataramani, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, K. Narasimha Ayyar, N. S. Rangaswami Ayyangar, T. R. Srinivasa Ayyangar, U. Ramachandran, V. C. Gopalaratnam, K. S. Rajagopala Ayyangar, R. V. Raghava Thathachari and S. Panchapakesa Sastri, for the Respondents.

Curgenven, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises relates to a Company known as the United India Life Assurance Co., Ltd., and the circumstances which gave rise to the dispute are briefly these. The Directorate of the Company is composed of two policy-holders' Directors, elected by the policy-holders, and of a certain number of share-holders' Directors. The Ordinary General Meeting for the election of share-holder's Directors was fixed for the 13th October 1930. The Articles of Association had contained a provision that the number of share-holders' Directors should be six, and that two should retire in rotation, their places being filled by election at the meeting. But this number had been by amendment of the Articles reduced to five, and it was provided, as a special case, that at the General Meeting of 1930 the six Directors should vacate office and that not more than five should be elected in place of them. At the meeting the 3rd defendant, who was at the time the Chairman of Directors, took the chair, and, it being decided to fill all five vacancies, a vote was taken by show of hands, and five persons were declared elected. A poll was then demanded, and the Chairman directed that it should be held at the Company's Office on Monday the 20th October between the hours of 4 and 6 P. M. and appointed the Company's Manager, Mr. Church, Returning Officer for the purpose of taking it. In thus allowing a week to elapse before the poll was taken, the Chairman incurred the disapproval of the 1st plaintiff, one of the share-holders, who addressed to him on the 15th, a letter protesting against his action, and pointing out that, since all the share-holders' Directors had retired on the 13th, the share-holders must during the interval remain wholly unrepresented, and the operations of the Company come to a standstill, because the two policy-holders' Directors were below the minimum number, authorised to transact business,

This letter was certainly most provocative in tone, and perhaps explains, though it may not justify, what happened next. On the 16th the two policy-holders' Directors appointed two other persons—the Chairman himself and the 4th defendant—thus bringing the number of Directors up to four, the minimum number required by Art. 88 to act in the name of the Company. It will be for consideration whether this action was within their powers. It evoked from the 1st plaintiff another letter, written the day before the date fixed for the poll, condemning this procedure and expressing the apprehension that advantage was intended to be taken of it to hold a poll only in respect of the three remaining vacancies. What happened,—whether by accident or design we are not now concerned to inquire—more than justified his misgivings. On the 20th, at the appointed time, a number of share-holders assembled at the office of the Company, but neither did the Returning Officer appear, nor were any other arrangements made for holding the poll. They waited there and eventually dispersed. The explanation given is that Mr. Church was unable to attend through sudden illness, and that a message which he sent to the Chairman in the course of the afternoon was not delivered as the Chairman had shortly before left Madras on a visit to a sick relative. No further attempt was made to take a poll, and indeed, whether rightly or wrongly, the four persons at that time claiming to be Directors—defendants Nos. 1 to 4—two days later took the line best calculated to demonstrate their refusal to adopt that course by 'co-opting' three more Directors, defendants Nos. 5 to 7, thereby bringing their number up to the maximum. The four plaintiffs, as share-holders, filed their suit on the 24th October, praying inter alia that these appointments might be declared illegal and invalid, and that the Court should direct a poll to be taken to elect five share-holders' Directors to the existing vacancies.

The learned Judge who tried the suit, Waller, J., has dismissed it upon a preliminary issue. He finds indeed that the co-optation, in two stages, of the five share-holders' Directors was ultra vires, but that, assuming it to have been so, the Company, and not individual share-holders, should have been the plaintiffs. Further, he considers that the Articles of Association provided the share-holders with an alternative remedy, and that at least until that had proved infructuous the Court should not intervene. All the plaintiffs appeal against this decision, which is supported in varying ways by the several defendants, whose points of view may be gathered from the contents of their written statements. The 1st and 2nd defendants, the two policy-holders' Directors, endeavour to justify their action in co-opting the 3rd and 4th defendants, and then, with these defendants, co-opting the defendants Nos. 5 to 7. The Chairman (3rd Defendant) contends that even if this procedure was not legal, those of the new Directors who were previously in Office,—all except the 4th Defendant—may be deemed to have continued by virtue of the terms of Art. 68 (g). The 4th defendant, the sole newcomer to the office has—perhaps to give scope to this alternative—since resigned. The 5th and 6th defendants denounce the act of co-opting them as unlawful, but claim to be still in office under Art. 68 (g).

It has become clear to me that the crucial questions of law upon the answers to which a correct decision depends in this case are, firstly, what determines the duration of an ordinary general meeting for the election of Directors, and, secondly, what is the nature of the process known as taking a poll. The rules governing these matters are not, I think, in any respect peculiar to this Company. Article 37 gives the Directors power to fix the annual Ordinary General Meeting, and Art. 42 provides for the election of Directors at it. Such election is to be, in the first instance by show of hands. If at least three members demand a poll, the Chairman shall grant it. Article 49 empowers the Chairman to take it and runs as follows :

"If a poll is demanded as aforesaid it shall be taken in such manner and at such time and place as the Chairman of the meeting directs, and either at once or after an interval or adjournments or otherwise, and the result of the poll shall be deemed to be the resolution of the meeting at which the poll was demanded. The demand for a poll may be withdrawn."

Put shortly, the view pressed upon us by Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri on behalf of the respondents is that the process of holding the poll is a detached portion of the general meeting, or is at any rate a 'meeting' within the meaning of the Articles of Association, and that when that 'meeting' comes to an end, whether or not the poll has been taken, the general meeting also terminates, and there exists no power to revive it, either on the part of the Chairman or of the Directors; and if for some reason the poll has not been taken and no Directors elected, there exists no further power to do these things. It will be at once evident—indeed no better illustration is needed than the present case—how completely subversive these doctrines would be of the rights of election possessed by the share-holders. Fortunately they appear to be based upon fundamentally erroneous conceptions. The original meeting in law continues until the Chairman has carried out the direction given to him by the share-holders to take a poll. It is a notional meeting, not dependent for its existence and continuity upon the share-holders being actually in session and business being transacted. The actual process of holding the poll is not a 'meeting' at all. It differs in several of its features from any meeting of share-holders. For example, the Articles provide that every such meeting shall be held at the Office of the Company, whereas Art. 49, reproduced above, empowers the Chairman to take the poll at such place as he may direct. The person appointed to conduct the poll, unlike the Chairman of a meeting, need not be, and indeed in the present instance was not, a share-holder of the Company. His functions in no way resemble those of a Chairman of a meeting, and are, as has been pointed out in Harben v. Phillips (1), purely ministerial. The operation of taking a ballot, too, has little resemblance to such a meeting,—each share-holder may come at any time between the hours fixed, record his vote, and go away. It is only the result of the poll which forms part of the meeting at which the poll was demanded by being deemed to be a resolution passed on it. 'The taking of a poll,' said Brett, L. J., in The Queen v. Wimbledon Local Board (2), is a mere enlargement of the meeting at which it was demanded.' In the same case Cotton, L. J., observes,

"A poll is not a new meeting, but it is a mode of ascertaining the sense of the meeting which is continued for that purpose. The meeting of rate-payers did not come to an end, for the poll which was demanded has never been held."

In Shaw v. Tati Concessions Limited (3), Swinfen Eady, J., after remarking that the taking of a poll is not a meeting, continues: 'The true legal position is this. This is no adjourned meeting but the original meeting continues for the purpose of taking the poll until the poll is closed.' For the principle that the poll is not complete, and therefore the general meeting endures, until the share-holders have had an opportunity of voting, I may refer to the Queen v. The Vestryman etc., of St. Pancras (4). The position was defined with clearness by Russell, J., in Spiller v. Mayo Development Co., Ltd. (5) in settling a question of the validity of certain proxies. 'It was well settled', he said, 'that the taking of a poll was not a meeting of the company in the strict sense, but was in law a mere continuation of the meeting at which the poll was directed to be taken.' No authority has been cited to us for the position which the respondents assume, which requires that the taking of the poll is in law a meeting convened by the Chairman, from which the inference sought to be drawn is that if the Chairman makes default in holding the meeting, the share-holder's only remedy is to take the poll themselves, unless they resolve to adjourn the meeting to some other day. I doubt whether in face of the wide powers delegated in this respect to the Chairman, the share-holders would be legally competent to do this. But it is unnecessary to decide that point, especially in the present case, where it appears to have been almost physically impossible for them to adopt this course. Ballot papers had indeed been printed, but they were locked up in the Manager's safe, and key was not accessible. The assembled share-holders had no official record of the names of the eleven candidates standing for election. It would probably appear, had the case been fully heard, that there were other obstacles. They took the only course apparent to them, and dispersed without recording their votes. Even on the theory that a gathering of share-holders recording their votes is a meeting, it is difficult to contend that any meeting took place here. When and by virtue of what act did it begin, and when terminate? Having brought matters to this impasse by the break-down of the arrangements which it was his duty to render effectual, the Chairman would now ask the Court to dismiss the claim of these persons on the ground that, as matters fell out, their only course was to assume his functions and proceed with the election, failing which they must suffer disenfranchisement until the time should arrive for another annual general meeting. The alternative view, more commendable alike to the terms of the Articles and to common sense, is that, the Chairman having been enjoined by the share-holders to hold a poll and having under Art. 49 ample power to carry out their wishes, should have persisted in his attempts to do so until they were successful. I have heard no argument which, upon the true theory underlying these proceedings, encourages me to hold that, when the first attempt broke down, he was functus officio.

Let us now see by what machinery it is proposed to carry on the business of the Company in the meanwhile. It is sought to justify the action of the two policy-holders' Directors in the first place, and of themselves and their two co-opted directors in the second, in filling up the places upon the Directorate, by recourse to the provisions of Art. 68 (h), which enables Directors to appoint any duly qualified member as Director either to fill a casual vacancy or as an addition to the Board. Alternatively the powers conferred by Arts. 86 and 88 are invoked, though a perusal of those Articles will show that they do not enlarge the powers derivable from Art. 68 (h). The contesting defendants in their written statements justified the action taken upon one or other of these grounds, but before us such a position has been virtually abandoned and is obviously untenable. A casual vacancy means in general any vacancy occurring by death, resignation or bankruptcy and not by effluxion of time: (Palmer's Company Precedents, 13th Edn., Part 1, page 720, York Tramways Company v. Willows (6) and Munster v. Cammell Company (7).) Article. 69 defines the different modes in which such a vacancy arises. The occasion for appointing a Director 'as an addition to the Board' will only arise when the share-holders have abstained from filling one or more of the sanctioned posts of Director. The rule has no application to present circumstances. The Article upon which reliance is now placed is No. 68 (g), which runs thus:

"If at any ordinary general meeting at which an election of Directors ought to take place, the place of any retiring Director is not filled up, such Director shall, if willing to continue in Office, be deemed to have been re-elected at such meeting unless it shall be determined at such meeting to leave the vacancy or vacancies unfilled."

I leave on one side the argument, special to the circumstances of this case, that since six Directors retired and only five posts were sanctioned for the future, no retiring Director could be said to have a 'place' into which he could be deemed to be re-elected. The claim may, I think, be disallowed upon more general grounds. Nor is it necessary to point out that, to declare these so-called co-optations valid by virtue of this provision, a perversion of it to a use that can never have been in contemplation would have to be countenanced. It is a necessary condition of its application that the ordinary general Meeting should have come to an end without an election of Directors, indeed, it was with the object in view of rendering its application possible that the arguments to which I have already referred were with some strenuousness advanced. So long as the meeting exists, it appears that under the Articles, as they now stand, the Directors' posts remain vacant. It was to save any inconvenience arising from this that a provision existed in the Articles before amendment that the outgoing Directors should continue until their successors were elected (see old Art. 64), but whether by inadvertence or intention this has not been reproduced. If, as I hold, the General Meeting has never been closed, this provision for automatic re-election admittedly can have no application, and the five Directors' places may still be filled up by election.

The remainder of the arguments addressed to us represent an attempt to prevent the Court from interfering. It would seem that in a case where the share-holders have, through no fault of their own, been deprived of their fundamental privilege of choosing their own management, and where that management has passed into the hands of persons with no legal title to enjoy it, if ever there were a case for the Court's interposition it must be this. Since, however, the learned trial Judge has taken a different view, and since the question has been elaborately argued before us, it is advisable that we justify the course we propose to take by reference to authority. The questions raised are, firstly, can an individual share-holder sue for the reliefs asked for by the plaintiffs, and, if so, secondly, ought the Court to interfere, having regard to such other remedies as may be available? It is worth while to repeat here the nature of the reliefs asked for. The plaintiffs sue for a declaration that they and the other share-holders are entitled to elect five share-holders' Directors, and for a direction that a proper election by poll be ordered; as a necessary preliminary they ask also that it may be declared that the appointment of persons to fill the vacancies by co-optation illegal and invalid. In substance therefore the suit is one to establish and enforce the right of a share-holder to exercise his vote. Now in examining the authorities, it will be found that the cases may be grouped according as the injury complained of is an injury to the share-holder, by infringing his individual rights or only an injury to the Company in which the share-holder holds an interest. Cases falling within the former category may again be divided into those which relate to an injury to one or some only of the share-holders, and those which have arisen from a breach of duty towards all the share-holders; for it does not necessarily follow that, where all the share-holders (except those of them who contrive the injury) are affected, an individual share-holder is precluded from suing. The test depends upon the nature of the wrong alleged. An instance of a case where some only of the share-holders were denied their legal rights is Pender v. Lushington (8) which arose from a poll at which the Chairman ruled out certain votes which should have been included. Jessel M. R., in deciding that the action could be maintained by the single share-holder who brought it observed; 'He is a member of the Company, and whether he votes with the majority or the minority, he is entitled to have his vote recorded, an individual right in respect of which he has a right to sue'. Other cases which fall within the same class are Pulbrook v. Richmond Consolidated Mining Company (9) and Henderson v. Bank of Australasia (10). The class which concerns us here, however, relates to acts in derogation of the rights of all the share-holders, and is represented by a number of instances of suits brought by individual share-holders. In Mosely v. Koffyfontein Mines, Ltd. (11) the plaintiff sued the Company and Directors on behalf of himself and the other share-holders to restrain the unauthorised issue of capital. It was a matter affecting the share-holders as a body, but the plaintiff was allowed to sue because, as Fletcher Moulton, L.J., put it, 'it must be the right of a share-holder by reason of his being a share holder to bring an action to stop such a proceeding.' It is to be observed that in such a case the Company itself, by resolution of its members, could also have sued to restrain the Directors from such an act. Another case involving a breach of duty by the Directors towards the whole body of share-holders is Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Company (12). Lindley, M. R., decided that it was not a matter of mere internal management—a description which it has been sought to apply to the conduct of the defendants in the present case—and that a suit by some of the share-holders was unobjectionable in form. Baillie v. Oriental Telephone and Electric Co. Ltd. (13) related to a failure on the part of the Directors to make a frank disclosure to the share-holders on the circumstances in which they claimed extra remuneration. It was argued that the plaintiff, a share-holder, was not entitled to sue to impeach the validity of a special resolution, but the Court of Appeal disallowed the objection on the ground, expressed by Swinfen Eady, J., that even a majority of the share-holders could not legalise an invalid act and prevent action being taken to set it aside. This case bears upon the further question we have to decide,—the remedy, if any, open to the plaintiffs at the hands of the company. In Hoole v. Great Western Railway Co. (14) the power of the Railway Company to issue additional shares was in dispute. The question of the proper parties to the action was raised and Sir John Rolt, L.J., saw no reason why any single share-holder should not be at liberty to file a bill to restrain the Company from exceeding its powers. 'If one individual having an interest complains of an act of the whole Company or the executive of the whole Company as being illegal, there is as a general rule, no necessity for any other share-holders being present.'

The other line of cases, in which it has been held that the company, not the share-holder, is the party to complain, opens with Foss v. Harbottle (15) decided by the Court of Chancery in 1843. This was a suit brought by two share-holders against the Directors and some others alleging that the Directors, as Directors, had bought for an excessive price certain lands from themselves as private individuals, and to find money for the purchase had mortgaged the Company's property in a manner unauthorised by the Act of Incorporation. Objection was taken that an individual share-holder could not sue, and the learned Vice Chancellor, while conceding that in certain circumstances a suit might properly be so framed, agreed that this was not such a case. The injury alleged was an injury to the Corporation as a whole, inflicted upon it as a cestui qui trust, by its trustees, and it was for the Corporation to deal with it. The purchase was not void but only voidable, and if the Corporation should choose to ratify it no individual share-holder could resist such action. 'The very fact that the governing body of proprietors assembled at the special general meeting may so bind even a reluctant minority is decisive to shew that the frame of this suit cannot be maintained whilst that body retains its functions.' It might be that the mortgages were void, as ultra vires, but that would not in the circumstances dispose of the question, because, since the money received was expended in the manner stated, if the Corporation approved the Directors' action in making the purchases it could not complain of the manner in which they raised the money. The principles on which this case was decided were thus that there was no infringement of the individual rights of a share-holder, only a possible injury to the Company as a corporate body; and secondly, since it would lie with the Company to ratify it must also lie with it to challenge, whether by suit or otherwise. The same principles were applied by Lord Cottenham, L. C., in Mozley v. Alston (16) where two share-holders complained of the omission of the twelve Directors to ballot out four of their number in order that four others might be elected in their stead. This case does certainly in some respects resemble the case now before us; but it is perhaps permissible to surmise that since 1847, when Mozley v. Alston (16) was decided some modification of the attitude then taken up by the Court of Chancery has taken place, in the same way as Lord Cottenham himself recognizes that a relaxation was apparent in his own day "to meet the exigencies of modern times." The observations of Swin-fen Eady, L. J., upon this case in Baillie v. Oriental Telephone and Electric Company Ltd. (13) suggest that the stringency of the rule laid down in these two earlier cases has been relaxed in more modern times. The remaining case of this class cited to us, Macdougall v. Gardiner (17) dealt with what was at the most an irregularity and not an illegality, James, L. J., expressly excluding illegal, oppressive or fraudulent acts from the scope of the principles on which he acted. Even, therefore, adopting the position assumed by these earlier Chancery cases in all its rigour, I do not find reasons in them to nonsuit the plaintiffs here.

Nor do I think that the contesting respondents are on any better ground in contending that the plaintiffs should have availed themselves of facilities for rectifying the position afforded by the Articles of the Company. The learned trial Judge considered that it was open to the share-holders by special resolution to remove the so-called Directors from Office a course dependent upon securing a three-fourths majority. The reasonableness of referring the plaintiffs to such a procedure has not been pressed upon us in appeal, and indeed it hardly seems right to tell a share-holder who complains of acts committed in defiance of the Articles of Association that the enforcement of his legal rights is dependent upon securing such a majority. Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri prefers to adopt the position that a mere majority of share-holders would be able to validate the acts performed ultra vires by the Chairman and his party but here again I think that he bases his arguments upon a fallacy. It is no doubt true that if the Directors of a Company act ultra vires, and if what they have done would be within the power of the Company, acting within its Memorandum and Articles of Association, to do, the Company can ratify the action taken. It cannot so ratify it by a simple majority if by a general resolution it could not sanction such a course. The effect of the cases cited to us has been thus summed up by Lindley (6th Edn. Vol 1, page 769).

".....If Directors or share-holders have done or are about to do that which is a fraud upon the minority, or is wrong, even if sanctioned by a majority then an action by some of the members on behalf of themselves and others or by a member suing alone may be sustained for otherwise the dissentients would be without redress".

It is surely enough to point out that even a majority cannot act in breach of rules which they have agreed shall regulate their actions. "The articles", observed Swinfen Eady, J., in Boschoek Proprietary Company Limited v. Fuke (18) "until altered, bound the share-holders in general meeting as much as the board", the case being one of an attempted confirmation of a Director not possessing the necessary qualifications. The Indian Companies Act gives statutory force to this principle by providing in s. 21 that the Memorandum and Articles shall bind the Company or the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed by each member and contained a covenant on the part of each to observe all their provisions. Accordingly to say that the course taken in the present case could have been ratified by the vote of the majority is equivalent to saying that the Articles permit the election of Directors to be made otherwise than at the Ordinary General Meeting as Art. 68 (f) provides and otherwise than by submission of the names of all eligible candidates to the choice of the voters. It is evident that a resolution proposing that a certain five persons be appointed Directors is not only unauthorised by the Articles but would be a departure not only in form but in effect from the accepted procedure.

I have come to the conclusion, therefore, that the only course compatible with enforcing the rights to which the plaintiffs are entitled under the Articles of Association is to declare that the so-called co-optation of defendants Nos. 3 to 7 to the vacant posts of Directors is illegal, and that the share-holders are entitled to elect five of their number to those vacancies. The 3rd defendant, as Chairman, will be directed to proceed with the operation of election and to take a poll after due notice to all share-holders and within ten days of the date of this judgment. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 7 will pay the plaintiffs' costs here and below and each defendant will pay his own costs. In view of the importance of the case we fix the Advocate's fee for the appeal at Rs. 1000. The actual costs of printing will also be included in the costs.

Cornish, J.—I agree that the co-option of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 on the 16th October and of defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 7 on the 23rd October as Directors cannot be justified under Arts. 68 (h) or 86 of the Articles of Association and was ultra vires.

Defendant No. 4 filed a written statement claiming to be of the Directorate by reason of his co-option by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, but we are told that he has since withdrawn from that body.

Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 by their written statements have repudiated their supposed co-option. They claim that as retiring Directors they continue in office till their successors are actually elected, or that by virtue of the provision of Art. 68 (g) they are to be deemed to have been re-elected. These two defendants together with defendants Nos. 3, 7 and 8 are five of the six share-holders' Directors who under the Articles of Association were due to retire at the Ordinary General Meeting on the 13th October. Defendants Nos. 3 and 7 also rely on Art. 68 (g). Defendant No. 8 has not put in a written statement. The learned Counsel for defendants Nos. 5 and 6 has not pressed the first part of his clients' contention and I think it is untenable. "A Director" said Sargent, J., in In re Consolidated Nickel Mines Ltd. (19) does not ordinarily step into an office which is perpetual unless terminated by some act, but into an office the holding of which is limited by the terms of the Articles." By Art. 63 the six share-holders' Directors vacated office at the Annual General Meeting on the 13th October. Having vacated their office at the meeting there could be no question of their still continuing in the office when a poll was pending to fill up the vacancies caused by their retirement. The provisions of Art. 68 (g) then have to be considered. This says "if at any Ordinary General Meeting at which an election of Directors ought to take place, the place of any retiring Director is not filled up, such Director shall, if willing to continue in Office, be deemed to have been re-elected at such meeting, unless it shall be determined at such meeting to leave the vacancies unfilled." It has been suggested that Art. 68 (g) can have no application because there were six Directors due to retire but under the amended Articles only five vacancies to be filled. But admittedly one of these gentlemen had written to the Chairman on the 13th October stating that for reasons of health he was not standing for election, and I do not see how a person who has withdrawn his candidature for election could be regarded as capable of being deemed to have been re-elected under the provisions of Art. 68 (g). There would, therefore, be no objection on that ground to the five retiring Directors who were seeking re-election having the benefit of this Article.

The question is, whether, in view of what happened on the 20th October, there has been such a failure to elect Directors as will entitle defendants Nos. 3, 5, 6, 7 and 8 to claim to have been re-elected in pursuance of Art. 68 (g). In other words, has the meeting at which the election of Directors ought to have taken place terminated without the vacancies being filled up? Now it is beyond dispute that when the share-holders arrived at the Company's premises for the poll, which had been fixed by 3rd defendant, the Chairman, to be held there between the hours of 4 and 6 P. M. it was not until 5-20 P. M., that they learned that the Returning Officer appointed to take the poll was unable to attend. No arrangements had been made for any other person to conduct the poll. The Assistant Manager who was on the premises reported that he had no instructions in the matter; and it is admitted by the Returning Officer that the proxies and voting papers for the poll were locked in a safe of which he had the key, and were not available because the 3rd defendant, to whom he sent the keys when he reported his inability to attend, was absent from Madras and did not get his message until 6-45 P. M. that evening. It has been contended that, in spite of all this, the assembled share-holders had the remedy in their own hands that under Art. 44, they might have chosen one of their number to be Chairman in the absence of the 3rd defendant and have proceeded with the business of the poll, using such pieces of paper for the purpose of voting papers as might have been available; or that under Art. 46, they might have resolved to adjourn the meeting to some other date for the taking of the poll. Articles 44 and 46 in terms apply to Ordinary General Meetings. In my opinion an assembly of share-holders for purpose of recording their votes at a poll had no power to fix some other date than that already fixed for the holding of the poll. The position, when a poll has been demanded and directed to be taken at a future date, is that the meeting subsists in contemplation of law until the poll has been taken; or, as Lord Justice Brett expressed it, "the taking of the poll is a mere enlargement of the meeting at which it was demanded." The Queen v. Wimbledon

Local Board (2). See also Shaw v. Tati Concessions Ltd., (3) and Spiller v. Mayo Development Co. Ltd., (5). In the last mentioned case Russel, J., said:—"It was well settled that the taking of the poll was not a meeting of the Company in the strict sense, but was in law a continuation of the meeting at which the poll was directed to be taken." Article 49 regards the taking of the poll in the same sense; for it says, "The result of the poll shall be deemed to be the resolution of the meeting at which the poll was demanded." The conclusion upon these authorities is, the legal conception of the meeting being that it continues for the purpose of taking the poll that the meeting continues for that purpose only and for no other purpose or business.

The last question, therefore, resolves itself into this,—has the breakdown of the arrangements for the poll on the 20th October put an end to the taking of a poll? I do not think so. In my opinion the words in Art. 68 (g) "If at any Ordinary General Meeting at which an election of Directors ought to take place", imply that it must be possible for the poll to be taken at the appointed time and place. There must at least be a reasonable opportunity to the voters and to the candidates of having the poll taken; See Reg. v. St. Mary's Lambeth (20). In the present case it is to be observed that there were eleven candidates for the five vacancies. And if unforeseen circumstances have arisen to prevent the poll being taken, then I think that, not only has there been no termination of the election but that it became the duty of the Chairman, the 3rd defendant, (and he had the power under the Articles) to appoint some other time for the taking of the poll. The rule is, that if a poll is demanded it must be taken, and this is so even though the Chairman refuses to grant the poll: The Queen v. Wimbledon Local Board (2). Article 49 is equally emphatic. It says: "If a poll is demanded as aforesaid (i. e., at the General Meeting) it shall be taken"; and it goes on to provide that it is to be taken, "in such manner, and at such time and place as the Chairman of the meeting directs and either at once, or after an interval or adjournment, or otherwise". The language of the Article leaves no doubt in my mind that it was open to the 3rd defendant as Chairman, and indeed obligatory upon him, when he learned that the poll could not be held on the 20th to appoint another date for it.

Finally it has been objected that the matter being one of internal management of the Company's affairs the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere, and that the plaintiff's suit is unsustainable. It was upon this objection that the learned trial Judge dismissed the suit. A number of authorities have been cited to us. I do not think it necessary to refer to them in detail because the law upon the subject has been compendiously stated by Lawrence, L.J., in Cotter v. National Union of Seamen (21) at page 107* as follows:—

"If an act is intra vires the Corporation, and therefore, one which could be sanctioned by the majority of the corporators properly assembled in General Meeting, the Court will not entertain any proceedings to restrain the doing of the act resolved upon unless such proceedings are brought by the majority of the corporators and in the name of the corporation itself."

It has been contended that, assuming defendants Nos. 3, 5, 6, 7 and 8 have usurped the office of share-holders' Directors, this was a matter capable of confirmation by the Company in General Meeting—though no meeting of the Company has in fact sanctioned it. In other words, the argument is that the Company, which means, of course, a majority of the general body of share-holders, could by a resolution override the Articles which require Directors to be elected, and resolve that these five gentlemen, who have contrived to step back into office without an election should remain there. I do not think that this would be intra vires a General Meeting of the share-holders, for the Articles until altered (and this, according to s. 20, Indian Companies Act, can only be done by special resolution), bind the share-holders in General Meeting as much as the Board: See Boschoek Proprietary Co. Ltd. v. Fuke (18). It seems to me that the principle of that case governs this case where five gentlemen have been installed as Directors in contravention of the Articles. Such a mode of constituting Directors would be equally ultra vires the Board and the Company to sanction. This being the case, and there being no adequate remedy open to the plaintiffs under the Articles, I think it falls within the rule that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit by share-holders against the Company in respect of an infringement of their individual rights as share-holders when the interests of justice so require: Baillie v. Oriental Telephone and Electric Co. (13).

For these reasons, I agree that there should be a declaration that defendants Nos. 3, 5, 6, 7 and 8 are not Directors of the Company, and with the order directing the 3rd defendant as Chairman to take the poll.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), s. 92—Benefit society—Assessment to company's tax—Contributions of members, whether capital—'Income', 'capital' 'paid-up capital,' meanings of.

Where an association formed for the purpose of gathering recruits for estates and contributed to by its members who paid a subscription on a fixed scale and a capitation fee for each recruiter and each recruit, was assessed to company's tax under s. 92, of the Madras District Municipalities Act:

Held, that there was a distinct difference between 'income' and 'capital', that the contributions of the members of the association were income and not capital and as the association had no 'paid-up capital' within the meaning of s. 92 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, it could not be assessed to company's tax under that section. [p. 202, col; 2.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Waller, dated the 1st October, 1929, and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in O. S. No. 721 of 1928.

Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Appellant.
Messrs. King and Patridge, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Waller. The facts of the case are as follows. The respondent association, namely, the Tea Districts (supply) Association is an association of persons formed for certain purposes, the main purpose being to gather recruits for tea estates for various parts of India and one of the gathering grounds being in or close to the appellant Municipality. The objects of the association are fully set out in the Memorandum of the Association and its Articles. The association is contributed to by its members who pay a subscription on a fixed scale and a capitation-fee of Rs. 5 for each recruiter and Rs. 12 for each recruit. Each estate which is represented in the association makes an advance of Rs. 75 to cover the expenses of the recruiters. For the moment, we prefer to call these payments by the members of the association their contributions. The association has a branch in the appellant Municipality and under s. 92 of the Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920) the appellant Municipality assessed the respondent association to companies tax for the half years ending 30th September, 1925, 31st March, 1926 and 30th September, 1926 and served upon the respondent association notices demanding payments of the sums of Rs. 125 for each of the half-years already mentioned making a total sum of Rs. 500. The respondent association paid the amount demanded under protest and stating that they would file a suit in due course for the recovery of the amount paid by them under protest. The amount is a small one but as the respondent association had been similarly assessed by other Municipalities this suit and the other suits were, by order of the High Court, transferred here for a decision. Mr. Justice Waller allowed the respondents' suit because he held that the respondents were not assessable under s. 92 of the Madras District Municipalities Act by reason of the fact that they had no paid-up capital. Upon all other points he appears to have been in favour of the appellants.

The only point argued before us here to day was whether the respondent association had a paid-up capital upon which it could be assessed. It is important to observe that the words used in s. 92 are "paid-up capital." Admittedly this is not a company but a mere benefit society; and it is not necessary—and so Mr. Justice Waller has held—that before a benefit society can be assessed under this Act it should carry on business within the Municipality for profit. What we have to deal with here is the question as to whether or not the respondent association has any paid-up capital upon which it can be assessed. Mr. B. Satyanarayana in his very able argument contends that the contributions by the members to which we have already referred constitute the paid-up capital of it. He argues that it is quite clear that the association carries on business within the limits of the appellant Municipality. He further argues that no association or company can carry on business without capital so to do and that any money it derives from its own members or from outside must necessarily be the capital of the company with which to transact business. He argues that it is not right, as our learned brother Waller, J., in the Court below did, to give a strict interpretation to the words appearing in the section, namely, "paid-up capital" and invites us to give to those words a liberal construction and hold that any money received by a company, a benefit society or an association which enables it to carry on its business must necessarily be capital. We are of the opinion that Mr. Justice Waller was quite right in applying to those words the technical meaning which usually is applied to those words. We find them in the section in question used in relation to a company and we decline to apply any other meaning to those words "paid-up capital" than that which is usually applied to them. Paid-up capital means so much of the authorised or stated capital of a company which its share-holders or subscribers have paid up. In this case it appears to us that the contributions of the members of the association were in no sense capital. They were the subscriptions of the members of the association to the association and as such were the "income" and not the "capital" of the association. There is a distinct difference between "income" and "capital" and in our view this was the income of the association which enabled it to carry on its business within the limits of the appellant Municipality. The Legislature has chosen to say that where a company or a benefit society carries on business within a Municipality it is to be assessed on its paid-up capital. But if the company or the benefit society has no paid-up capital it follows that it cannot be assessed. Under these circumstances, in our view, the judgment of Mr. Justice Waller in the Court below was quite correct. This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

VALIVETTI VEERAYYA AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Partition Act (IV of 1893), ss. 2, 3, 4, 6, scope of—Operation of s. 4, conditions for—Inherent powers of Court in partition cases.

There is a broad distinction between ss. 2, 3 and 6 of the Partition Act forming a group on the one hand and s. 4 on the other. Section 4 applies to the case of a dwelling house a share of which has been transferred to a stranger and three conditions must be fulfilled before s. 4 comes into operation (1): the suit must relate to a dwelling house of an undivided family, (2) some share in it must have been transferred to the stranger and (3) the stranger transferee must have sued for partition. In the case of the other sections, one of the parties to the dispute may or may not be a stranger. Even if the subject of the dispute is a dwelling house unless there be a stranger transferee s. 4 does not apply. [p. 203, col. 2.]

What s. 3 contemplates is a request by a party for the sale of the whole property. The section favours the smaller share-holder at the expense of the larger and the fact of a person owning a large share is a disability under the section since such a person is precluded from offering to buy the interest of the party owning the smaller share. This is the reason why the Courts have wherever possible striven to avoid this result. Ramprasad v. Mukandi (1) and Angamuthu Mudaliar v. Ratna Mudliar (2), referred to. [p. 204, col. 1.]

If a sale is directed under s. 2 and s. 3 does not apply, the sale is nevertheless one governed by the Partition Act and s. 6 relates to such a sale. [p. 204, col. 2.]

Independent of Partition Act, a Court has inherent power to refuse to divide a property by metes and bounds and to adopt such other means as may appear equitable for effecting a just partition. Basantakumar v. Moti Lal (3), referred to. [ibid.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Narasapur, in A. S. Nos. 67 and 68 of 1925 preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Bhimavaram, in O. S. Nos. 267 and 268 of 1922 respectively.

Mr. K. Venkataramaraju, for the Appellant.

Messrs. N. Rama Rao and P. Panini Rao, for the Respondents.

Order.—The Courts below have not paid the slightest attention to the Sections of the Partition Act which they profess to apply. Section 3 of that Act has always been a source of trouble, but even that fact cannot excuse the total disregard by the lower Court of even the other provisions of the Act.

The facts may be briefly stated. The joint family to which these appeals relate consists of six members, the father, the 1st defendant and the sons, defendants Nos. 2 to 6. The 2nd defendant, conveyed his sixth share in some items to the plaintiff in O. S. No. 267 of 1922 for Rs. 200. He similarly sold his interest in certain other items to the plaintiff in O. S. No. 268 of 1922 for Rs. 800. Each alienee has filed a suit claiming his share in the items alienated. In their written statement, the defendants offered to buy the plaintiff's share at a valuation. In each case, the lower Courts, purporting to apply the Partition Act, have fixed the price of the plaintiff's interest and directed her to receive the amount in lieu of her share in the items conveyed. The plaintiffs question the correctness of this order.

I shall first consider the various sections of the Act before examining whether the orders can be sustained. In the first place, there is a broad distinction between ss. 2, 3 and 6, forming a group, on the one hand, and s. 4 on the other. Clause 1 of the last mentioned section runs thus:

"Where a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family has been transferred to a person who is not a member of such family and such transferee, sues for partition, the Court shall, if any member of the family being a share-holder shall undertake to buy the share of such transferee, make a valuation of such share in such manner as it thinks fit and direct the sale of such share to such share-holder, and may give all necessary and proper directions in that behalf."

It applies to the case of a dwelling-house a share of which has been transferred to a stranger. Three conditions must be fulfilled before s. 4 comes into operation.

(1) the suit must relate to a dwelling-house of an undivided family:

(2) some shares in it must have been transferred to a stranger: and

(3) the stranger transferee must have sued for partition.

In the case of the other sections, one of the parties to the dispute may or may not be a stranger. Even if the subject of the dispute is a dwelling-house, unless there be a stranger transferee, s. 4 does not apply.

Having adverted to this important distinction, I shall now refer to the group consisting of ss. 2, 3 and 6. Section 2 says that if it appears to the Court that for certain reasons, selling the property is more beneficial than dividing it by metes and bounds, the Court on the request of the share-holders interested individually or collectively to the extent of one moiety or upwards, direct a sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds. Then comes the question, who can claim the benefit of

s. 3? It expressly enacts that when the request mentioned in s. 2 proceeds from a certain party, some share-holder other than that party, may apply under s. 3. It is difficult to understand why the rule has been so enacted. Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter refers to "the practical inconvenience, almost the absurdity, of the results" following from such a rule. (See O. S. No. 750 of 1919 on the file of the High Court). In 116 Ind. Cas. 851 Ramprasad v. Mukandi (1), the learned Judges rightly point out that the effect of this section is to favour the smaller share-holder at the expense of the larger. The fact of a person owning a large share, is by this section made a disability and he is precluded from offering to buy the interest of the party owning the smaller share. For instance, if A owns nine-tenths and B one-tenth of an item, the section regards A as being a person under disability although if, of the two persons, one should be favoured, A would appear to have a much better claim than B. But strangely the section enacts quite the contrary. The Courts naturally, whenever possible, strove to avoid this result. For instance, it has been held that an application under s. 3 is too late, if made after the sale has been ordered under s. 2. See Angamuthu Mudaliar v. Ratna Mudaliar (2) which reverses the decision of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, already referred to). Again, where a plaintiff owning two-thirds share offered to buy up the share of the defendant on payment of a stated sum, it was held that this was not a request strictly falling within s. 2 and, therefore the terms of the s. 3 did not come into play at all: [Ramprasad v. Mukandi (1) already cited]. What s. 3 contemplates is a request by a party for the sale of the whole property. In the case just cited, the party applied not that the whole property should be sold but that his co-sharer's interest might be sold to him at a valuation. These two cases show how strictly ss. 2 and 3 have been construed. In my opinion, the rulings, with great respect, are perfectly correct. I may remark in passing, that in Angamuthu Mudaliar v. Ratna Mudaliar (2) the learned Judges overlooked that the order for sale being one by consent, cannot rightly be described as one covered by s. 2. It seems to me with great deference, that the judgment would have been more correct (though the result would not have been different) had the sale been deemed as one falling entirely outside the Partition Act. In the other case mentioned above, viz., Ramprasad v. Mukandi (1) the learned Judges finding that the application did not conform to the provisions of s. 2 held, as I have just observed (and in my opinion rightly), that the Partition Act did not apply. It is well to bear in mind in this connection that independent of the Partition Act, the Court has an inherent power to refuse to divide a property by metes and bounds and to adopt such other means as may appear equitable for effecting a just partition. 11 Ind. Cas. 370 [Basantakumar v. Moti Lal (3)].

Then the question arises, if a sale is directed under s. 2 and s. 3 does not apply what is the position? The sale is nevertheless one governed by the Partition Act and s. 6 relates to such a sale. Clause 3 of that section runs thus:—

"If two or more persons, of whom one is a shareholder in the property, respectively advance the same sum at any bidding at such sale, such bidding shall be deemed to be the bidding of the share-holder.

Incidentally, this shows beyond all doubt that share-holders and strangers alike may bid at the sale: (See Angamuthu Mudaliar v. Ratna Mudaliar (2)).

To elucidate the points to which I have referred, I may notice three further cases cited at the Bar. In Atul Chandra v. Bhushan Chandra (4), the plaintiff was the 14 annas sharer and the defendant, the 2 annas residue co-sharer. The plaintiff applied that he might be allowed to buy up the defendant's share at a valuation, or, in the alternative, that the property might be sold to the highest bidder and the proceeds distributed. The defendant thereupon asked under s. 3 for leave to buy at a valuation the plaintiff's share. The question arose as to who could apply under the last mentioned section, the plaintiff or the defendant. The Court rightly held, reversing the judgment of the District Judge, that the defendant had the right. But with respect, the decision seems on another point to be wrong. The plaintiff's application was not of the kind contemplated by s. 2 and it should have been held that the Partition Act did not apply to the case. In 24 Ind. Cas. 27 [Jamnadas v. Mulchand (5)], the plaintiff was interested in two-thirds of the property and applied for a sale under s. 2. It was held (and this is correct) that the right to buy out, was vested under s. 3 in the defendant. Having held this, the Court directed the property to be sold but added by way of a rider, that the defendant's right was unaffected to apply under s. 3 to buy up the plaintiff's share at a valuation. This is the comment I wish to make on this case. Either the defendant applied before or after the sale was directed under s. 2. If before, he possessed the right, if after, he was too late. But the learned Judge ordered a sale, which course would have been right, had the defendant not applied; but at the same time, the Judge gave him leave to buy out, which presupposes that he made a valid application. In Mahabir Rai v. Mahadev (6), the plaintiffs owned two-sevenths and the defendants five-sevenths of a certain house. The latter applied under s. 2. The former thereupon made a request under s. 3. The learned Judge, having stated these facts, observes:

"It became imperative on the Courts below to follow the procedure enjoined by s. 3, cl. 2, Partition Act."

This is intelligible only upon the footing that disputes arose among the plaintiffs inter se, as otherwise cl. 2 could have no operation: [See Angamuthu Mudaliar v. Ratna Mudaliar (3), already cited].

Now, let me deal with the facts of the present case. Judged by these principles the terms of the defendants' request, do not fulfil the requirements of s. 2. The lower Courts ought therefore to have held that the Partition Act does not apply. Let us grant that their request was a valid one. Even then, the Courts below ought not to have given them leave to buy up the plaintiff's share, for the right to buy out (if it did exist) would vest in the latter and not in the defendants. But as a matter of fact, the plaintiff did not apply under s. 3. Even granting, therefore, that the action of the lower Courts was otherwise justifiable, the only order they could have made was one under s. 6. Moreover, the Courts below entirely ignored the distinction that exists between the items which form the dwelling-house and the other items in the suit. They applied the same rule to both sets of properties. In every respect, they thus disregarded the provisions of the Partition Act.

I shall now deal separately with each of the items to which the two suits relate.

(Here his Lordship directed the preparation of a scheme of partition with reference to those items).

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bapatla, in O. S. No. 47 of 1923.

Mr. M. Venkatasubbiah for The Advocate-General, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—With the lower Court's finding, that the plaintiff was adopted by Subbiah, during his life-time and not by his widow, after his death, we must agree. The adoption was made on 11th of February, 1911, and Subbiah died on the 9th of March, 1911. Subbiah, by his Will, executed in August, 1910, made certain dispositions in favour of his daughter, the 2nd defendant. One of the points argued is—was the plaintiff's natural father aware of this Will before the adoption in question and did he assent to its provision? The lower Court has, in effect, found, that he acquiesced in them and that, but for such acquiescence, Subbiah would not have taken the plaintiff in adoption. In other words, the finding is, that there was an ante-adoption arrangement between Subbiah and the plaintiff's natural father. The plaintiff attained majority in 1921 and brought the suit in 1923. The lower Court, holding that the arrangement was fair and reasonable, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff refers to 12 items of immovable property. On behalf of the respondents, it is contended that Items Nos. 4, 5 and 8 are Subbiah's self-acquisitions. This contention is in our opinion, well-founded. In 1902, Subbiah and his brother entered into a partition of their family properties. The partition deed does not mention these three items. It is not disputed that they were acquired by Subbiah subsequently. The plaintiff puts his case thus. Some properties fell to the share of Subbiah at the partition; it must be, therefore, assumed that he purchased the items in question from the income of those properties. In other words, the contention is, that when it is shown that a Hindu father was possessed of some ancestral property, all his subsequent acquisitions must be presumed to be joint family property. With this contention, we cannot agree. In 97 Ind. Cas. 632 [Kannammal v. Ramathalakammal (1)] (a decision of this Court), the law is thus stated:

"The party alleging that the property held by an individual member is joint family property must show that the family was possessed of some property with the aid of which the property in question could have been acquired. If this is shown and only then, the onus shifts to the party alleging self-acquisition, to affirmatively make out that the property was acquired without any aid from the family estate. This is clearly laid down in Ram Kishan Das v. Tunda Mal [2], Chamer, J., lays down two propositions:

(1) There is no presumption that a family has any joint property.

(2) There is no presumption that property found in the possession of any one member is joint family property unless it is shown that the family as such possessed some property by means of which the property in question could have been acquired.

In Narayana Rao v. Seshamma (3) Sir John Wallis, C. J. and Seshagiri, Iyer, J., quoted with approval the observations of Chamer, J., and accepted that learned Judge's view. In a recent case of this Court, 71 Ind. Cas. 130 Vadamalai Pillai v. Subramania Chettiar (4), the same view was again taken. It is unnecessary to cite further cases. The law on the point may now be taken as being clearly settled."

Following this case, we accept the finding of the lower Court that Items Nos. 4, 5 and 8 are the self-acquisitions of Subbiah. (Items Nos. 2 to 5 in the judgment is an obvious mistake for Items Nos. 4, 5 and 8).

The plaintiff cannot succeed in regard to these items.

Of the 12 items referred to in the plaint, Items Nos. 1, 10, 11 and 12 were bequeathed to the plaintiff himself and his right to those items is not disputed.

The question then remains, is the plaintiff entitled to the other five items? (Items Nos. 2, 3, 6, 7 and 9). We must hold, following Krishnamurthi Ayyar v. Krishnamurthi Ayyar (5) that the natural father's assent does not validate the bequest of these items to the 2nd defendant. The respondents do not seriously dispute this, and we must hold that the plaintiff is entitled to these items.

The plaintiff claims also the movables and the outstandings left by Subbiah. These were by the Will in question, bequeathed by Subbiah to his widow the 1st defendant. The plaintiff cannot under the very decision quoted above question this bequest. Their Lordships first explain how the matter stands on principle. What then are the results that follow from its strict application? They first consider the case of a disposition made inter vivos by the adoptive father. They then deal with the case when the disposition is by Will and the adoption is subsequently made by the widow. Then, in regard to the third and last case, they thus observe:—

"But it is quite different when the adoption is antecedent to the date at which the disposition is meant to take effect. The rights which flow from adoption are immediate, and the disposition if given effect to, is inconsistent with these rights and cannot of itself vi propria affect them."

That is to say, when the adoption is made prior to the disposition which is to take effect subsequently, the rights flowing from the adoption take precedence of the disposition. This, then, is the result, if the matter is looked at from the point of view of strict principle. Their Lordships were, however, prepared to admit an exception to this rule on the ground of custom. Referring to the third case mentioned above they proceed:—

"It will be seen from these that in their Lordships' opinion the only ground on which such arrangement can be sanctioned is custom."

What is the arrangement that is referred to in this passage? The answer is clearly that which is dealt with under third head. Their Lordships then go on to observe:—

"They are of opinion that there is such a consensus of decision in the cases with the exception of the case of Jagannadha v. Papamma (6) that they are fairly entitled to come to the conclusion that custom has sanctioned such arrangements in so far as they regulate the rights of the widow as against the adopted son. It seems part of the custom that one sine qua non of such an arrangement should be the consent of the natural father."

From these passages the inference is obvious that an arrangement made for the benefit of the widow would be treated as valid and be protected. To this extent, the rule resting on principle is relaxed. "But", says the plaintiff's learned Counsel, "this exception applies not to an adoption made by a person during his lifetime but by his widow after his death." This contention receives no support from the judgment; on the other hand, the passages we have quoted have the very opposite tendency. Then the Counsel relies upon the words in the last paragraph of the judgment, namely, "Their Lordships consider that the Will here can have no effect." Those words are not to be taken as meaning that they decided that the widow had no right. Indeed, the widow in that case had enjoyed the right conferred upon her and died. The rights in question under the Will were those of the respondents in the case. Who were those respondents? The answer is to be found in the opening paragraph of the judgment where they are thus described:—

"Persons who were connections, but were in no case within the degrees entitled to maintenance and who are respondents in the present suit."

Then the only remaining question is, can the particular provision in this Will in favour of the widow be upheld? The judgment above referred to of the Judicial Committee has been fully considered and explained in Raju v. Nagammal (7). It was there held that an arrangement by which the widow gets some part of the estate absolutely, would be upheld provided it is fair and reasonable. In this case, we are satisfied that the bequest of the movables and the outstandings to the widow satisfies the requirement. The plaintiff's suit to this extent, must therefore, fail.

In the circumstances of this case, we are not prepared to allow the plaintiff mesne profits. By the Will in question, Subbiah bequeathed to the plaintiff some properties belonging to his wife the 1st defendant. Now that the plaintiff elects to dispute the Will he is bound to surrender them to the 1st defendant their owner; but he has been enjoying them so long and is bound to account for their profits. Moreover, the 1st defendant, was maintaining the plaintiff till some time previous to the suit. She has incurred legitimate expenses both on her own behalf and on behalf of the plaintiff. In any account that may be ordered to be taken, she must get credit for the sums she spent as well as for the income from her properties enjoyed by the plaintiff. We do not think any useful purpose will be served by directing these cross accounts to be taken. The claim to mesne profits is, therefore, disallowed.

We are asked to record the statement made on behalf of the plaintiff that he claims no interest under the Will in the properties belonging to the 1st defendant bequeathed to him thereunder and that he is not at present in possession of any of them. We accordingly record that statement. We may note that, but for this statement, we would not have passed a decree in his favour.

The lower Court's decree is modified to the extent indicated in this judgment. In the circumstances, we direct each side to bear its costs throughout. The suit was brought in forma pauperis and we direct the plaintiff to pay the Court Fees due to the Government, which are hereby declared to be a first charge on the properties decreed in his favour.

We make no order as to costs as regards the Memorandum of Objections.

Mr. S. Subrahmanya Sastri, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This was a suit referred to arbitration and the finding of fact is that out of five arbitrators one was absent during the examination of one of the witnesses. The learned District Munsif is of opinion that the terms of reference provided for such a contingency inasmuch as the parties agreed that the opinion of the majority should be accepted. But it is one thing to say that and quite another thing to say that the parties agreed that the arbitration might be conducted by a majority, or by less than the full number of arbitrators. This view of the lower Court has not been supported here and it must be found on the authority of Thammiraju v. Bapiraju (1) that it was incumbent on each of the arbitrators to be present at each of the meetings and that accordingly, if the matter stood there, the award would be liable to be set aside as illegal. The learned District Munsif has, however, also found that, if there was any irregularity from this case, the plaintiff has waived it. He notes that the plaintiff's next friend was present on each occasion and has admitted that he took no notice of the circumstance that one of the arbitrators was on one occasion absent. It was his business to object at the time and not to allow the proceedings to go on and terminate. The principle has been laid down by the Privy Council in Chowdhri Murtaya Hossain v. Mussamat Bibi Beehunissa (2). "The appellant," their Lordships say, "having a clear knowledge of the circumstance on which he might have founded an objection to the arbitrators proceeding to make their award, did submit to the arbitration going on and allowed the arbitrators to deal with the case as it stood before them, taking his chance of the decision being more or less favourable to himself, and it is too late for him after the award has been made, and on the application to file the award, to insist on this objection to the filing of the award." This seems to me to be precisely what the plaintiff's next friend did, and I cannot say that in accepting his conduct as an answer to the objection the learned District Munsif has gone beyond the discretion vested in him. There is clearly no question here of exceeding his jurisdiction.

Exception is then taken to the manner in which the arbitrators have dealt with the B and D Schedule properties. As regards the B Schedule property, it is said that they have not decided as between the plaintiff and the defendants to whom it belongs and as regards the D Schedule, that their decision was in conflict with admissions actually made by the defendants. It is to be observed, however, that these objections were not taken in the memorandum filed by the plaintiff upon the award and I see no reason accordingly why I should allow them to be taken now.

It only needs to be added that the Privy Council have held in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (3) that revision is generally objectionable in cases of awards, and I think that on the principles laid down in that case a Court should not interfere unless it finds not only an illegality committed but some substantial harm resulting from that illegality. I have not in anyway been shown how the latter condition is satisfied.

The Civil Revision Petition is dismissed with costs.

Muhammadian Law — Divorce — Words implying divorce—Express words for effecting divorce—Talak, what is.

The words 'I give up all relations and would have no connection of any sort' addressed by a Muhammadan husband to his wife are not express within the meaning of the Hanafi Muhammadan Law to effect a divorce nor are they understood in that law as implying divorce. Among Indian Muhammadans they are frequently used for the purpose of dissociating oneself from the company or the presence of the addressee, of relieving such a person from the obligation of rendering service to the user and also for the purpose of withdrawing restraints from the movements of addressee. The express words for effecting divorce are well known to be talak and its grammatical variations. These words are terms of art and the technical meaning which they have acquired by usage is freedom from the bondage of marriage and not from any other bondage. Once they are used they must be given effect to according to their technical import and evidence as to any intention to the contrary is not permissible according to the Hanafi Muhammadan Law. First Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 10th November, 1930.

Messrs. Ghulam Hasan and Iftikhar Husain, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M Wasim, Manni Lal and Siraj Husain, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is the defendant's appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hardoi dated the 10th of November, 1930.

Musammât Saghir-un-nisa was married to the defendant, Wajid Ali Khan, on the 12th of March, 1909, according to the Hanafi Muhammadan Law at Shahabad in the District of Hardoi. She died on the 11th of May 1928 and the plaintiff No. 1, Jafar Husain Khan, is her brother and Musammât Mahmud-un nisa, plaintiff No. 2, is her sister. It is admitted that the plaintiffs and the defendant are the sole heirs-at-law of Musammât Saghir un-nisa entitled to share in equal moieties in the inheritance.

The plaintiffs' case is that Musammât Saghir un-nisa's dower was fixed at Rs. 80,000 as a deferred dower at the time of her marriage with the defendant. The plaintiffs are thus entitled to recover Rs. 40,000 from the defendant. They also claim from the defendant certain ornaments the value of which they stated to be Rs. 1,063-8. Lastly they asked for a sum of Rs. 25,000, only by reason of the insufficiency of the defendant's means. In defence the defendant pleaded that the amount of dower fixed at the marriage was only Rs. 10,000, that Musammât Saghir-un-nisa had relinquished her claim for dower, whatever the amount, by executing a document dated the 4th of February, 1924, that early in December, 1921, the defendant had irrevocably divorced Musammât Saghir-un-nisa and that, therefore, counting the period of limitation for a claim for dower from December, 1921, the present suit was barred by time. The Court was also asked to determine the reasonable amount of dower under s. 5 of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, for which a decree might be passed against the defendant.

On the question of the amount of dower fixed at the marriage of Saghir-un-nisa with the defendant the finding of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge is that it was Rs. 80,000. The issue as to the release of dower has been decided by him in the negative and against the defendant. On the question of the alleged divorce in December, 1921, his finding is again in the negative and against the defendant. As to what was the reasonable amount of dower, having regard to the means of the husband and the status of the wife, for which a decree should be made in favour of the plaintiffs in the present case, his finding is that the defendant is possessed of property of the value of at least Rs. 90,000 and his opinion on this issue is that Rs. 30,000 was the reasonable amount of dower within the meaning of s. 5 of the Oudh Laws Act. Finally, he decreed the plaintiff's suit for their half share of Rs. 15,000. As regards ornaments, he has found that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree of Rs. 125 for their share in the value of the ornaments. Except the last-mentioned finding, every other finding of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge has been challenged before us.

There is no documentary evidence whatsoever to show as to what the amount of dower was but it is agreed that it was fixed at the marriage. The plaintiffs have, therefore, produced witnesses to prove that the dower was fixed at Rs. 80,000. On the other hand, the defendant has also examined witnesses in support of his case as to the amount of the dower. At the hearing of the appeal the record of the evidence produced on both sides was read to us in extenso. The conclusion at which we have reached is that the finding of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge is correct and must be accepted. The plaintiff's witnesses are Israr Husain Khan, Abdus Sattar Khan, Muhammad Raza Khan and Amir Husain Khan. All these four witnesses were present at the marriage. Amir Husain Khan acted as a Vakil at the marriage and Muhammad Raza Khan was a witness. Abdus Sattar Khan is the nephew of Musammât Saghir-un-nisa and Israr Husain Khan joined the marriage as a friend of the defendant. The Qazi who recited the formula is now dead. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has answered some of the criticisms advanced on behalf of the defendant against the testimony of these witnesses and has accepted their evidence as reliable and worthy of credence. In the arguments before us nothing was urged which would induce us to disagree with the learned Additional Subordinate Judge in his opinion as to the trustworthiness of the plaintiffs' witnesses. He has also given reasons for forming the opinion that the fixing of the amount of dower at Rs. 80,000 was in consonance with the probabilities and the circumstances of the case. He has pointed out that one Hakim Khadim Husain Khan, who was a holder of the title of Khan Bahadur, an Honorary Magistrate and one of the most respectable men of Shahabad, acted in loco parentis at Musammât Saghir-un-nisa's marriage. Her father had died. She was the first cousin of Khadim Husain Khan and the marriage took place at his house. The evidence on both sides agrees that the amount of dower was settled by him. In the case of Khadim Husain Khan's own daughters like sum of money, that is Rs 80,000 had been fixed as the dower. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has pointed out to the fact that Musammât Saghir-un-nisa's sister's dower, that is the plaintiff No. 2's, was also settled at Rs. 80,000. We are of opinion that these are sufficiently weighty grounds in support of his finding.

On the side of the defendant he himself went into the witness box and produced five more witnesses in support of his allegation as to the amount of the dower. Obviously the evidence of the defendant himself cannot be accepted without strong corroboration. Such a corroboration is not available out of the testimony of his witnesses, all of whom have been disbelieved by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. He has examined the statements of these witnesses with great care and rejected them as unworthy of belief. The result of his consideration of the evidence as a whole is thus stated by him:

"Thus it would appear that the evidence of the plaintiff with regard to the amount of dower is much more worthy of belief than the defendant's evidence which could not impress me."

We affirm this finding.

The plea of the relinquishment of dower has a short history behind it. The defendant filed two written statements in this case; the first on the 17th of April, 1930. This written statement has unfortunately not been translated and printed for the record of this appeal. In para. 12 of this written statement it was stated that Musammât Saghir-un-nisa had relinquished her claim for dower in favour of the defendant long before her death. No mention was made of any deed of relinquishment. The defendant filed a second written statement on the 14th of May, 1930, and in para. 12 of that written statement he mentioned a deed of release with reference to its date, the 14th of February, 1924. Along with this written statement the defendant produced in Court what purported to be the original deed of relinquishment. It was brought on the record of the case and marked as Ex. A-3. The plaintiffs then asked for a certified copy of it and received it. Subsequently the defendant also obtained a certified copy of the same. After this the original (Ex. A 3) disappeared from the record of the case. The defendant then substituted the certified copy which he had obtained and which was also marked as Ex. A-3. In the circumstances certified copy has been accepted as admissible in evidence in proof of the issue relating to the relinquishment. As to the loss of the original the learned Additional Subordinate Judge is of opinion that it was "to the advantage of the defendant for the plaintiffs have been deprived of the opportunity of disproving its genuineness by comparison of signature of Saghir on the original with her other signatures." He further points out that the amount of dower is not mentioned in this deed of release. This fact, he thinks, raises strong suspicion against the authenticity of the release. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge further comments on the fact that in the deed of release the marriage is stated to have taken place 20 years before its execution. This will place the marriage in February, 1901, while as a matter of fact it took place in March, 1909, but, says the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, "the present suit was instituted 20 years and some months after the marriage." He, therefore, opines that the deed of release was fabricated after the institution of the suit. The recital in the deed of continuous happy relations between the defendant and Musammât Saghir-un-nisa is also untrue according to the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. As to the direct evidence of proof of the deed of release furnished by the testimony of the defendant and his three witnesses, Obaidullah, Muhammad Ahmad and Muhammad Tahir Khan, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge is of opinion that it is unworthy of credence. He has examined the evidence in details and has given reasons for his opinion. We are not prepared to disagree with him. We, therefore, maintain the finding that the release is not proved.

The question as to the means of the husband for ascertaining the reasonable amount of dower has been considered by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge with care and caution. We adopt his finding that the dower in the present case should be fixed for the purpose of s. 5 of the Oudh Laws Act at Rs. 30,000 only. It now remains to consider the plea of divorce.

The question of divorce has been argued before us mainly as a proposition of law. So far as the facts are concerned we were asked in the first instance to accept the defendant's and his witnesses' testimony to the effect that the defendant pronounced the well-known formula of talaq thrice in rapid succession, that is to say, he actually said "main ne tumko talaq dia" (I have divorced thee). We agree with the learned Additional Subordinate Judge that it is impossible to accept this evidence as true. We also accept his view of the events as they happened. This view is supported by a letter of Musammât Saghir-un-nisa dated the 3rd of December, 1931, (Ex. 9). Exhibit 12 is the envelope containing Ex. 9 and bears postmark 'Bhopal 3rd December, 1931.' The letter is in the handwriting of Musammât Saghir-un-nisa herself and was addressed to her brother, Jafar Husain. On the record of the case it has come from the custody of Jafar Hussain. We hold in agreement with the learned Additional Subordinate Judge that only so much of the facts in connection with the question of divorce are proved as are proved by the contents of this letter.

It appears that one fine morning when the defendant was ready to leave his house for his office he found that his breakfast was not ready. Thereby he lost temper and addressing Musammât Saghir-un-nisa said that "He was entirely giving up all relations and would have no connection of any sort with her." As to the true import of these words Musammât Saghir-un-nisa asks in this letter the opinion of his brother as to whether they amounted to an irrevocable divorce. So far as we can gather anything from this letter as to the estate of her own mind it is clear that she never treated the utterances of the defendant as a final divorce. The defendant in his evidence in the case says:

"I really never intended to divorce her. Excepting sexual intercourse I treated Saghir in all respects after divorce till her death exactly as I treated her before the divorce. Saghir was unfit for sexual intercourse on account of her illness from 1918 till her death. There was no change in the treatment of Saghir too towards me before and after divorce."

After the death of Musammât Saghir-un-nisa the defendant performed the obsequies as if she was his undivorced wife. Thus it is clear that there was no divorce either in thought or in action: but it is argued that the words used by the defendant as evidenced by the contents of the letter amount in law as a complete divorce. This is the question which we have to decide. The latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee is contained in the decision of Ma Mi v. Kallander Ammal (1). Sir John Wallis, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, said:—

"According to that law (Muhammadan Law), a husband can effect a divorce whenever he desires. He may do so by words without any talaknama or written document, and no particular form of words is prescribed. If the words are 'express' or well understood as implying divorce, such as talak, no proof of intention is required. If the words used are ambiguous the intention of the user must be proved."

With reference to this pronouncement argument was addressed to us that the words used by the defendant in this case are not ambiguous and if they are not ambiguous divorce would come into effect in spite of the defendant's intention to the contrary.

We have already rejected the evidence that the defendant used the word 'talak' in addressing Musammât Saghir-un-nisa on that particular morning. The words which we have found on the authority of the letter (Ex. 9) to have been used were "I give up all relations and would have no connection of any sort". These words are certainly not 'express' within the meaning of the Hanafi Muhammadan Law to effect a divorce nor are they understood in that law as implying divorce. The express words are well known to be talak and its grammatical variations, the root being composed of letters (tu, lam, q). These words are terms of art and the technical meaning which they have acquired by usage is 'freedom from the bondage of marriage' and not from any other bondage. Once they are used they must be given effect according to their technical import and evidence as to any intention to the contrary is not permissible according to the Hanafi Muhammadan Law. Several illustrations of the express formula talak are given in Hedaya: Anta talaqun (Thou art the objective of divorce); Mutalliqa (Thou art divorced); Talaqtuka (I have divorced thee). In Hedaya the reason for treating these expressions as terms of art is given as follows:—

Pakana sarihan wa innahu yogeburrajate binnasse wala yastagera illanneyate leannahu sarihan fehe begnalabatil-istemale.

(Therefore they amount to express divorce. To this is attached reversibility and such a divorce is free from the question of intention because usage preponderates). Now it is clear that the word 'talaq' with its grammatical variations has acquired this technical meaning by reason of usage. It may be a moot question whether the same meaning must always be attached to those words when used by the Urdu speaking Muhammadan community of India. The question assumes a more serious importance when words other than talaq are found to have been used by a member of the same community. We on our part are unable to affirm that apart from the word 'talaq' there are words of Urdu used by the Musalmans of India bearing the same technical meaning as the word 'talaq' bears. We find this question raised in an Urdu translation of Hedaya by Maulana Syed Ameer Ali printed in Newal Kishore Press, Lucknow.

It is interesting to note that even in the use of the word talaq the change in phonetics alters the meaning. Hedaya says—

Lau qala anta mutliqa betaskinettae la yakuna talaqan illa binniyate.

(If it is said mutliqa with sukun on ta then this is not divorce without the intention). All this shows how much the legal effect of the use of the word 'talaq' depends upon the accuracy of its form and the usage which has clothed it with that technical connotation. We are not aware of and we have tried in vain to find in Arabic text books of Muhammadan Law any other word than 'talaq' as a well understood expression implying divorce without proof of intention or circumstances. All other expressions are treated in the books not under Talaq-i-sarihi (express divorce) but under Talaq-i-kinaya (implied divorce). The expression of the latter class are always regarded as ambiguous and the meaning of 'divorce' is given to them only on proof of the accompanying intention or the surrounding circumstances. This is certainly so in the Hanafi Muhammadan Law though there is some difference in this respect between that law and the Shafai Law.

The Chapter on divorce in Hedaya begins by saying Attalaqo ala zerbaine sarih wa kanaya (there are two kinds of talaq, express and by implication). After having dealt with the former the Hedaya proceeds: Ammazzarbussani wa howat kanayato—La yaqaa behattalaque illa binniyate au bedalatilthale.

(Now as to the second class, and they are Kinayas which do not effect divorce without intention or the force of surrounding circumstances). Under this heading several forms of expressions are given which may or may not have the effect of a divorce according to the intention and the circumstances. It is not possible to identify the expressions used in this case in Urdu with any of the expressions dealt with by the author of Hedaya in Arabic. One thing is however clear that it is not shown by proof nor is it within our knowledge that the words used by the defendant in this particular case have acquired by usage the meaning which the word 'talaq' bears among the Muhammadans of India. At the best they may be used with the intention of effecting a divorce or they may be used without such an intention. We are clearly of opinion that they are ambiguous and as it is admitted that the intention of the user of those words was not to effectuate a divorce the words must be treated as innocuous altogether. Amongst the Indian Muhammadans they are frequently used for the purpose of disassociating oneself from the company or the presence of the addressee, of relieving such a person from the obligations of rendering service to the user and also for the purpose of withdrawing restraints from the movements of the addressee.

Amongst the expressions given under the heading of 'divorce by implication' in Hedaya are certain expressions which when used in anger constitute divorce even in the absence of any intention to effect a divorce and on this part of the book great reliance was placed by the learned Advocate for the defendant in support of his arguments. The particular passage in Hedaya is as follows :—

"Kaqaulehi etadi wa ikhtiari wa amreka beyadeka fainnahula yadigo feha leannal aqabe yadullo ala iradatittalaqe."

(In expressions such as 'count', 'choose', 'your work is in your hands' intention against divorce will not be affirmed because anger indicates that divorce was intended). It is argued that in the circumstances in which the defendant used the expressions aforementioned they establish a divorce.

We are of opinion that this is not the meaning of the passage which we have just now quoted. When read with the context it will be found that the passage is used in relation to the question of assent on the part of the wife or exclamations of contumely or reproach on the part of the husband. It is also clear from the context of the passages preceding the one just now quoted that expressions such as these when used by a husband in reply to a requisition of divorce are construed to effect a divorce as they cannot bear a construction of denial; but apart from this we are quite clear in our mind that expressions such as the defendant used in the present case in Urdu are never, among the members of the community to which he and his deceased wife belonged, understood proprio vigore to effect a divorce. It will be seen that we have refrained from referring to Hamilton's Hedaya because it was suggested in Asha Bibi v Kadir Ibrahim Rowther (2) that it may not be a correct translation of the original Arabic text, being a translation of the Persian version of Hedaya. We ourselves do not agree with this suggestion. Whenever we had occasion to refer to Hedaya in its original Arabic form we have found that the translation by Hamilton is not only accurate but is also best in form and elegance, if we may respectfully say so.

On the above grounds we agree with the learned Additional Subordinate Judge on the above question also and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI of 1825), ss. 2, 3, 4, scope of—Alluvion and diluvion—River separating land from one estate and joining to another—Land identifiable—Property in such land—Dhardhura, custom of—Essentials.

When there is no local usage of the nature referred to in s. 2, Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation, and a river by a sudden change of its course separates a considerable piece of land from one estate and joins it to another estate without destroying its identity and preventing its recognition, such land on being clearly recognised remains the property of its original owner. Where the evidence falls very far short of proving a clear and definite usage immemorably established that the main channel of the river dividing two villages shall be the constant boundary line between them, whatever changes may take place in the course of the river so as to bring the case within the purview of s. 2, Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation, the case falls within the purview of ss. 3 and 4 of that Regulation. [p. 214, cols. 1 & 2; p. 218, col. 2.]

Where a large area is taken away from one village to another, the party claiming accretion must satisfy the Court by clear and definite evidence not only that there is a general custom of Dhardhura, but also that such custom contemplates such far-reaching consequences as the transfer of a very large tract of recognisable land from one village to another as a result of a sudden change in the course of the river. First Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 26th November, 1929.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Ali Zaheer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and S. N. Roy, for the Respondent No. 1.

Judgment—The matter in dispute in the five suits out of which these appeals arise is identical.

The plaintiff in all the cases is Raja Pashupat Partab Singh, the zemindar of village Dewara Gang-Barar situate on the north bank of the river Gogra in the District of Basti and the defendants are the zemindars of five mahals of village Ausanpur situated on the opposite side of the river in the District of Fyzabad. The plaintiff brought the suits to obtain possession over a tract of land aggregating an area of 2135 bighas, 10 biswas and 10 biswansis on the allegation that in 1334 Fasli owing to a change in the course of the river Gogra, the land in question had passed from the north to the south side of the river, where the various defendants had taken possession of it as part of their respective mahals. He also claimed mesne profits. His main plea was that, as this tract of land could be identified as part of village Dewara Gang Barar, he was entitled to retain possession of it, although it had passed over to the opposite side of the river.

The main defence in all the suits was that the deep stream rule, known as Dhardhura, applied to the boundary between the two villages and, therefore, the land in suit had become part of village Ausanpur. A number of subsidiary pleas were taken on both sides with which we are not concerned.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the custom of Dhardhura had not been proved. He also found that an area of 1787 bighas 2 biswas and 8 biswansis of the land in suit could be identified as being part of village Dewara Gang Barar and that this land had been cut off from the north bank of the river by a sudden change in the course of the river in 1334 Fasli. He accordingly gave the plaintiff decrees for the possession of this area, reserving his decision as to the amount of mesne profits to be decreed until the plaintiff had been put into possession. The defendants have appealed.

Of the above findings the only one that has been challenged before us is that relating to the custom of Dhardhura and this is, therefore, the only point that we have to consider.

The defendants base their case on s. 2 of the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI of 1825), which is as follows:—

"Wherever any clear and definite usage of shikast paiwas respecting the disjunction and junction of land by the encroachment or recess of a river, may have been immemorially established, for determining the rights of the proprietors of two more contiguous estates divided by a river (such as that the main channel of the river dividing the estates shall be the constant boundary between them, whatever changes may take place in the course of the river, by encroachment on one side and accession on the other), the usage so established shall govern the decision of all claims and disputes relative to alluvial land between the parties whose estates may be liable to such usage."

On the other hand the plaintiff maintains that the case is governed by ss. 3 and 4 of the same Regulation of which the relevant portions are to the effect that when there is no local usage of the nature referred to in s. 2, and a river by a sudden change of its course separates a considerable piece of land from one estate, and joins it to another estate, without destroying its identity and preventing its recognition, such land, on being clearly recognised, shall remain the property of the original owner.

Admittedly the burden of proving the custom set up by them was upon the defendants. Under the terms of s. 2 of the Regulation such custom, to be conclusive of the rights of riparian owners, must be clear and definite and immemorially established. The deep stream rule, however convenient it may be for administrative purposes, is apt to be productive of gross inequities as between the proprietors of continuous estates divided by a river. The Courts, therefore, which have had occasion to consider such questions, have in most cases laid emphasis on the point that the proof of the custom must be clear and unequivocal, particularly in cases where a large tract of land has gone over from one bank to the other by a sudden change in the course of the river. Thus in the earliest case on the subject, one of the year 1864, that has been cited before us, Faroo Singh v. Shurfoodeen (1) it was held that the custom of Dhardhura is, when applied to land gained otherwise than by gradual accretion, opposed to equity and it is doubtful how far, in extreme cases, in which it would lead to the transfer of large tracts of land, the Courts would be warranted in applying it. Such a custom must be proved not by vague assertions of witnesses, but by a sufficient enumeration of instances. In Badraddin v. Tej Ram (2) a Divisional Bench of the Allahabad High Court laid down that there is no charm in the terms "Dhardhura" and the mere allegation of the existence of the custom of Dhardhura cannot necessarily mean that the custom applies so as to confiscate what was, the day before, the property of another man. All customs that may have, from time immemorial, been governing the rights of the parties, shall continue to do so, in spite of the Regulation XI of 1825. Such an immemorial custom may be one applicable even to a case of a sudden change in the course of the river. Such a custom, which has a very far-reaching consequence, must be established by clear and cogent evidence and all the incidents of the custom must be pleaded and will have to be proved. The Courts have gone further and have considered the question whether, even when there is a definite custom of Dhardhura, such a custom is applicable under all circumstances. In another very early case, of the year 1868, also concerned with the river Gogra, Ranee Katiyane v. Muhammad Sharf-ud deen (3), the existence of the custom of Dhardhura was admitted, but the case was remanded for determining whether the custom extended to alluvial land capable of identification after severance. A similar question was considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, consisting of the Chief Justice and four Judges, in the case of Kunj Behari Lal v. Jai Mal Singh (4). The learned Judges held that even where the custom of Dhardhura has been established, and in one particular year the river made a new channel with the result that a very large area (but considerably smaller than the area involved in the case before us) was taken away from the village of the plaintiff and added to the village of the defendant, the custom of Dhardhura did not apply in the absence of any evidence that such an event had ever occurred before.

The river Gogra forms part of the boundary between the Provinces of Agra and Oudh, and as was observed by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Mir Bakar Husain v. Gulam Bhewani Pal (5) which was also a case relating to the river Gogra, it would be extremely inconvenient if the Allahabad and the Oudh Courts were to differ on the principle by which the decision of such claims should be guided. We find ourselves however in complete agreement with the principles laid down in the cases cited above. We consider that for the appeals to succeed the defendants-appellants must satisfy us by clear and definite evidence not only that there is a general custom of Dhardhura, but also that such custom contemplates such far-reaching consequences as the transfer of a very large tract of recognisable land from one village to another as a result of a sudden change in the course of the river.

The evidence produced by the defendants in support of the alleged custom falls under the following three heads:—

Firstly, certain official correspondence at the time of the First Regular Settlement of the Fyzabad District in 1866 between the Settlement Officer, Fyzabad, and the Commissioner of the Division relating to certain proceedings for the recording of the custom of Dhardhura as between the villages on the two banks of the river Gogra together with certain agreements (ikrarnamas) executed by the zamindars of both Dewara Gang Barar and Ausanpur in this connection.

Secondly, evidence as to the respective areas of the two villages at various periods from 1860 to 1927 from which the inference is sought to be drawn that, in the absence of evidence of any litigation at the time of any of the accretions to one side at the expense of the other suggested by the figures, the owners of the two villages must be deemed to have acquiesced in the custom of Dhardhura.

Third, a suit in the year 1900 between Raja Ram Singh, the predecessor-in-interest of the present plaintiff, and the owner of village Naipura, belonging to the Bhati Estate, on the Fyzabad side of the river opposite a portion of Dewara Gang Barar, which ended in a compromise under the terms of which the parties recognised the existence of the custom of Dhardhura as between these two villages.

We shall proceed to deal with these three heads seriatim.

The purport of the correspondence at the time of the First Regular Settlement of the Fyzabad District was that the general custom of Dhardhura had been accepted by the Financial Commissioner and the Board of Revenue for the villages lying on the banks of the river Gogra, and it was decided to take agreements from such of the owners of the riparian villages, who were prepared to admit the custom of Dhardhura and to call on any of them, who did not admit such custom, but set up a different custom, to prove the same. The object of these proceedings appears to have been to record the custom in the Records of Rights of the villages concerned. Agreements were accordingly taken from the majority of the zamindars of the villages on that part of the Gogra which lies between the Fyzabad and Basti Districts including the zamindars of Dewara Gang Barar and Ausanpur. In these agreements the zamindars of these two villages admitted the Dhardhura custom and undertook not to act contrary to it. While, however, the proceedings were still pending, the Board of Revenue cancelled its orders and directed its officers to take no further steps in the matter, having come to the conclusion that the question would be more appropriately decided by the Courts when a dispute regarding the title to land transferred from one bank to the other by the action of the river should come before them. Similar agreements, which were also to have been taken from the zemindars of the villages on that part of the river Gogra lying between the Fyzabad and Gorakhpur Districts, were accordingly not taken and, from the fact that no wajib-ul-arz or rewaj-i-am has been produced in the present case on either side we may safely conclude that no entry of any such custom was made in these records.

The evidentiary value of this correspondence and these ikrarnamas to prove the custom of Dhardhura has been discussed at length in the case of Baqar Husain v. Gulam Bhawani Pal (5), to which we have already referred. The conclusion reached by the learned Judicial Commissioner in deciding that case was that the record of the inquiries made by the revenue authorities did not establish that a local custom of Dhardhura invariably obtained, but only that such custom was found extensively to exist, and that the agreements could not be taken to mean that the river-side proprietors, who agreed to the custom of Dhardhura, understood it to include the complete transfer of proprietary rights to be effected by a change of the course of the river Gogra. He accordingly dismissed the appeal of the plaintiff, who had sought to obtain possession of a large tract of land belonging to the defendant that had been transferred from the north to the south side of the river Gogra.

The effect of such agreements was considered in another case by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in 23 Ind. Cas. 224 (Janki Kunwar v. Narendra Bahadur Pal Singh (6)), to which reference has been made by the Court below. This case also related to a considerable tract of land which had been transferred from one bank to the other by sudden changes in the course of the river Gogra in the years 1303 and 1314 Fasli, but the identity of which had not been lost. The weight that could be attached to these ikrarnamas as proof of the custom set up was discussed at length by the Judicial Commissioner Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. O. It was observed that the ikrarnama had not resulted in any entry in the Record of Rights prepared at the time and from the circumstances under which the ikrarnamas were taken, they could not be held to be adequate proof of the custom laid down therein.

We see no reason to take a different view from that taken in these two cases with regard to the value of the documents in question as proving the existence of a custom of Dhardhura extending to the transfer of a large and identifiable area of land from a village on one bank to the village on the opposite bank by a sudden change in the course of the river.

Coming to the second head of evidence, we do not think that the existence of the custom set up by the defendants can be legitimately inferred from the changes in the areas of the two villages concerned from time to time combined with the fact that there is no evidence of any litigation having taken place at the time of any increase in the area of the one accompanied by a decrease in area of the other. In the first place the figures to which our attention has been drawn are very incomplete. It is difficult to trace out any correspondence between the areas of the two villages. In fact for no single year, except 1927, are the areas of both the villages shown. It is clear, therefore, that there is no material on the record from which to draw any inference at all. What the figures do bring out very clearly is a steady decrease in the area of Dewara Gang Barar from 1914, when it was 6250 bighas, to 1926, when it was only 3653 bighas. In the second place, it does not necessarily follow that, even when a large portion of a village is cut off by the river, it can be identified with land newly added to the other side of the river. It is a matter of careful measurement in each case. We have little doubt that in many cases there is no identity between the land cut away from one side and the new land accreted to the other, and also that in many cases land cut away from one bank disappears altogether. In the case of Shohrat Singh v. Ghulam Ezid (7) where there was evidence from the Settlement maps that, in the course of a number of years, an area of land formerly belonging to one village, had passed over to the village on the opposite side of the river by reason of the river shifting its position, and had been treated as belonging to the village to which it had gone over, a Bench of the Allahabad High Court refused to draw the inference that, because there was no evidence of any objection having been made by the proprietors of the former village, this proved the existence of the custom of Dhardhura. The Court observed that, if this custom was the only possible explanation, the inference might legitimately have been drawn but that it could not be drawn when there was nothing to show what actually happened during the period in question. In the present case, as we have already pointed out, not only are there other possible explanations, besides the existence of the custom of Dhardhura of there having been no case between the owners of the two villages at the time of previous changes in their respective areas, but there is also no satisfactory data on which to base any conclusion whatever.

We now come to the third and last part of the defendants' evidence, the litigation in 1900 between Raja Ram Singh, the predecessor-in-interest of the present plaintiff, and the owner of another village Naipura facing a portion of Dewara Gang Barar on the other side of the river. As we have stated above, this litigation ended in a compromise. This compromise contains an admission by the parties that the custom of Dhardhura existed for ever as between these two villages. It also contains an undertaking that both parties shall observe this custom and shall make no claim in future to any land thrown up by the river on the side of the other village whether it had thrown up gradually or in a single block. The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants relies on this compromise, firstly, as an admission by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff as to the existence of a custom of Dhardhura of such a nature as to extend to the transfer of even a large tract of land from the one side of the river to the other by a sudden change in its course, and, secondly, as a specific instance of such a custom.

The learned Subordinate Judge was not disposed to accept the compromise as evidence of such a custom of Dhardhura being applicable to the present case on the ground that, from the admission of such a custom as between the villages Dewara Gang Barar and Naipura, it would not be safe to assume that the same custom existed as between the villages Dewara Gang Barar and Ausanpur. He had before him the bare compromise. The plaint to which the compromise refers was tendered in evidence by the defendants in the Court below, but as no proof of the signature of the late Raja Ram Singh was forthcoming and the age of the document was short by a few months of the thirty years after which its genuineness could be presumed, that Court had no alternative but to reject it. The defendants have applied for the plaint to be received in evidence in this Court. It is necessary to have it before us for the proper appreciation of the import of the compromise and the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has agreed that it should be admitted in evidence. We have accordingly acceded to the defendants' request and admitted the plaint in evidence.

The claim put forward by Raja Ram Singh, as disclosed by the plaint was that the land in suit, which was 2850 bighas in area, had formerly been part of village Dewara Gang Barar and had gradually been washed away between the years 1878 and 1888. Between the latter year and 1891, it had gradually been redeposited at the same place, and the revenue payable had been settled with the plaintiff. As a dispute had arisen between the plaintiff and the proprietor of the village Naipura on the opposite side of the river with regard to the ownership of this land, proceedings had been instituted against both parties under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure resulting in the land being attached and the parties referred to the Civil Court for the determination of the question of title. The suit was accordingly instituted by Raja Ram Singh on the allegation that the land was his property, not only by custom of Dhardhura, which existed from time immemorial between the two villages and applied as well to other villages situated on the bank of the Gogra, but also as having formerly formed part of his village. He further alleged that it was not the fact that the land had been thrown up all at once, as had been stated by the defendants (presumably in the proceedings under s. 145 Criminal Procedure Code) but it had actually been redeposited gradually. Such then was the case set up by Raja Ram Singh. The frame of the suit suggests that he was not certain in his mind as to the validity of the claim to so large a tract of land based solely on the custom of Dhardhura, since he did not confine his case to the custom of Dhardhura, but also claimed that the land had actually formed part of village Dewara Gang Barar before it was washed away, and he was at pains to make out that it had not been thrown up by a sudden change in the course of the river although it could hardly be said that the emergence of 2850 bighas in the course of the short space of three years was a gradual accession.

The compromise admitted the plaintiff's claim. It is true that of the various grounds taken in the plaint the only one that is emphasised in the compromise is the custom of Dhardhura. The admission of the existence of the custom is in the following terms:—

As between Dewara Gang Barar belonging to the plaintiff and the village Naipura to the defendant the same custom of Dhardhura, as has been prevalent for ever, shall exist."

The compromise does not further define the existing custom, though it goes on to lay down that in all further disputes it shall be applied to all accretions to the land on either side whether gradual or thrown up en bloc.

Even, therefore, if we were disposed to hold that the custom applicable to the boundary between Dewara Gang Barar and Ausanpur would in all probability be the same as that applicable between Dewara Gang Barar and Naipura, reading the plaint and the compromise together we are certainly not prepared to regard the latter as an admission of the immemorial existence of a custom of Dhardhura extending to cases where a large tract of land identifiable as part of the one village has become attached to the village on the other side by a sudden shifting of the deep stream.

With regard to the portion of the compromise relating to future disputes as the boundary between the two villages, this can hardly be put on any higher footing than an agreement between the parties in that case, and as such, it would not be binding between the present parties in the case before us. In the case of Bisnessur v. Mohessur Bax (8), their Lordships of the Privy Council had occasion to consider a similar agreement entered into by the zemindars of contiguous villages in Bengal divided by the river Ganges. Their Lordships were of opinion that whatever may have been the effect of such agreement as a contract between the two zemindars who executed it, it cannot be binding on the defendants in the case before them, who derived their title from a person who was a stranger to it. Their Lordships considered that it was not in the power of the then zemindar to impress upon the land a quasi-servitude, or to burden it with a covenant which would run with it into the hands of any possessor of it by any title.

Turning to the other aspect of the compromise, namely, that it is a specific instance of an absolute custom of Dhardhura having been acted upon, we feel doubtful whether, in view of what we have stated above, it would be safe to accept one single instance of such a custom, even if the instance were clear and unambiguous as establishing a custom of Dhardhura applicable even to such an extreme case as the present one. The instance, however is far from being unambiguous as we have indicated above. The suit was decided by a compromise and not by a judicial pronouncement on the matters in issue, and it is impossible to say what were the considerations that led the defendant to give up his defence and enter into the compromise.

We are accordingly unable to accept the compromise either as an admission by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff of the existence of a custom of Dhardhura, such as would include the transfer of title in a large tract of land which had belonged to one village, but had passed over by a sudden change in the course of the river to the other bank of the river without its identity being lost, or as an instance in which such a custom has been accepted.

In our opinion, therefore, the evidence produced by the defendants-appellants falls very far short of proving a clear and definite usage immemorially established that the main channel of the river dividing the two villages shall be the constant boundary between them, whatever changes may take place in the course of the river so as to bring the case within the purview of s. 2 of Bengal Regulation, XI of 1825. The case has been rightly held to fall under ss. 3 and 4 of the same Regulation.

The result is that all the five appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

U. P. Excise Act (IV of 1910), ss. 60 (a), 60-A—'Permits', significance of—Person liable for use of house for offence under the Act—Large quantity of cocaine found in courtyard—Accused found near by—Inference—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 539-B—Local inspection—Separate record of inspection, necessity of.

The words of s. 60-A of the U. P. Excise Act imply a single person in a controlling position over the premises which is indicated by the use of the word 'permits' later on in the section. [p. 220, col. 2.]

It is only the person who has the use of the house in such a way as to be in a position to prevent, if he so likes, the illicit sale of cocaine in that building who is liable for permitting the building under his use and control to be used for the commission of an offence under the Excise Act. [p. 221, col. 1.]

Where a large quantity of cocaine in a number of tin boxes placed in a row is found in a courtyard close to a house and the accused are found to be near the place from where the cocaine is recovered and they do not explain how they came to be there and how the cocaine happened to be found placed in a row, the conclusion is inevitable that either the accused came there to purchase the cocaine or they were there to sell the cocaine which was found in front of them. [p. 222, col. 1.]

A local inspection must be held sparingly and the danger of such an inspection is intensified when one or both of the parties are absent at the time of the local inspection. There is no compliance with the imperative provisions of s. 539-B, Criminal Procedure Code, where there is no separate record made by the Sessions Judge concerning the inspection he made of the locality and the facts that he found which would be helpful to him in appreciating the evidence given at the trial. [p. 221, col. 2.]

Criminal Revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 14th March 1931.

Dr. J. N. Misra and Messrs R. F. Bahadurji, S. S. Chaudhri and Shankar Sahai for the Applicant.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—These are three connected applications for revision arising out of an appellate judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow upholding the conviction and sentence passed upon the applicant Wilayat Husain for an offence under s. 60-A of the U. P. Excise Act, and the convictions and sentences passed upon the applicants Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman for an offence under s. 60 A of the U. P. Excise Act.

The facts out of which these applications for revision have arisen are briefly as follows:—

A raid was made by the U. I. D. Excise Inspector accompanied by other officers upon the house of Wilayat Husain on the night of the 23rd July, 1930. In a portion of the raided building, which is not a residential house, and which is marked on the sketch of the locality as house No. 1 by the lower Appellate Court, in a Courtyard close to the shrine of Syed Nasiruddin Shah (Dalan mutasil mazar dari par rakhi hoi ek dibya etc.) were found a number of small tin boxes or dibyas containing cocaine spread out on a carpet or darri, and three men, namely Raza Husain and his servant Abdul Rahman and Jan Ali, and a woman were found in this dalan or courtyard at the time of the raid. The woman somehow managed to escape arrest but the three men Raza Husain, Abdul Rahman and Jan Ali were caught. Of these three men Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman are two of the applicants before me. A recovery list (Ex. 1) was prepared by the Excise Inspector in the presence of Raza Husain (bamaudjudgi Raza Husain) and others. It is significant to note that this recovery list (Ex. 1) does not state that the cocaine was found in the possession of Raza Husain or of anybody else, but merely that it was found in a place from where it was suspected that it used to be sold. The Excise Inspector after preparing the search list (Ex. 1) and taking possession of the cocaine and cash found in the building submitted a report on the 25th of July, 1930, to the District Magistrate praying for a warrant of arrest against Wilayat Husain who was to be charged under ss. 14 and 15 of Act II of 1930 (The Dangerous Drugs Act of 1930). The Excise Inspector desired that Raza Husain and Musammat Tabko should be prosecuted under s. 14 of the same Act and Abdul Rahman and Jan Ali under s. 21 also of the same Act, that is to say, for abetment of offences under ss. 14 and 15 of the Act. The Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Sharafat Ullah Khan on the 10th October 1930 framed charges under s. 60 (a), s. 60 (i) and s. 60-A of the U. P. Excise Act (Act IV of 1910) against all four accused persons Wilayat Husain, Raza Husain, Abdul Rahman and Jan Ali. He convicted all the accused of an offence under s. 60 (a) of Act IV of 1910. He acquitted Raza Husain, Abdul Rahman and Jan Ali of an offence under s. 60 (i) of Act IV of 1910 but convicted Wilayat Husain of an offence under s. 60 (i) of the U. P. Excise Act. He also found all four accused guilty of an offence under s. 60-A of Act IV of 1910 and he further bound them all over to be of good behaviour under s. 60-B of the same Act for a period of three years.

In appeal the learned Sessions Judge set aside the convictions and sentences passed upon Wilayat Husain under ss. 60 (a) and 60 (i) of the U. P. Excise Act, but upheld his conviction and sentence under s. 60-A of the Act. He further set aside the conviction and sentence of Jan Ali on all three charges and acquitted him. He also set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman for offences under s. 60-A of Act IV of 1910 but maintained their conviction and sentence under s. 60(a) of the Act.

In revision it has been strenuously argued before me that there is no evidence at all to support the conviction of any of these applicants for the offence of which they have been convicted. I will first take up the case of Wilayat Husain who has been convicted under s. 60-A of the U. P. Excise Act. It has been found as a fact by the lower Appellate Court that Wilayat Husain was not the owner of the building (marked house No. 1 in the sketch) in which the cocaine was found and that it was not strictly speaking in his occupation even. The learned Sessions Judge has, however, surmised that in view of Wilayat Husain's close connection by marriage with the real owners of the house in which the cocaine was found it was quite probable that he had the use of this house also. This however, is not, to my mind, a legitimate mode of reasoning. No evidence has been adduced by the prosecution to prove that this surmise of the learned Sessions Judge is a fact. The alleged use of the house by Wilayat Husain is a concrete fact which is capable of direct proof and it cannot be legitimately deduced from the mere fact that he happens to be a relation of the real owners of the house who are the heirs of one Mariam Bibi. In the second place, the learned Sessions Judge had drawn an inference adverse to the applicant Wilayat Husain from the fact that he had a water connection installed in the courtyard of house No. 1. The mere fact that Wilayat Husain had installed such a water connection in the courtyard of house No. 1 would not prove that he was using house No. 1 as his residential house or makan maskuna. It is in evidence that Wilayat Husain lives on the first floor of house No. 2 shown in the plan. House No. 1 consists of only a tomb and a dalan or courtyard. The place occupied by the tomb of a saint can hardly be utilised for any secular purpose such as that of a dwelling house. It is established from the evidence on the record that nobody lives in house No. 1, and the prosecution evidence, including that of the City Kotwal, proves that this portion of the house marked No. 1 is a shrine wherein is found the tomb of a Muhammadan saint Syed Nasir-uddin Shah who is connected with the well-known saint Syed Salar Mahsud Ghazi of Bahraich. This portion of the building marked as house No. 1 originally belonged to one Hyder Husain and on his death it came to his daughter Mariam Bibi and now it is in the possession of her heirs. The water connection installed in the courtyard of house No. 1 by Wilayat Husain for his own convenience would not prove that house No. 1 was in his occupation or user. In fact the learned Sessions Judge himself in another part of his judgment writes in connection with s. 60-A of Act IV of 1910 that "the words to my mind imply a single person in a controlling position over the premises which is indicated by the use of the words 'permits' later on in the section". I entirely agree with the learned Sessions Judge so far as his interpretation of the words of s. 60-A of the Excise Act goes, but I regret I cannot accept his contention that the mere installation of a water tap or some water connection in the courtyard of house No. 1 would be tantamount per se to the use by Wilayat Husain of the building marked No. 1 in which the cocaine was found. The applicant's concern was with the water tap and not with the courtyard in which the water connection was installed and it is moreover in evidence that the dalan or courtyard of the building marked No. 1 in the sketch is not for residential purposes but is a mausoleum or shrine of a saint where any member of the public can come at any hour of the day or night to make votive offerings at the tomb or to sing qawwali songs, for the door leading to the tomb of the saint is always kept open. Such a place cannot be said to be in the use or occupation of any one. The water connection installed by the applicant Wilayat Husain has not been proved to be in connection with the use of that portion of the building marked No. 1 in which the cocaine was found and in the absence of any proof connecting the installation of the water pipe by Wilayat Husain with the use or occupation of house No. 1 no Court can legitimately draw the inference that the applicant Wilayat Husain was a person having the use of this house for the purpose of illicit sale of cocaine from the mere fact of the installation of the water connection. This installation of the water connection in the courtyard of house No. 1 is, therefore, not in my opinion a piece of circumstantial evidence incriminating Wilayat Husain and making him out to be an occupier or a person having the use of house No. 1 so as to be in a position to prevent, if he so liked, the illicit sale of cocaine in that building. It is only such a person who is liable under s. 60-A of Act IV of 1910 for permitting the building under his use and control to be used for the commission of an offence under the Excise Act.

The next piece of circumstantial evidence upon which the learned Sessions Judge relies is that the plan Ex. 9 shows that a portion of the house which corresponds to the house marked No. 1 in the sketch is shown in the plan (Ex. 9) as the house of Wilayat Husain, and this plan (Ex. 9) was filed by Wilayat Husain along with his application to the Municipal Board of Lucknow for permission to erect a pucca building thereon. This plan (Ex. 9) is not legally proved but assuming that it was filed by Wilayat Husain, I find that it does not advance the case for the Crown in any way, for it is proved on the record and found by the learned Sessions Judge that this house marked No. 1 does not belong to the applicant Wilayat Husain, and a mere mistake in the plan (Ex. 9) wrongly describing this house No. 1 as belonging to Wilayat Husain will not make the latter out to be the owner or occupier of this house or a person having the use of this house. Wilayat Husain was not asked to explain the plan (Ex. 9) and as the plan was not drawn up by him, he cannot be held responsible for any slight inaccuracy there may be in it nor can any inference adverse to him be legitimately drawn from the misdescription of the house in the plan Ex. 9.

The next piece of circumstantial evidence from which an adverse inference has been drawn by the learned Sessions Judge against the applicant Wilayat Husain is that the door of house No. 2 was found closed at the time when the Judge went to make his local inspection and this door which was marked "Y" in the sketch by the Judge apparently always remained closed, and so it was inferred that the passage from house No. 2 into the lane was through house No. 1 and that, therefore, the applicant Wilayat Husain was to be deemed to have the use of the building marked house No. 1 in the sketch. It is a matter for regret that the learned Sessions Judge when he went to make a local inspection of the house of the accused did not see to it that the accused or their Counsel were present at the time when he made the inspection. He also did not comply with the imperative provisions of

s. 539-B of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is no separate record made by the learned Sessions Judge concerning the inspection he made of the locality and the facts that he found which would be helpful to him in appreciating the evidence given at the trial. As was held by the Patna High Court in a case reported as Ram Sahai Singh v. Dwarka Singh (1) that a local inspection must be held sparingly, and the danger of such local inspection is intensified when one or both of the parties are absent at the time of the local inspection. But apart from these irregularities, it is clear that the learned Sessions Judge has drawn a wrong inference from the mere fact that the door of house No. 2 happened to be closed at the time when he went to make his inspection. The learned Counsel of the applicant Raza Husain has argued before me that Raza Husain and Wilayat Husain had shut the door of house No. 2 because they had to come to Court to hear judgment on the day when the learned Sessions Judge happened to make the local inspection without their knowledge. This explanation seems to me on the face of it satisfactory and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary the conclusion drawn by the learned Sessions Judge from the fact of his finding the door of house No. 2 closed that Wilayat Husain was using the building marked No. 1 is not legitimate.

I have thus shown above that all the circumstantial evidence from which the learned Sessions Judge has drawn the inference that the applicant Wilayat Husain was the person who had the use of the house marked No. 1 in the sketch has really no evidentiary value, and as the learned Sessions Judge has held that there is no direct evidence to prove that Wilayat Husain was the owner or occupier of the house or a person who had the use of the place marked No. 1 in the sketch, I must, therefore, hold that there is no evidence at all to justify the conviction of the applicant Wilayat Husain under s. 60 A of the U. P. Excise Act. I, therefore, am compelled, in the absence of any evidence on the record, to allow this application for revision filed by Wilayat Husain and to set aside his conviction and sentence under s. 60-A of the U. P. Excise Act and to acquit him of that offence.

I turn next to consider the case of the other two applicants Raza Husain and

Abdul Rahman. These persons have been convicted of an offence under s. 60 (a) of Act IV 1910. The learned Sessions Judge has held that there is no evidence on the record to prove that the cocaine found in the house No. 1 was definitely in the possession of any of these persons found in that building, since it was not in the physical possession of any one of them. He has, however, argued that in such matters it was necessary to look into the circumstances in which the cocaine was found and that in the present case it was found spread out for sale, and Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman and others were found sitting in the verandah close to it, and from this fact a reasonable conclusion might legitimately be drawn that they were all in possession of the cocaine. The learned Government Advocate has argued that under s. 71 of the U. P. Excise Act the presumption should be raised against these applicants Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman, and that it was for them to account in a satisfactory manner how they came to be in possession of the cocaine. The same presumption has also been laid down in s. 32 of the Imperial Act No. 2 of 1930. The evidence on the record fully proves that a large quantity of cocaine in a number of tin boxes placed in a row was found in the courtyard close to the tomb of the saint and these persons were found to be near the place from where the cocaine was recovered. The learned Sessions Judge has held it proved that the cocaine found was exposed for sale in house No. 1. The applicants Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman have not explained how they came to be there and how the cocaine happened to be found placed in a row. The only conclusion that can be drawn from the facts proved is that either these applicants came there to purchase the cocaine or that they were there to sell the cocaine which was found in front of them. From the facts found the conclusion is inevitable that the applicants Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman were either in possession of the cocaine as purchasers of it or that they were found in possession of the cocaine trying to sell it on behalf of themselves or of some other person. Neither applicant has explained how the cocaine came to be found in the house marked No. 1 or how they happened to be found sitting or standing close to the place where tin boxes containing cocaine were spread out in a row. Under these circumstances I hold that the learned Sessions Judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that these applicants were in possession of the illicit cocaine. The other legal pleas in connection with s. 539-B and s. 256 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which have been argued before me do not really affect the question of the guilt of the applicants, and, although the procedure adopted by the trying Magistrate as well as by the learned Sessions Judge is open to objection, yet it has not in my opinion prejudiced any of the applicants in their trial on the merits, nor has it in my opinion occasioned a failure of justice. For the reasons given above I dismiss the applications for revision filed by Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman and uphold their conviction and sentences under s. 60 (a) of the U. P. Excise Act.

In the result I allow the application of Wilayat Husain, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon him under s. 60-A of the U. P. Excise Act and acquit him of that offence. Wilayat Husain is on bail. His bail bond is discharged. The order under s. 60-B of Act No. IV of 1910 is also set aside and the bond executed thereunder by Wilayat Husain is cancelled. I dismiss the applications of Raza Husain and Abdul Rahman and confirm their conviction and sentences for an offence under s. 60 (a) of the U. P. Excise Act.

It is a well established principle of equity that a purchaser of an immovable property has a lien on the property purchased and the fact that the purchase was made at an auction-sale and not by a private contract does not kill the equitable lien. The lien will however be ineffectual as against a transferee for value and without notice. Mata Din v. Iftikhar Husain (1), Mahomed Rahimtulla v. Esmail Allarakhia (2), *Rose v. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Unao, dated the 5th May, 1930, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 30th August 1929.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, Zahur Ahmad, Hyder Hussain and Bhagwati Nath, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Unao dated the 5th May 1930, reversing the decree of the Additional Judge of the same place, dated the 30th of August, 1929.

The facts of this case are somewhat complicated and the points of law raised on behalf of the plaintiffs at the hearing of the appeal were several. We have taken time to consider our judgment and having regard to the opinion which we have formed on one of these questions of law, it is not necessary either to state all the facts or all the questions of law.

The necessary facts bearing on the decisions of this appeal may thus be stated chronologically:—

17th April 1914.—Sheo Dulare, the father of the defendants Kedar, Mahipat, Bishunath and Gauri Shankar executed a deed of mortgage in respect of 1 biswa 5 biswansis share out of 16 annas share situate in the village of Makoor, Pargana Jhalotar Ajgain in the District of Unao, in favour of Jagannath who is the chief defendant in the suit, out of which this appeal arises.

20th of June 1917.—It appears that one Sri Krishna had obtained a simple money decree against Sheo Dulare and in execution of that decree he had attached and put up to sale the 1 biswa 5 biswansis share already specified. To this attachment and proposed sale the four sons of Sheo Dulare raised objections on the ground that their 1 biswa share was not liable to be sold in execution of a decree obtained against Sheo Dulare alone who was separate from them. The Court rejected the objection and held that the sons' share was also liable for the legitimate debts of the father. The result was that the sale was allowed to proceed and the entire share of 1 biswa 5 biswansis was purchased at a public auction by one Ram Charan for a sum of Rs. 700 on the 20th of June 1917.

18th of July 1917.—Sheo Dulare executed the deed of mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 350 in respect of the entire share of 1 biswa 5 biswansis carrying interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum. In default of payment within ten years the mortgagees were entitled to the relief of foreclosure.

25th of July 1917.—Out of the mortgage-money advanced by the plaintiffs under the deed of the 18th of July 1917 a sum of Rs. 700 was paid to Ram Charan and the sale of the 20th of June 1917 was set aside before Ram Charan could enter into the possession of the share purchased by him.

6th of May 1918.—As a result of the claim made by Sheo Dulare's sons the mortgage of the 17th of April 1914 was declared to be inoperative in respect of the sons' share of 1 biswa.

19th of March 1919.—Jagannath enforced his mortgage of the 17th of April 1914 by means of an action against Sheo Dulare and the plaintiffs and obtained a decree for foreclosure in respect of the 5 biswansis share on the 19th of March 1919. This share is now held by Jagannath in indisputable right and is no longer subject to any controversy.

26th of August 1923.—The 1 biswa share was again attached and put to sale in execution of a money decree held by Beni Madho and Dwarka against Sheo Dulare and his sons and at Court auction Jagannath the defendant purchased it on the 20th of August 1923. The sale and the purchase were expressly made subject to the mortgage of the 18th of July 1917. It is against this 1 biswa share that the plaintiffs of the present suit ask for the relief of foreclosure.

For the purposes of the decision of this appeal we accept the finding of the learned District Judge that previous to the date of the mortgage in suit the family of Sheo Dulare and his sons had ceased to be a joint Hindu family and that a separation in status had taken place.

The mortgage of the 18th of July 1917 was executed by Sheo Dulare for the express purpose of raising money to recover the 1 biswa 5 biswansis share from the hands of Ram Charan and it is now agreed that out of the mortgage money a sum of Rs. 700 was paid to Ram Charan by the plaintiffs and in consequence thereof, the 1 biswa 5 biswansis share was again restored to Sheo Dulare and his four sons in equal shares. On these facts the plaintiffs' contention is that they have acquired a charge by operation of law on the 1 biswa share and are therefore entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 700 by sale of that share.

We are of opinion that the contention is well founded. The mortgage of the 18th of July 1917 was a perfectly valid mortgage, though a second mortgage, in respect of Sheo Dulare's share, that is 5 biswansis; and it is also clear that Ram Charan had acquired proprietary title to the entire 1 biswa 5 biswansis share which he had purchased on the 20th of June 1917 at a Court auction. Within this purchase must fall the 5 biswansis share in respect of which we have said that the mortgage of the 18th of July 1917 was a valid mortgage. It follows that the act of the plaintiffs in making the payment to Ram Charan and in recovering from his hands the 1 biswa 5 biswansis share was not an officious act. The plaintiffs, for the purpose of protecting the 5 biswansis share mortgaged to them, had to pay the entire sale price which Ram Charan had paid to purchase the whole share. It follows that by the effect of the rule of subrogation the plaintiffs acquired all the rights which Ram Charan the purchaser had acquired over the 1 biswa 5 biswansis share by reason of the sale of the 20th of June 1917 in his favour. They lost this right in the 5 biswansis share as a result of the decree dated the 19th of March 1919 in favour of Jagannath; but we are of opinion that they still retain it in the rest of 1 biswa share. One of us had occasion to consider this question in the case of Mata Din v. Ifrikhar Hussain (1). In the judgment of that case reference is made to several decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee and also to cases decided in England. It seems to us that the present case entirely falls within the principle of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Rahimtulla v. Esmail Allarakhia (2).

What were then the rights of Ram Charan? It is a well established principle of equity that a purchaser of immoveable property has a lien on the property purchased—Rose v. Watson (3) and Whitebread & Co., Limited v. Watt (4). This principle is recognised in cl. (b) of sub s. (4) s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. The lien will, however, be ineffectual as against a transferee for value and without notice. In the present case, as we have already stated, the defendant Jagannath bought the 1 biswa share at the auction sale of the 20th of August 1923 with complete notice of the mortgage in suit. The deed of mortgage states all the facts giving rise to the equities to which the plaintiffs now contend they are entitled. We are not unmindful of the fact that Ram Charan had purchased the 1 biswa share at an auction-sale and not by means of a private contract. This fact, however, does not appear to us to have the effect of killing the equitable lien which accrued in favour of Ram Charan on the 20th of June 1917 when he purchased the share in question. In the case of Mir Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohan Roy (5), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee applied a principle of equitable estoppel in favour of one auction-purchaser against another auction-purchaser of the same estate.

We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the plaintiffs' suit for sum of Rs. 700 and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 18th of July 1917 till realisation. If the sum hereby decreed is not paid within three months of to-day, the 1 biswa zamindari share out of 20 biswas of village Makoor, which now under partition amounts to 6 biswas out of 20 biswas in mohal Sitla Din situate in the same village shall be sold for the satisfaction of the decree. As to the costs we order that the plaintiffs shall be entitled to their costs in proportion to their success in all the three Courts. Except Jagannath defendant no other defendant has contested this suit. The costs will therefore be paid by Jagannath alone.

*Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 97, 116—
Suit for damages for breach of covenant of title—Limitation—Starting point—Date of sale or date of dispossession.*

Under Art. 116 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act, in the case of a suit for damages for breach of covenant of title contained in a registered deed, where the vendee has been put in possession of the property by the vendor and the sale is void ab initio as against the rightful owner, limitation begins to run not from the date of sale but from the time the vendee is dispossessed by the rightful owner. *Pirbhu v. Revision against an order of the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Akola, in C. S. No. 156 of 1929, dated the 13th March, 1930.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

The facts of this case are shortly these. On 22nd February, 1928, Zabu, the defendant non-applicant, acting for himself and for his minor brother Shanker executed a sale-deed in respect of 8 acres of land for Rs. 1,000, in favour of the plaintiffs-applicants and placed them in possession of the property. The vendor had a third brother Amruta who on 31st October, 1925, secured, in Suit No. 185 of 1924, a decree for joint possession to the extent of a moiety in 8 acres conveyed to the plaintiffs and in April 1928, he got possession of the 4 acres pertaining to his share. In his first decree Amruta was, however, made to contribute Rs. 322-12, as it was held that he had derived benefit from the consideration of the sale on account of the purchase of some other land by the vendors.

On 24th June, 1929, the plaintiff instituted a suit against their original vendor, the defendant, to recover Rs. 700, as damages for failure of consideration in respect of the sale transaction of the year 1918. The cause of action was stated to have accrued in 1928 when the plaintiffs lost possession of the moiety of the land conveyed. The suit was principally resisted on the ground that the claim was barred by time and following Pirbhu v. Wazirbi (1), the Small Cause Court dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have, therefore, come up to this Court in revision.

It is conceded that the facts of the present case are almost identical with those of the above ruling; but it is contended that the law laid down there was incorrect and should be reviewed in the light of the following latest rulings on the point. Subbaraya Reddiar v. Rajagopala Reddiar (2), Arunachala Aiyar v. T. Ramasami Aiyar (3), Sankara Variar v. Thaiparambil Kalathil Ummar (4), Multanmal Joyaram v. Budhumal Kavetchand (5) and Jai Indra Bahadur Singh v. Khairati Lal (6). Reference was also made to Ma Huit v. Fatima Bibi (7). But this last case and Sankara Variar v. Thaiparambil Kalathil Ummar (4) were with reference to Art. 17 and not Art. 116 of the Limitation Schedule which admittedly is applicable to the present case. In Bahadur Lal v. Jadhao (8) it was conceded that limitation in such cases begins to run from the date of dispossession.

Personally I feel very much impressed by the reasonings adopted in the cases cited for the applicants which lay down that under Art. 116 of the Limitation Schedule time would begin to run even where the sale is void ab initio and possession of the property is delivered to the vendee not from the execution of the sale deed but from the date of his subsequent dispossession.

sion by the rightful owner. I, therefore, refer the following question for the decision of a Bench of this Court :—

"What is the starting point of limitation under Art. 116 of the Second (sic) Schedule of the Limitation Act in a suit for damages for breach of covenant of title, contained in a registered deed, in a case in which the vendee has been put in possession of the property by the vendor, and the sale is void ab initio as against the rightful owner; whether from the date of the sale or from the date of dispossession of the vendee by the rightful owner?"

OPINION.

Subhedar, A. J. C.—The question referred to the Full Bench for decision is expressed as under :

"What is the starting point of limitation under Art. 116 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act in a suit for damages for breach of covenant of title contained in a registered deed, in a case in which the vendee has been put in possession of the property by the vendor and the sale is void ab initio as against the rightful owner whether from the date of the sale or from the date of dispossession of the vendee by the rightful owner?"

This reference was necessitated by the argument of the learned Advocate for the applicant in a pending application for revision to the effect that the decision of Batten, A. J. C. in Pirbhu v. Wazirbi (1), was not correct particularly in view of the several cases since decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council and the several High Courts in India. In the aforesaid case it is laid down that a suit for damages for breach of covenant of title contained in a registered deed governed by Art. 116 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act and that when the absence of the right contracted for is completed at the time of the execution of the conveyance and there is no question of fraud, the limitation period begins to run from that date and not from the date of dispossession of the vendee if possession is delivered to him in pursuance of the contract of sale. In Bahadur Lal v. Jadhao (8), it was held that Art. 116 of the Limitation Schedule governed such a case for damages but it was conceded by the parties that limitation commenced to run not from the date of sale but from the time the flaw in the vendor's title was judicially determined.

In Subbaraya Reddiar v. Rajagopala Reddiar (2), Seshagiri Aiyar, J., classified under the following three heads the several cases cited before him:—

- (a) "Where from the inception the vendor had no title to convey and the vendee has not been placed in possession of the property ;
- (b) Where the sale is voidable on the objection of third parties and possession is taken under the voidable sale; and

- (c) Where though the title is known to be imperfect the contract is in part carried out by giving possession of the properties."

The learned Judge held that in the first class of cases the starting point of limitation would be the date of the sale while with regard to those of the other two classes the cause of action to claim damages would rise only when the vendee's possession is disturbed because

"The party is in possession and that is what at the outset under a contract of a sale purchaser is entitled to and so long as his possession is not disturbed he is not damnified".

With regard to cases under either (b) or (c) class falling under Art. 97 of the Limitation schedule where the claim of vendee plaintiff must necessarily be confined only to the return of the purchase money paid to the vendor defendant it has been uniformly held in a series of cases that the possession or other benefit obtained in pursuance of the transaction is a subsisting consideration whether the transaction itself is void or voidable so that in all cases of these kinds the period of limitation will begin to run not from the date of sale but from the time when the possession or other benefit derived from the transaction is lost, which is deemed to be the failure of consideration under this article, Ma Hnit v. Fatima Babi (7), Narsing Shivbakas v. Pachu Rambakas (9), Sankar Variavar v. Thaiparambil Kalathil Ummar (4), Premasukhdas v. Namdeo (10) and in 47 Ind. Cas. 886 [Dharamchand v. Gorelal (11).]

In cases of transactions of cl (b) viz., those voidable at the option of third parties where the plaintiff-vendee upon dispossession or disturbance of title to retain possession sues for damages for breach of covenant for title either express or implied by law, the view entertained is also unanimous that in such cases the starting point of limitation under Art. 116 of the Limitation Schedule is the date of dispossession of the plaintiff or disturbance of his title to retain possession under the transaction and not the date of sale. The latest cases in support of this view are Subbaraya Reddiar v. Rajagopala Reddiar (2), Mahamei Ali Sheriff v. Budharaju Venkatapathi Raju (2) and Multanmal Joyaram v. Budhumal Kevatchand (5), Hanwant Rai

v. Chandi Prasad (13), Muhammad Siddiq v. Muhammad Nuh (14) and Bhawani Singh v. Girdhari, Second Appeal No 56 of 1930.

In a transaction which is void ab initio and in which the defendant-vendor has no title to, nor delivers possession of the property sold if the plaintiff-vendee in his attempt to secure possession is resisted by the true owner and files a suit against his vendor for damages for breach of covenant of title, such a suit falls under Art. 116 of the Limitation Schedule and limitation runs from the date of sale. Aurnachala Aiyar v. T. Ramasami Aiyar (3) and Ganapa Putta v. Hammod Saiba (15). The latter decision is also authority for the proposition that the expression 'compensation for the breach of a contract' used in Art. 116 of the Limitation Schedule is not limited to a claim for unliquidated damages but applies also to a claim for payment of a sum certain, e.g. purchase money, so that even if the claim of a vendee under a registered instrument be confined to the return of the purchase money only the suit would fall under Art. 116 and not under Art. 97 of the Limitation Schedule.

There now remains the consideration of the important question involved in the reference viz., what is the starting point of limitation under Art. 116 of the Limitation Schedule for a claim for damages for breach of covenant of title express or implied in a registered instrument regarding a transaction void ab initio but in which possession of the property is delivered and the vendee is subsequently evicted by the rightful owner, whether from the date of the sale or from the time allowed in transactions voidable at the instance of third parties.

Batten, A. J. C., in Pirbhu v. Wazirbi (1) relying on "a very strong balance of authority" under English Law held that it arose on the date of sale and he quoted Williams on the Law of Vendors and Purchasers and Dart on the Law and Practice relating to Vendors and Purchasers, and especially referred to the cases of Spoer v. Green (16) and Turner v. Moon (17). But in Multanmal Joyaram v. Budhumal Kevalchand (5), Macleod, C. J., made the following very weighty observations, by way of caution, against following English Law and decisions in India where Statute Law applies :—

"It was argued by the defendants that where a seller has covenanted that he has a good title then the covenant of title was broken immediately upon the execution of the assurance which contains them"; and "this is so stated in Dart on Vendors and Purchasers, Vol. II, page 788. The authority for that proposition is Turner v. Moon (17). In that case there was no question of limitation although the case of Spoer v. Green (16), was referred to by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Tulsiram v. Murlidhar (18). But at the end of the judgment the learned Chief Justice said we allude to these facts because we desire to guard ourselves against being taken to decide that where the Transfer of Property Act applies, there may not be remedies to which a different period of limitation would be applicable."

In Harnathkuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (19) their Lordships of the Privy Council while dealing with the argument of the appellant that his case was governed by the provisions of s. 65 of the Contract Act also observed that "So framed the plaintiff's claim to compensation rests not on any principle or formula of English Law but on the words of this section and it has to be seen whether the facts of this case came within its scope." This was a case in which the plaintiff-vendor in May, 1914, sued the defendant-vendee for possession of certain properties which had been sold to him in January, 1880, but of which possession was not delivered on demand in 1914, and in the alternative for damages for breach of contract. The sale was held to be absolutely void as the vendor had no interest in the property sold but had only rights of expectancy. The suit was, therefore, dismissed by all the Courts in India but on appeal their Lordships accepted the argument that so far as the claim for compensation was concerned the suit was governed by the provisions of s. 65 of the Contract Act and was in time as the cause of action arose when "demand for possession was resisted" by the defendant which was in May, 1914.

The following passages from the judgment of their Lordships are very instructive :—

"Before this Board the claim has been based on s. 65 of the Contract Act. It is there provided that when an agreement is discovered to be void or when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it or make such compensation for it to the person from whom he received it.

(18) 26 B. 750 at p. 756.

The section deals with (a) agreements and (b) contracts. The distinction between them is apparent from s. 2. By cl. (c) every promise and every set of promises forming the consideration for each other is an agreement, and by cl. (h) an agreement enforceable by law is a contract. Section 65, therefore, deals with [a] agreements enforceable by law and [b] with agreements not so enforceable. By cl. [g] an agreement not enforceable by law is said to be void.

An agreement, therefore, discovered to be void is one discovered to be not enforceable by law and on the language of the section would include an agreement that was void in that sense from its inception as distinct from a contract that becomes void. The agreement here was manifestly void from its inception and it was void because its subject-matter was incapable of being bound in the manner stipulated."

It would appear that their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur (19) held that the cause of action to claim damages for breach of the covenant to place the plaintiff-vendee in possession of the property sold accrued to him not on the date of the void agreement but when demand for possession, agreed to be delivered under it, was resisted by the defendant-vendor. Even in the absence of such an express covenant for delivery of possession the same would be implied in every contract of sale by s. 55 (1) (f) of the Transfer of Property Act which casts upon the seller if so required, the duty of placing the vendee in possession of the property sold. A fortiori the cause of action to recover damages for breach of covenant of title which necessarily includes that of quiet enjoyment under s. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act would only accrue to a vendee if he was already placed in possession of the property in pursuance of the void agreement on the date when his possession is disturbed by the rightful owner. This was also the view taken of this matter by Sheshagiri Aiyar, J., in Subbaraya Reddiar v. Rajagopala Reddiar (2), although the transaction before him was of a voidable nature only.

The case of Premasukhdas v. Namdeo (10), was of a sale void ab initio in which the plaintiff-vendee claimed from the defendant-vendor damages, and not merely return of the purchase-money, upon his dispossession by the rightful owner. Prideaux, A. J. O., however, treated the case as falling under Art. 97 of the Limitation Schedule and distinguished it from Pirbhu v. Wasirbi (1) on the ground that in the case before him there was no express covenant of title in the contract of sale as there was in Pirbhu's case (1). But the learned Judge seems to have overlooked that in every contract of sale the statutory indemnity provided by s. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act is implied. It was, however, held that the cause of action to claim damages arose on the date of dispossession of the plaintiff by the rightful owner.

Apart from authorities the matter may be considered from another stand-point. In both voidable and void sales if the vendor places the vendee in possession of the property sold the principal object of the sale, that is possession and enjoyment of property, is secured to the vendee and, therefore, until these are disturbed by the rightful owner it could not logically be said that there is a breach of contract within the meaning of Art. 116 of the Limitation Schedule in a voidable transaction at the time of disturbance of possession by the rightful owner and in the case of a void transaction at the time of the execution of conveyance. In both the cases where possession is delivered to the vendee, the sale, for all practical purposes, remains good until it is avoided by the rightful owner. Cause of action to claim damages for breach of contract cannot arise in either voidable or void sales to a vendee, if he is placed in possession of the property sold, before he is evicted by the rightful owner for the very obvious reason that he in fact suffers no damages till then. It follows then that in a void transaction limitation period should not run against the vendee, who has been placed in possession of the property under the contract of sale to claim damages from the vendor for breach of contract, at any time earlier than it would start running under similar circumstances in the case of a voidable sale.

For these reasons any answer to the question referred to the Full Bench for decision is that the limitation begins to run not from the date of sale but from the time the vendee is dispossessed by the rightful owner.

Niyogi, A. J. C.—I agree with the opinion recorded by Subhedar, A. J. O. I wish to add what follows.—

When a vendee, whose possession is disturbed by the rightful claimant, sues his vendor for compensation, his claim, in substance, is one founded on the breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. The covenant for title in a generic sense includes a covenant for quiet possession but in its special sense means only a covenant as to the vendor's right to convey. Confusion arises from laxity of expression ordinarily used in the pleadings viz, to describe a breach of what is really a covenant for quiet enjoyment as one for title.

The usual covenants for title are: for right to convey for quiet enjoyment; for freedom from incumbrances; and for further assurance. Of these, the covenant for right to convey is a covenant for title and the covenant for quiet enjoyment, is a covenant relating to possession. The distinction is material since it affects both the date when the covenant is broken and the measure of damages. A covenant for title is an assurance to the purchaser that the grantor has the very estate in quality and quantity which he purports to convey, whereas the covenant for quiet enjoyment is a future covenant (see Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 25, pages 462-466). The law as to limitation of actions in respect of these two cases is succinctly laid down in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 17, page 78 in these terms where on the sale of the property the vendor covenants that he has a good title to transfer, while in fact he has not a good title, the breach of the covenant is at the time of the sale and there is no continuing breach; but if the vendor covenants for quiet enjoyment, there is no breach of that covenant till there is an interference with the enjoyment of the purchaser or those claiming through him." It is obvious that when the vendee obtains corporeal possession of the property purchased by him from a vendor who may or may not have a sound and unfettered right to convey, and his possession is disturbed, the cause of action for damages arises on the date of such disturbance.

Article 116 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act is specifically enacted respecting claims for compensation for breach of a contract in writing and registered. In Tricomdas Cooverjee Bhoja v. Gopinath Jiv Thakur (20) their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed that Art. 116 is a special provision which is intended to apply to all contracts in writing and registered. On the authority of this dictum, the Courts in India have applied Art. 116 to cases of breaches of covenants, express or implied, for title incorporated in registered instruments; See Multanmal Joyaram v. Budhumal Kavetchand (5), Ganappa Putta Hedge

v. Hammad Saiba (15) and Muhammad Siddiq v. Muhammad Nuh (14); See also Ratanbai Shaligram v. Ghasiram Gangabisa (21)

There may be express covenants for title and quiet possession contained in regularly drawn up instruments of sale. But even if they are absent, such covenants are implied by law. By virtue of s. 55 (2), Transfer of Property Act, 1882, every sale necessarily imports a covenant for title and quiet enjoyment and this covenant is not merely personal but runs with the land. Under that enactment, the seller shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same. The right to enjoy possession is an incident of ownership and as such an interest in the property. When the vendor, in pursuance of the conveyance, delivers actual physical possession to the vendee the latter acquires the same. The vendor's covenant as to this interest must remain unaffected so long as the vendee is in the quiet enjoyment of possession. This covenant as to quiet enjoyment being a future covenant cannot obviously be broken on the date of the sale, notwithstanding that the vendor, has no right to convey. The breach of that covenant can occur only on the disturbance of the vendee's possession. Since the vendor's covenant is twofold viz, for right to convey and for quiet enjoyment, the vendee will have two distinct causes of action in the event of the breach. If the vendor has no title on the date of the conveyance, the breach of the covenant would certainly occur at the time of the sale, and if the remedy is not sought within the statutory period, the cause of action accruing from that breach will alone lapse. It cannot destroy any remedy to which the vendee may be entitled by reason of interference with his possession.

In Pirbhu v. Wazirbi (1), the plaintiff did not take his stand on the disturbance of his possession. The case was, therefore, treated as one for breach of a covenant for title only and was determined on the authority of the view expressed by Baron Barmwell in Spoor v. Green (16), which was followed by Joyce, J., in Turner v. Moon (17). In the first mentioned case the plaintiff, founded his action on the breach of a covenant for title as well as that for quiet enjoyment, but his case as to the breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment having failed on technical grounds, it rested solely on the breach of the covenant for title. Baron Bramwell held that the breach of the covenant for title was not a continuing breach since the covenant remains broken indeed but broken once for all. "As the vendor was found to have no title to convey on the date of the conveyance the breach of the covenant for title was held to have occurred on that date. From the observations made by Baron Bramwell in the course of his judgment, viz.

"of course, the Statute of Limitation would apply to any breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment which took place twenty years before suit."

it is evident that if the action had been rightly laid as to the breach of the covenant for quiet possession, Baron Bramwell would indeed have treated the claim as being within time. In Turner v. Moon (17), the claim for damages was founded on the breach of the covenant for title only. It is apparent that these authorities have no direct bearing on a case in which damages are claimed on the basis of the breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment viz, disturbance of possession.

Jackson, Offg. J. C.—I have had the advantage of reading the opinions of Subhedar, A. J. C., and Niyogi, A. J. C. and I have not much to add.

As Niyogi, A. J. C., has pointed out, the usual covenants for title are four, and the expression "covenant for title" does not, as is too often assumed, mean merely "covenant for right to convey" but includes "covenant for quiet enjoyment." In Pirbhu v. Wazirbi (1), the covenant for title considered to have been broken was the covenant for right to convey; and in my opinion it was rightly decided that limitation for a suit on that cause of action began to run from the date of the sale. In the present case two covenants for title have been broken, the covenants for right to convey and the covenant for quiet enjoyment, obviously, limitation for a suit based on breach of the second of these covenants can only begin to run from the date on which the vendee's possession was disturbed.

My opinion, therefore, is that, when possession has been given to the vendee, limitation for a suit for damages for breach of covenant for title, that covenant being, in fact, the covenant for quiet enjoyment, begins to run from the date of dispossession.

Hindu Law—Maintenance—Daughter-in-law—Father-in-law's liability—Liability of heirs—Liability of person taking under Will—Rate of maintenance—Right to arrears.

Under Hindu Law, a father-in-law who is not possessed of ancestral property is not legally bound to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law. He is, however, under a moral obligation to do so, and this obligation becomes a legal and binding obligation on his heirs. Persons in possession of the self-acquired property of a Hindu father after his death, whether they have taken such property by inheritance, survivorship or under a duly executed Will or deed of gift, are, therefore, under a legal obligation to maintain the widow of a son who predeceased his father. *Meenakshi Ammal v. Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 22nd December, 1927, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Chanda, dated the 3rd February, 1927.

Mr A. V. Khare, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. W. Kathalay, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellant brought a suit for arrears of maintenance and for a declaration that she was entitled to future maintenance, and in the trial Court she obtained a decree both for arrears and for a declaration that she was entitled to claim future maintenance at the rate of Rs 126 per annum from January, 1926. In appeal the District Judge dismissed the claim for arrears of maintenance and reduced the claim for future maintenance to Rs. 84 a year, which amount was admitted by the defendants, who had preferred the appeal to him. The plaintiff Laxmibai has now preferred this second appeal, claiming both arrears of maintenance at the rate awarded by the trial Court and future maintenance at the minimum rate of Rs. 15 per month.

The appellant is the widow of one Narayan who was the brother of the two respondents Sambha and Sadasheo. The respondents and Narayan were all sons of one Jairam, and admittedly they constituted a joint Hindu family. Narayan died in 1916 when he was only 20, and Jairam, the father, died in 1920. It has been found that Jairam executed a Will, which is filed in the suit as Ex. D-20, on the 25th of February, 1917, and in that Will provision has been made for the maintenance of the appellant Laxmibai out of the income of a malik-makbuza field. The trial Court held, however, that the plaintiff Laxmibai was not bound by that condition in the Will and that she could claim maintenance according to her husband's share in the property at the time of his death and in proportion to the income of the family property. The lower Appellate Court, however, has found that the property was not family property but was the self-acquired property of Jairam and that, therefore, Laxmibai could not claim any maintenance out of the property beyond what was allowed to her under Will. These are the two findings which have been made the chief grounds of attack in second appeal.

As regards the first finding that the property was self-acquired, I can see little, if any ground to interfere. This is, in the main, a finding of fact, and it is supported by the evidence on record. The plaintiff's case originally was that Jairam had inherited property from his father, which formed a nucleus of joint family property, but no evidence to prove that plea was adduced. One witness Shanker (P. W. No. 4) was examined, and he has come with a different story, namely that Jairam inherited certain property from his step-mother who lived at Umrer. As pointed out by the lower Appellate Court, the evidence of this witness is uncorroborated and, as his story is different to the plea put forward by the plaintiff in the plaint, it was, I think, rightly rejected. Nor do I think that much importance can be attached to the fact that Jairam in his business kept some accounts in the name of the plaintiff's husband Narayan. There is no sufficient evidence on record, in my opinion, to hold that there was either a nucleus of joint family property or that Jairam and his sons carried on business jointly and acquired property by their joint labour. On the contrary, the evidence seems to show that Jairam acquired the property by his individual exertions. No is there, I think, any sufficient evidence to show that the property, when acquired, was thrown into the joint family fund and treated as joint family property: on the contrary, as pointed out by the lower Appellate Court, Jairam devised all his property by Will without any objection on the part of his sons, and in so doing treated it as his self-acquired property. I do not think, then, that any of the cases cited by the learned Counsel for the appellant in this connection, namely, Kundan Lal v. Shankar Lal (1), Mohansingh v. Punji (2), Motilal v. Harjimal (3), Punji v. Govind (4) and Karsondass Dharamsey v. Gangabai (5), will apply, and I am of opinion that the finding of the lower Appellate Court, that Jairam's property was his self-acquired property, must be upheld.

The only point then that remains to be determined is whether that self-acquired property of Jairam in the hands of the defendants, who are devisees under the Will, is liable to the plaintiff's claim for maintenance. The question is one not free from difficulty and as regards which there has been some divergence of opinion. The correct view seems to be that a father-in-law, who is not possessed of ancestral property, is not legally bound to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law and that such daughter-in-law has no claim against his self-acquired property. On the other hand, it has been laid down in a number of cases, relying on the Hindu text-books, that a father-in-law is under a pious or moral obligation to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law. The lower Appellate Court has relied upon Meenakshi Ammal v. Rama Aiyar (6), where it has been laid down that, although there is such a pious obligation according to the Hindu text-books, the Courts would not be bound to enforce such obligation, but would only enforce it looking to the circumstances of the case and to the times and according to the rule of justice, equity and good conscience. It may, however, I think, be safely inferred that in the majority of cases, where the widowed daughter-in-law is without means of subsistence and the father-in-law is in possession of self-acquired property, the moral obligation to maintain the daughter-in-law would be enforced by the Courts. Then the next question that arises is, what is the obligation on the sons or heirs of the father-in-law after his death. The view taken by the majority of High Courts is that what is a pious obligation on the part of the father-in-law becomes a legal and binding obligation on his heirs. This was laid down in Adhibai v. Qursandas Nathu (7), on the ground that what was self-acquired property of the father became the ancestral property of the joint family in the hands of his sons. In Janki v. Nand Ram (8), a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court dissented from the view taken by the Bombay High Court, but they also affirmed that what was a pious obligation on the father-in-law became a legal obligation on the son who took the property by inheritance, not because the property would be correctly described as ancestral property, but because the son took the estate not for his own benefit but for the spiritual benefit of his father, the last proprietor. Thus the same result has been arrived at in both cases, although the reason for arriving at that conclusion is different. These cases have been followed in Yamunabai v. Manubai (9), Rangammal v. Echammal (10), Jai Nand v. Paran Dei (11), Gopal Chandra Pal v. Kadambini Dasi (12), and Jeot Ram v. Lauji (13); and the principle has again been affirmed in Surampalli Bangammal v. Surampalli Brambaze (14).

The lower Appellate Court, however, relied on Bai Parvati v. Tarwadi Dolatram (15), where it has been held that, when a father-in-law has bequeathed his self-acquired property to a third person, the widowed daughter-in-law has no right of maintenance against that person. The earlier case in Yamunabai v. Manubai (9), was distinguished on the ground that it applied to persons who took the self-acquired property of the father-in-law by inheritance, but not to those who took it under a Will. With all due respect, however, I am doubtful whether that distinction is really sound and it has been expressly dissented from in Gopal Chandra Pal v. Kadambini Dasi (12), and Jeot Ram v. Lauji (13). It may also be pointed out that in Rangammal v. Echammal (10), it was held, though obiter, that a third person who took the property by a Will would be in no better position to resist a claim for maintenance than the one who took the property by inheritance. In Jai Nand v. Paran Dei (11), the question of a devisee who took the property by a Will was not considered, and, therefore, Bai Parvati v. Tarwadi Dolatram (15), was not expressly referred to; but the Judges who decided the case have held that the sons, who are in possession of the self-acquired property of their father, are legally bound to maintain the widow of their brother who predeceased their father, whether they took the property of the father by inheritance or by survivorship.

The balance of authority, then, is in favour of the view that not only is there a legal obligation on the sons or heirs of the father-in-law to maintain the widowed daughter-in-law out of the self-acquired property, which has come to them from their father, but that persons who have taken such self-acquired property under a Will executed by the father-in-law are also legally bound to maintain the daughter-in-law. I am of opinion that to hold otherwise would be tantamount to holding that the father-in-law could defeat his widowed daughter-in-law's claim by executing a gift or Will, and that would be contrary not only to the principles of Hindu Law but also to the rules of justice, equity and good conscience, when it has been held that the father-in-law is under a moral obligation to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law. I, therefore, hold that persons in possession of the self-acquired property of a Hindu father after his death, whether they have taken such property by inheritance, survivorship or under a duly executed Will or deed of gift, are under a legal obligation to maintain the widow of a son who predeceased his father. Accordingly, I reverse the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point and hold that the defendant-respondents are legally bound to maintain the appellant.

The questions that remain then to be determined are the amount of maintenance that should be awarded and whether the arrears of maintenance claimed should be granted or refused. On the first point an exhaustive discussion was made by the Judge of the trial Court. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court has been chiefly influenced by the view that the plaintiff could not claim maintenance against the property beyond what was allowed to her in the Will, and has, therefore, granted only the amount of Rs. 84, which was agreed to by the defendants. In para. 6 of his judgment the Judge has made some short discussion about the income of estate, but apparently he has simply accepted the defendants' contention as regards the amount of income without looking into the evidence. On the other hand, as already stated, the Judge of the trial Court has made a full discussion of the evidence, and I can see no reason for differing from the estimate arrived at by him, namely, that the income was not less than Rs. 1,300 a year: this, in fact, as stated by trial Judge, is probably an underestimate. I do not think, then, that the amount allowed by that Judge, namely, Rs. 10-8-0 a month, or Rs. 126 a year, is in any way excessive, and, as pointed out in Ekradeshwari Bahusin v. Homeshwar Singh (16), in a case of this kind the widow is not only entitled to bare maintenance but to maintenance suitable to her condition in life and to the status of the family. It cannot, I think, be argued that the amount of Rs. 126 a year is in any way excessive according to this standard: it has been fixed according to this standard. I would, therefore, restore the decree of the trial Court allowing the plaintiff-appellant maintenance at the rate of Rs. 126 per annum.

As regards arrears of maintenance also I am of opinion that the view of the trial Court is correct and that the lower Appellate Court has gone wrong in the matter. It has been laid down in Siddessury Dassee v. Janardhan Sarkar (17) and Raja Ratan Singh v. Rani Beni Bai (18), that a widow, who does not live in the house of her deceased husband, does not thereby forfeit her claim to maintenance. It has further been found in the present case that the plaintiff lived with her father after the death of her husband, but that after her father's death about six years prior to the suit she was in difficulties and she applied to the defendants for maintenance, which was refused. Continued demands were made and at last a registered notice was given. It has not been shown that the plaintiff has any other source of income or was able to maintain herself; on the contrary the inference seems to be, as held by the trial Court, that she was in difficulties and probably had to borrow money. The lower Appellate Court has referred to the judgments in Sakharam v. Yashodabai, S. A. No. 173 of 1924, decided on 27th April 1925 and Pandurang v. Yashodabai, S. A. No. 196 of 1925, decided on 21st December 1925, but has overlooked the fact that in the present case the father of the plaintiff, who was supporting her, died some six years before the suit and that arrears are only claimed for five years prior to the suit. There seems to me to be no justification for refusing the claim for arrears, and I would point out that the trial Court has only allowed arrears of maintenance at the reduced rate of Rs. 8 a month. I am of opinion that such an amount is in no way excessive and that, if anything, a concession has been made in favour of the defendants. I would therefore restore the decree of the trial Court as regards arrears of maintenance also.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court, therefore, is set aside and instead the decree of the trial Court is restored. Two-thirds of the costs of the appeal in this Court will be borne by the respondents, the remaining one-third being borne by the appellant, as she had claimed maintenance at the rate of Rs. 15 per month, or Rs. 180 a year, in the appeal. Costs of the appeal in the Court of the District Judge will be borne by the defendant appellants, whilst of the cross objections in that Court will be borne by the plaintiff-respondent. Costs of the suit will be borne as ordered by the trial Court.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff-respondent sued for a declaration that he had a half share in the two houses attached by the defendants-appellants in execution of their decree against the plaintiff's two brothers Hirchand and Kallu. The plaintiff's case is that Kallu separated from the rest of the family in 1921, Hirchand and Gulabchand remaining joint with their father Jaikisan; the houses in suit fell to the share of Jaikisan, Hirchand and Gulabchand, and after Jaikisan's death Hirchand and Gulabchand had each a half share. The defendants denied that there was any partition and pleaded in the alternative that there was a partition after Jaikisan's death between the three brothers in which the houses attached fell to the share of Hirchand. The lower Courts have held in favour of the partition as alleged by the plaintiff and had given him the declaration he has asked for.

In appeal it is again contended that there has been no partition. It is argued on the authority of Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharya Chowdhuri (1), that the partition deed, Ex. P 2, executed by Jaikisan and Kallu is not sufficient to prove the partition; and it is pointed out that the lower Appellate Court has remarked that there is no evidence worth the name about actual partition. The decision in question seems to me to have no application. Their Lordships of the Privy Council were considering the value of recitals as to necessity in sale deeds executed by a limited owner, and I am in respectful agreement with Jai Narain Rai v. Baijnath Rai (2), in which it has been held that if a deed of partition is unequivocal in its language and the intention of the parties is clear from it, it is not necessary to prove acts in support of the deed. I hold that the deed is sufficient in the present case to prove the partition in 1921. This necessarily involves rejection of the defendants' plea of a partition that took place after Jaikisan's death.

It is argued, however, that in any case the plaintiff is not entitled to a half share in the houses but only to four-ninths, because the separation of Kallu raised a presumption that all the brothers of the family separated from each other. The plaintiff would thus get only a one-third share in the property that was not given to Kallu, which would be increased to four-ninths by his getting one-third of his father's one third share on his father's death. In Ramchandra v. Tukaram (3), it is laid down that, if it is proved that there has been a breach in the state of union amongst the members of a Hindu joint family, the law presumes that there has been a complete partition both as to parties and property. This view, however, has been modified in Babanna v. Parawa (4), in which it is said that it is not correct to say that, because one brother has separated or has expressed an intention to separate, therefore the intention of the other brothers must be taken to be the same they may without any special agreement amongst themselves, continue to live as members of a joint Hindu family. Fawcett, J., who was a party to the earlier decision, remarked that in it the rule of law was too widely stated and that there is no general legal presumption that can be made applicable to every case. Babanna v. Parawa (4) follows the decision of the Privy Council in Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Moniagar (5), in which their Lordships, (2) 108 Ind. Cas. 449; 50 A. 615; 26 A. L. J. 349; A. I. after remarking that the remaining co-parceners may continue to be co-parceners without any special agreement amongst themselves, add: "That the remaining members continued to be joint may, if disputed, be inferred from the way in which their family business was carried on after their previous co-parcener had separated from them." In Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal (6), it has been held that

"the fact of a separation having been effected between brothers constituting a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law raises no presumption that there was a separation of the joint family constituted by one of the brothers and his descendants."

It is clear from these decisions that a presumption of complete separation does not arise in all cases when there has been separation of one or more members, and also that no definite agreement to continue to be a joint family on the part of the remaining members is necessary. The Privy Council decision in Bala Bux v. Rukhmabai (7), is not authority to the contrary on either point. That decision says that there is no presumption when one co-parcener separates from the others that the latter remain united, but not that there is always a presumption of complete separation. On the question of agreement it merely holds that an agreement amongst the remaining co-parceners to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact; but that does not mean that an agreement is necessary. When an agreement is relied on it must certainly be proved; but as I have already pointed out, the Privy Council and the Bombay High Court following the Privy Council have held that no special agreement is necessary, it being possible to infer an agreement, if the facts justify such an inference.

Hirchand and Gulabchand were minors when partition took place in 1921, and in Bala Bux v. Rukhmabai (7), their Lordships of the Privy Council found it difficult to see how an agreement to re-unite could be made by or on behalf of a minor. It would, perhaps, follow, if there can be no actual agreement, that it is impossible to infer one. But I do not think that there is any difficulty in the present case, in which I have to decide whether Jaikisan remained joint with his minor sons and not whether they re-united. In the partition Jaikisan acted on their behalf, and if his intention was that he and they should not be separated, that intention would, I think, be as effective to continue the joint family as an agreement, express or inferred, between adults. To hold otherwise would mean that an adult son could, by separating himself from the family, cause separation between his father and the latter's minor sons against the father's will and probably, against the interests of the minors.

That Jaikisan's intention was to remain joint with Hirchand and Gulabchand is indicated by the partition deed itself which specifies only the share to be given to Kallu. It is true that it does not expressly say that the other members would remain joint; but it seems to me to make it clear that the intention was that they should remain joint. The fact that Hirchand and Gulabchand were minors makes it extremely probable that their father would not wish to separate them from himself, and there is evidence to prove that though Kallu after separation went to live separately, the rest of the family continued to live together.

I am satisfied that Jaikisan, Hirchand and Gulabchand remained joint after Kallu separated and that Gulabchand is entitled to half share in the attached houses. The appeal therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 23rd October, 1929, modifying that of the Additional First Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Nagpur, dated the 30th April, 1929.

Mr. A. N. Chorghade, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—On the 18th June, 1910, Sitaram executed a mortgage deed in favour of the plaintiff. The mortgaged property with which I am concerned consisted of an absolute occupancy holding and a house appertaining to this holding. At the date of the mortgage-deed Sitaram and his sons formed a joint Hindu family. The plaintiff sued for foreclosure: he has failed to prove that there was legal necessity for the mortgage. The trial Judge held that the sons had a vested interest in the holding and passed a foreclosure decree with respect to the share of Sitaram.

The lower Appellate Court held that the right of an absolute occupancy tenant was not a proprietary but a tenant right and that the sons of an absolute occupancy tenant had no vested interest in the holding during the lifetime of the tenant. The learned Judge remarked that s. 5 of the Tenancy Act (Act I of 1920), merely laid down the manner in which the succession was to be regulated after the death of the tenant and did not cause the sons of the tenant to have a vested interest in the holding during the lifetime of the tenant. A decree for foreclosure with respect to the whole of the holding and the house appurtenant to it was, therefore, passed.

In second appeal it is urged that the sons obtained, by birth, an interest in the holding. Mr. Puranik, Counsel for respondent No. 1, does not support the lower Appellate Court's interpretation of s. 5 of (Act I of 1920). Section 5 is as follows:

"The interest of an absolute occupancy tenant in his holding shall on his death pass by inheritance or survivorship in accordance with his personal law."

It seems to be clearly intended that the sons of a tenant should take an interest by birth: otherwise the interest of a tenant would seldom, if ever, pass by survivorship. This is made clear by s. 11 of the Tenancy Act, which contains a clear proviso:

"No person shall take any interest during the lifetime of any ancestor of such person in the male line of descent from the tenant:"

The absence of such provision in s. 5 shows that, on the death of an absolute occupancy tenant, his descendants together with their progeny take the same interest in the holding as they would in the case of other property. In a recent Bench decision it has been affirmed that, under the new Tenancy Act, sons take an interest in an absolute occupancy holding by birth. Section 5 is so construed by Mohiuddin, A. J. C., and myself in Laxman v. Bhulabai (1).

But Mr. Puranik points out that the question to be considered is the interest of the sons at the date when the mortgage was executed: if the sons had on that date, no interest, the father had power to transfer the property by executing the deed. He concedes that some ten years later the Act of 1920, created a vested interest in the sons: but that has the same effect as if the sons had been born in 1920.

Section 41 (1) of the old Tenancy Act (Act XI of 1898), is as follows:—

"The right of an absolute occupancy tenant in his holding shall on his death devolve as if it were land."

Section 46 (1) of the Act states:—

"When an occupancy tenant dies, his right in his holding shall devolve as if it were land."

The sections have been construed by a series of rulings. In Pancham Singh v. Nankoo Singh (2), Drake Brockman, A. J. C., stated at pages 184 and 185*:—

"Moreover, by virtue of s. 41 (1), Tenancy Act, the right of an absolute occupancy tenant 'devolves as if it were land', and the use of the word 'devolves' appears by necessary implication to exclude, for example, the taking by survivorship which obtain among Hindus in respect of joint ancestral property."

In Ghanya v. Ukund Rao (3), Stanyon, A. J. C., stated at page 13†:—

"The Tenancy Act does not recognize such things as succession by right or survivorship, the vesting of a son's interest by birth, and so on."

In Tekchand v. Tulai (4), Skinner, A. J.

C., approved of the view that the right of an absolute occupancy tenant was not subject to the rights of co-parcenary and survivorship, which obtained among Hindus in respect of joint ancestral property. In Vithu v. Mendri (5), the view was again affirmed :—

"that the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, by providing that the right of a tenant 'shall devolve as if it were land', appears to exclude by necessary implication the taking by survivorship which obtains among Hindus in respect of joint ancestral property."

In Bhura v. Ramrao (6), Stanyon, A. J. C., referred, with approval, to his previous decision that—

"the Tenancy Act does not recognize such things as succession by right of survivorship, the vesting of a son's interest by birth, and soon."

Mr Onorghade on behalf of the appellants relies on the remarks regarding the nature of an absolute occupancy tenancy right in Ragho v. Sadoo (?). It may well be that this right is different from the rights of tenants proper, but this does not affect the validity of rulings which interpreted the provisions of the Tenancy Act. It seems quite clear that if a tenancy devolves as if it were land and this provision excludes taking by survivorship, sons can have no vested interests in the holding: the holding could not pass by inheritance if the sons had vested interest in it.

The rulings I have cited interpreting the expression "devolve as if it were land" have been consistently followed for twenty years.

The principle of stare decisis makes it necessary for me to hold that sons obtained by birth no vested interest in an absolute occupancy holding so long as Act XI of 1898, was in force. It is quite clear that the tenant of the holding with which I am concerned was Sitaram alone and not the joint family of which Sitaram was a member. The sons had no vested interest in the holding in 1910: Sitaram could mortgage the holding without legal necessity. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed: with costs on the appellants.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—'Transfer defeating or delaying creditor', meaning of—Transfer in favour of one creditor to prejudice of others, legality of.

In cases where no question of insolvency is involved a debtor may pay one creditor in full and may leave others unpaid. The transfer which defeats or delay creditors is not an instrument which prefers one creditor to another but an instrument which removes property from the creditors to the benefit of the debtor. [p. 238, col. 1.]

A transfer by a debtor in favour of one of the creditors for adequate consideration in satisfaction of genuine debts and without reservation of any benefit to the debtor is not hit by the provisions of s. 53, Transfer of Property Act. [ibid.]

Appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 2nd September 1929, reversing that of the Second Class Subordinate Judge, Akot, dated the 16th February 1929.

Mr. M. Bhasker Rao Niyogi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. K. Rajwade and G. G. Hatwalne, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts leading to this appeal are shortly these: In execution of a simple money decree the first defendant attached a field belonging to his judgment-debtor the second defendant, got it sold and it was purchased by the third defendant. The plaintiff laid an objection in the executing Court against the attachment on the basis of a sale-deed which he had taken from the second defendant on the 4th January 1926 for a consideration of Rs. 860. That objection was dismissed and the plaintiff therefore filed a regular suit to have it declared that he was the owner of the attached field and that the same was not liable to sale in execution of the first defendant's decree against the second defendant. The suit was contested only by the first and the third defendants on the ground that the sale was without consideration, that the field conveyed never in fact changed hands and that the transaction was void because it was entered into with the intention of shielding the property from the hands of the second defendant's creditors, the plaintiff and the second defendant being relations.

The trial Court, upon a careful consideration of the evidence on record, held that the sale in plaintiff's favour was for consideration, that the field conveyed was duly placed in possession of the purchaser, and that transaction was not in any way fraudulent. It accordingly granted the plaintiff a declaration as prayed for by him.

Against this decision the first defendant filed an appeal which was disposed of by Mr. Karmarkar, Additional District Judge, Akola. He agreed with the finding of the first Court that the sale in question was for consideration and that it was followed by delivery of possession of the property sold. The learned Judge, however, held that the plaintiff did not appear to him to be a bona fide transferee and that, therefore, the sale in his favour was fraudulent within the meaning of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. He accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Against this decree the plaintiff has come up in second appeal.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that on his own findings, that there was good consideration for the sale in the shape of the discharge of antecedent debts owed by the vendor to the plaintiff as well as to another creditor, and that the sale was followed by delivery of possession and in the absence of any finding that any substantial benefit was reserved by this transaction to the debtor, the view of the learned Judge that the transaction came within the purview of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act was entirely erroneous in law. This contention appears to me to be well founded.

In a similar case in which, as here, no consideration of the law of bankruptcy applied their Lordships of the Privy Council in Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (1) made the following weighty observations:—

"The transfer which defeats or delays creditors is not an instrument which prefers one creditor to another but an instrument which removes property from the creditors to the benefit of the debtor. The debtor must not retain a benefit for himself. He may pay one creditor and leave another unpaid, Middleton v. Pollock (2). So soon as it is found that the transfer here impeached was made for adequate consideration in satisfaction of genuine debts, and without reservation of any benefit to the debtor it follows that no ground for impeaching it lies in the fact that the plaintiff who also was a creditor was a loser by payment being made to this preferred creditor—there being in the case no question of bankruptcy."

Their Lordships of the Privy Council recently affirmed the aforesaid proposition of law in Ma Pwa May v. S. R. M. M. A. Chettiyar Firm (3). In this case it was held that a mortgage executed for adequate consideration, being partly the discharge of a genuine debt, no benefit being retained by the mortgagor, is not invalid under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act as being made to defeat or delay creditors, even though the mortgagor, who is heavily indebted, thereby prefers the mortgagees over other creditors, one of whom has instituted a suit, and before registration of the mortgage has obtained an order before decree attaching the mortgagor's property. In Mardan Singh v. Karanju (4) it was also explained by this Court that an assignment is not fraudulent because it may operate to the prejudice of a particular creditor and that a sale of property for good consideration is not fraudulent against the creditors merely because it was made with the intention of defeating a particular execution.

The facts found by the learned Additional District Judge in para. 7 of his judgment are that the plaintiff was aware that his vendor the second defendant was heavily indebted and that another transaction in the shape of a conveyance by the second defendant in favour of his wife was also gone through about the same time when the plaintiff's sale-deed was executed. The wife of the second defendant also objected in the execution proceedings but the objection was disallowed. She did not file any suit like the present one filed by the plaintiff and it may therefore be taken that the sale in her favour was without consideration and fraudulent. These circumstances would not, however, in my opinion, bring the sale in favour of the plaintiff within the purview of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act as contended by the Pleaders for the respondents.

The cases relied on by the lower Appellate Court in support of its finding on the question of law have no application to the facts found in the present case and are easily distinguishable. In Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export

Company (5), it was held that a transferee for value, who takes the transfer with the intention of helping the transferor to convert his immoveable property into cash which can easily be concealed and thus to defeat or delay his creditors cannot be treated as a transferee in good faith within the meaning of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The cases of Narayan v. Nathu (Second Appeal No. 146-B of 1924 decided on 13th December 1926), and Gopal v. Ram Krishna (6) were cases under the Provincial Insolvency Act the provisions of which are entirely different from those of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the case of Seth Ghunsham Das v. Umashad (7), there was a clear finding by their Lordships of the Privy Council that

"there can be little doubt that the mortgage was a mere device for reserving the bulk of the available assets of Dhanroopmal for the benefit of his family and indirectly for himself."

For the reasons given above I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the trial Court with all costs.

Musammam HOORA alias KUPAR—
PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Muhammadian Law—Dower—Widow's right to retain property until dower debt is satisfied—Husband's creditor's right to proceed against such property.

Under Muhammadian Law a widow's right to retain her husband's property as a creditor for her dower until her debt is satisfied is a personal right and not an interest in the property. Therefore, a creditor who has got a decree against her and other heirs of her husband in respect of his debts is entitled to have the property attached and sold in execution of his decree subject to her right of retention until her dower debt has been satisfied out of the income of the property or otherwise.

Appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Damoh, dated the 22nd February, 1930, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Damoh, dated the 7th December, 1929.

Mr. K. V. Deoskar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fida Hussain, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises from execution proceedings. In a Small Cause Court Suit No. 305 of 1928, the appellant Kalekhan obtained a decree against Rulli, Kadar and others including Musammam Hura, the respondent, as heirs and legal representatives of Imami, the original debtor. The appellant attached a house in execution of his decree. Musammam Hura, the respondent, laid an objection against the attachment on the ground that the house was in her possession, pursuant to her claim for dower to the extent of Rs. 500. Her objection was dismissed in the first Court, but was allowed in appeal, with the result that the house was altogether released from attachment.

There seems to be no doubt that the Will dated the 10th December, 1924, was executed by Imami. The dower debt of Rs. 500 is mentioned therein. It cannot be disputed that Musammam Hura having come peacefully into the possession of the house in assertion of her claim for dower, is entitled to remain in possession until the satisfaction of the dower debt, either from the income of the property or otherwise.

The question is whether the creditor is precluded from attaching the house and bringing it to sale in execution, for what it is worth. It is argued for the respondent that so long as Musammam Hura has the lawful right to continue in possession of the house, it is not capable of attachment and sale. Although it may be conceded on the authority of Ameer-oon-Nissa v. Moorad-oon-Nissa (1), Umatul Mehdi v. Kulsum (2) and Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (3), that the possession obtained by a Muhammadan widow in assertion of her claim of dower cannot be disturbed, the question still remains whether the property cannot be treated as assets of the deceased husband for purpose of the satisfaction of his debts. answer would depend upon the nature of the right claimed by the widow. In Beebe Bachun v. Hamid Hossain (4), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

"It is not necessary to say, whether this right of the widow in possession is a lien in the strict sense of the term, although no doubt the right is so stated in a judgment of the High Court in a case of Ahmed Hossain v. Khodeja (5). Whatever the right may be called, it appears to be founded on the power of the widow, as a creditor for her dower, to hold the property of her husband, of which she has lawfully, and without force or fraud, obtained possession, until her debt is satisfied, with the liability to account to those entitled to the property, subject to the claim for the profits received."

In Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (6), it was held that

"dower stands on no higher footing than any other debt due from her deceased husband; and, except where there is a distinct agreement to that effect, there is no presumption of hypothecation of his estate for her dower to be drawn from the mere circumstance that dower is due."

In Mahbubibi v. Amina (7), it was held that the right of a Muhammadan widow to the dower is not an interest in immovable property. Similarly in Muzzaffar Ali Khan v. Parbati (8), it was held that her possession was that of a creditor to hold the property until her debt is satisfied with the liability to account to those entitled to the property. Although for some time the view prevailed that her possession was analogous to that of a mortgagee in possession, see Azizullah Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (9), and Banoo Begum v. Mir Aun Ali (10), that cannot now be accepted as sound in view of the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maina Bibi v. Vakil Ahmad (11). From a review of these cases the deduction follows that the right of a Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's property for dower debt is a personal right given to her by the Islamic Law and does not by any means amount to an interest in the land.

The creditor of a deceased Muhammadan is entitled to recover his debts out of the assets left by him. The assets no doubt vest in the heirs and are available for distribution amongst them, but as the heirs themselves are liable to the deceased's debts to the extent of the assets, it is obvious that they must go primarily to the discharge of the debts. As the widow in possession has no interest in the assets arising from her claim of dower, there is obviously nothing to prevent the assets being utilized for the satisfaction of the husband's debts, subject, of course, to the personal right of the widow to retain possession. In Kaniz Fatima Begam v. Ram Nandan Dhar Dube (12), a Muhammadan widow endeavoured to deter attachment precisely on the ground urged in the present case and their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court rejected her claim.

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the house in question is liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree. All that is necessary to state is that under O. XXI, r. 66, Civil Procedure Code, it would be incumbent on the decree-holder to get it mentioned in the proclamation of sale that the house is in possession of Musammatt Hura by virtue of her claim of dower. All that is sold in execution is the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors and the auction-purchaser, whether he be a decree-holder or a stranger, would purchase the house burdened with Musammatt Hura's personal right, which itself is qualified by her liability to account for the income.

For these reasons I allow the appeal and direct that the house be sold subject to the terms above stated. The respondent will pay the costs of the appellant in all Courts. Pleader's fees Rs. 10 only.

Second Appeal against a decree, of the Additional Sub-Judge, Lucknow, dated the 2nd June, 1930, reversing that of the Munsif, South Lucknow, dated the 11th May, 1929.

Messrs. Hyder Husein, Manohar Lal and Al-i-Raza, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. Hasan, for the Respondent.

Kisch, J.—This is the defendants appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated the 2nd of June, 1930, reversing the decree of the Munsif, South Lucknow, dated the 11th of May, 1929.

The plaintiff Subhan Khan, alleging himself to be the mutawalli of a certain piece of wakf property consisting of a musalman grave-yard and a mosque in Mohalla Narahi in the City of Lucknow, instituted the suit to recover possession of the portion of the said grave-yard on which the first defendant Dilawar Husain had a smithy shop on the allegation that this defendant had executed a deed of gift of the land on which the shop stood in favour of his son, the second defendant, and that this together with certain other acts of the defendants had caused the plaintiff to apprehend that they intended to assert their title to this land.

A number of pleas were taken in defence before the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court, but only two of them have to be considered in this appeal. The first is that the defendant Dilawar Husain had perfected his title by adverse possession and the second that the suit, being a representative suit, was not maintainable without the permission of the Court.

The finding that the land in question is wakf has not been contested in this Court, and indeed the decision of this Bench in a very similar case Noor Mohammad v. Ballab Dass (1) is conclusive on the point.

The contention that the defendant Dilawar Husain has acquired title by adverse possession has been discussed under two aspects, firstly that this is established by the evidence and secondly that it is concluded by a previous decision of a competent Court, and the matter is, therefore, res judicata.

With regard to the first argument very little need be said. The lower Appellate Court has found as a fact that Dilawar Husain never asserted a hostile title in him as against the plaintiff or the rest of the Musalman community prior to 1927. This finding is not open to question in second appeal.

With regard to the question of res judicata the judgment relied upon was passed in a suit brought in the year 1925 by one Murari Lal against the present plaintiff Subhan Khan, both the present defendants, and a number of other persons to obtain possession of the whole of the grave-yard excluding the ground occupied by the mosque. The present plaintiff and the remaining defendants in that suit, except Dilawar Husain and his son Habibur Rahman put forward the defence that the land being a Musalman grave-yard was wakf property. The present defendants pleaded title by adverse possession over their smithy shop. Thereupon the present plaintiff filed a supplementary pleading to the effect that Dilawar Husain and his son occupied the land on which their shop stood with his permission on payment of rent which was devoted to the up-keep of the wakf prop.

erty. Incidentally this supports the finding of the lower Appellate Court that it was not until this litigation that Dilawar Husain asserted a hostile title as against the rest of the Musalman community. Thus in the suit referred to the present plaintiff Subhan Khan and both the present defendants were co-defendants. No issue was struck as to their rights inter se. There was an issue on the question of limitation and in connection with this issue the trial Court held that the defendants Dilawar Husain and his son Habibur Rahman had acquired title by adverse possession of over twelve years as against the plaintiff. The suit was decided on the 18th February, 1927, in favour of the plaintiff except for the plot on which the smithy-shop stands and certain other small plots in respect of which the suit was dismissed. The present plaintiff and certain other defendants in that suit went up in appeal to the District Judge without making Dilawar Husain or his son parties to the appeal with the result that the finding of the Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiff Murari Lal was reversed on the ground that his own title was defective and the result was that the whole of his suit was dismissed. The above recital of the circumstances of the litigation on which the defendants rely is sufficient to show that the decision in that case cannot operate as res judicata in the present case. In order to give the plaintiff in that case the relief sought by him or to decide the appeal of the appealing defendants in that case, it was not necessary to come to a decision with regard to the rights of Subhan Khan and Dilawar Husain and his son inter se. Subhan Khan and the other appellants in that case succeeded in their appeal on the weakness of the plaintiff's title. In the circumstances of that case the defendants Dilawar Husain and Habibur Rahman were not necessary parties to the appeal. It is clear that, on the grounds on which the Appellate Court allowed the appeal, the plaintiff's suit must have been wholly dismissed as it eventually was. Thus having regard to the decision of the Appellate Court the plea of adverse possession raised by Dilawar Husain and Habibur Rahman cannot be treated as a matter directly and substantially at issue in that litigation, the plaintiff having failed on the weakness of his own title.

With regard to the question of the maintainability of the suit, the learned Subordinate Judge has found as a fact that the plaintiff Subhan Khan had been appointed mutawalli of the wakf property by the Musalman community of Mohalla Narahi with the consent of the out-going mutawalli. He recognised that such appointment was not according to the canons of the Muhammadan Law which lays down that a mutwalli can be appointed (1) according to the terms of the trust deed, (2) according to custom, if any, (3) by nomination by a mutawalli and (4) by appointment by Qazi or Judge. He however relied on the ruling of the late Mr. Justice Ameer Ali in Piran v. Abdool Karim (2) that in the case of an institution confined to a particular locality (as is the grave-yard in Mohalla Narahi) the congregation of that locality can appoint a mutawalli. I see no reason to adopt a view different from that taken by such an eminent authority.

On the view that the plaintiff Subhan Khan was in fact the mutawalli of the wakf, the question of the obtaining of permission of the Court under O I, r. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not arise. But on this point also the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge appears to be correct. The question whether Subhan Khan was precluded from instituting the suit, because he had not obtained the permission of the Court, was not a matter specifically in issue. It was raised in appeal before the lower Appellate Court. If the defendants had raised a specific objection on this score the necessary permission could have been obtained and the fact that the suit was allowed to proceed, justifies the presumption that the defendants did not wish to raise such a plea. The reason may possibly be found in the fact that a large number of Musalman residents of the locality, who were interested in the wakf, had come forward to give evidence for the plaintiff and, therefore, notice to the persons interested would have been superfluous. The Court had the power to cure this technical defect by allowing amendment of the plaint; but where, as in the present case, the circumstances were such that no amendment of the plaint was really necessary, the Bombay High Court in Narain v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (3) refused to set aside the decree of the Court below on the ground that the suit which was brought in a representative capacity had not been properly framed. I would add that in any case the defect would not be fatal to the plaintiff's case in view of the clear terms of s. 99 of the Code of Civil

(2) 10 C. 203.

Procedure that no decree shall be reversed or modified on account of any error, defect or irregularity not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.

In my opinion, therefore, there is no substance in either of the contentions raised on behalf of the appellants.

The question remains as to the proper order to be passed in this case. Proceeding on the basis that the land in suit is wakf property, this Court has jurisdiction to pass such order as may be just and proper in all the circumstances of the case and is not bound to the granting of the relief of ejectment at once. I would propose that a declaration be made that the property in suit is wakf property and that the defendants appellants be allowed to continue to occupy that portion of the property on which the smithy stands for a period of five years on payment of rent at Rs. 2 per mensem, in case they so desire. They will intimate their option to continue to hold that piece of land on the terms indicated above within fifteen days from to-day to the Court of first instance. In case they decline to accept these terms, the decree for ejectment will hold good but the defendants will be entitled to remove the materials of the structure within one month from to day. In all events the defendants appellants should pay the costs of the plaintiff-respondent in all Courts.

Hasan, C. J.—I entirely agree with my learned brother that there is no substance in either of the contentions raised on behalf of the appellants and I also agree with him as to the form of the order which should be passed in this case and also as to the costs.

Order modified.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 239, 423 (2)—Joint trial for kidnapping and concealing kidnapped woman—Legality—Conviction under s. 368—Essentials of charge to Jury—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 366, 368—Offence under s. 368—Knowledge of accused, importance of—'Knowledge', meaning of.

A verdict of the Jury finding a person guilty under s. 368, Penal Code, must be considered erroneous within the meaning of s. 243 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, where the Judge did not adequately bring out the difference between knowledge and existence of grounds for belief or suspicion in his charge to the Jury or, at any rate, the Jury did not understand the importance of the difference between the two things. [p. 246, col. 1.]

A joint trial for offences under ss. 366 and 368, Penal Code, is not illegal where the whole chain of events beginning with kidnapping or abduction and ending with the discovery of the woman can fairly be regarded as forming one and the same transaction. [p. 244, col. 1.]

For a conviction under s. 368, Penal Code, the accused must be proved to have had knowledge of the fact of kidnapping or abduction. [p. 244, col. 2.]

For practical and legal purposes knowledge means the state of mind entertained by a person with regard to existing facts which he has himself observed, or the existence of which has been communicated to him by persons whose veracity he has no reason to doubt. [p. 245, col. 1.]

Reference made by the Assistant Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, by his order dated the 20th July, 1931.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The above appeals and reference are connected and can be disposed of together.

The facts, briefly, are as follows. A married girl named Parbhu Dei, a "murao" by caste, is said to have been either kidnapped or abducted at Fyzabad on or about the 22nd-23rd January last by three men named Munne, Nazir and Kunnu, and taken on an "ekka gari" driven by one Zamin to a Railway Station whence Munne and Kunnu brought her by train to Lucknow. At Lucknow she is said to have been kept for several days at an "ashram" or widows' home, run by one Babu Ram with the assistance of one Badri. On the 13th February she was married to one Thakur Dass a resident of Jullundar, in the Punjab, and Thakur Dass, with whom were three companions in the persons of Bholanath, Chunni Lal and Jamna Dass, left with the girl by train on the evening of the 14th February. One Sarabjit Singh, however, had got wind of what was going on and either out of genuinely disinterested motives or to spite Babu Ram himself boarded the same train as Thakur Dass and his party, and gave information to the Police at Shah-jahanpur, as a result of which Thakur Dass and those with him were arrested. In the end Nazir, Munne and Zamin were committed for trial on a charge under s. 360, Indian Penal Code, and Babu Ram, Badri, Thakur Dass, Jamna Dass, Chunni Lal and Bholanath on charges under s. 368, Indian Penal Code. Kunnu was said to be absconding so he was not before the Court. As a result of the trial, which was held with a Jury, Munne and Nazir were convicted under s. 366, Indian Penal Code and Thakur Dass Badri and Babu Ram were convicted under s. 368, Indian Penal Code. Each of them was sentenced to five (5) years' rigorous imprisonment. Jamna Dass, Chunni Lal, and Bholanath were acquitted. As regards the above men, the learned Assistant Sessions Judge of Fyzabad, who tried the case, accepted the unanimous verdict of the Jury. As regards Zamin, the Jury were unanimous in finding him also guilty under s. 366, Indian Penal Code, despite the fact that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge had directed them to return a verdict of not guilty in his case. The Assistant Sessions Judge was of course entitled to do that, under s. 289 (2), Criminal Procedure Code if he considered there was no evidence that Zamin was guilty of the offence charged against him. The Assistant Sessions Judge has referred the case of Zamin to this Court, as he was unable to accept the Jury's verdict of guilty against him, and we have also before us appeals by the five convicted men. Babu Ram and Badri (Badri Parshad) are the appellants in Appeal No. 209, Thakur Dass (alias Thakur Prasad) is the appellant in No. 358, Nazir (Nazir Khan) in No. 259 and Munne in No. 270.

As regards Zamin, we agree with the reasons given by the Assistant Sessions Judge for holding no case made out against him. We can only suppose that the Jury were confused as to him as a result of the very long and elaborate charge addressed to them by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge. Acting under s. 307 (4), Criminal Procedure Code, we acquit Zamin. If he is in custody he must be released forthwith. If he is on bail, any bond executed by him or on his behalf are discharged.

As regards the appeals by the convicted men, it was suggested to us that the joint trial was bad in law. We think there is no force in that suggestion. The whole chain of events beginning with the girl's kidnapping or abduction at Fyzabad, and ending with her discovery at Shahjahanpur, can fairly be regarded as forming one and the same transaction. It would be in the highest degree inconvenient in a case of this nature to split the entire chain of events up into several distinct trials involving the repetition of much of the evidence in each of them.

As regards the charge to the Jury, we think that the Assistant Sessions Judge was at pains to lay the case fairly and fully before the Jury and that if he erred it was on the side of over-elaboration, and not on the side of insufficiency of details.

Having said this much by way of preface, we proceed to consider the cases of the various appellants.

The exact age of the girl is not very certain. She may be under 16. According to her mother's evidence she is 14 and according to medical evidence she is about 15. The Jury concluded her to be aged "exactly 16 years," but they found, nevertheless, that she was "kidnapped." If she is not under 16, of course she could not be kidnapped, but we are satisfied that there were materials justifying a finding that she was abducted, since she is said to have been induced to go with the men concerned first by deceitful promises of being taken to the house of a relative of hers, and afterwards by threats of being killed. It was in fact, abduction, and not kidnapping, that was mentioned in the charge sheets. For the purposes of ss. 366 and 368, Indian Penal Code, of course, kidnapping and abduction stand on the same footing. We are satisfied that the girl was either kidnapped or abducted and that the object of those who kidnapped or abducted her was one or more of the objects specified in s. 366, Indian Penal Code. She alleges that she was, in fact, raped on several occasions quite apart from her ultimate marriage against her will to Thakur Dass. Those who kidnapped or abducted her, therefore, were rightly convicted under s. 366, Indian Penal Code. There was sufficient evidence to justify the Jury's finding that Nazir and Munne were two of the men concerned. We see no reason to interfere, as far as they are concerned, either with the convictions or with the sentences. Their appeals are dismissed.

We now come to the cases of Babu Ram and Badri. As to them, it is urged in appeal:

(i) they had no "knowledge" that Musammat Parbhu Dei had been kidnapped or abducted,

(ii) they did not "conceal" her, whether they had such knowledge or not.

As to the former point, we are referred to a ruling reported as Gadadhar Sarkar v. Emperor (1).

It is true that s. 363, Indian Penal Code is confined to "knowledge" only of the fact of kidnapping or abduction. It contains no words, as do certain other sections of the Code (such as ss. 411, 497 and 498), such as 'or having reason to believe'. It has, therefore, to be considered whether Babu Ram and Badri can be said to have known that Musammāt Parbhū Dēi had been kidnapped or abducted.

In that connection we must mention that there is no doubt that the girl did, in fact, spend some time at the "ashram" managed by Babu Ram and Badri. It appears that she arrived there on the 30th January and, if that is so, there is a curious lacuna in the evidence as to where she was between the 22nd-23rd January and that date. However, as we have said, she certainly spent several days at the "ashram", that is not denied by Babu Ram and Badri. Their version is that she was brought there in the absence of Babu Ram, and was admitted by Badri, to whom she represented that she was a widow anxious to remarry.

It has, therefore, to be considered, as we have said already, whether Babu Ram and Badri can be said to have "known" that she had been kidnapped or abducted.

According to the girl, Munne and Kunnu had some talk with Badri which she did not overhear. She herself, she said, told both Badri and Babu Ram that she was married, and had a husband and various other relatives living. She did not say that she ever gave them to understand that she had been kidnapped or abducted.

In these circumstances, it is difficult to see how it can be held that Babu Ram or Badri "knew" her to have been kidnapped or abducted. Without going into a metaphysical discussion of the nature of knowledge, we may say that for practical and legal purposes, knowledge means the state of mind entertained by a person with regard to existing facts which he has himself observed, or the existence of which has been communicated to him by persons whose veracity he has no reason to doubt. Here, it is not suggested that Babu Ram or Badri had any personal knowledge of the girl and her circumstances prior to her arrival at the "ashram" at Lucknow, so they can only be held to have had "knowledge" of her and her circumstances if the facts in those connections were communicated to them by the girl herself or by others, which sources of information they had no reason to doubt. If the girl herself, or the men Munne and Kunnu, were alleged to have given to Babu Ram or Badri information that the girl had been kidnapped or abducted, we should have had no difficulty, in the absence of any suggestion that they had any reason to disbelieve what was told them, that Babu Ram and Badri "knew" that the girl had been kidnapped or abducted. As far as the evidence goes, however, we cannot say more than this, that they had reason to believe, or suspected, that she had been kidnapped or abducted. We have no hesitation in saying that the arrival at the "ashram" of a Hindu girl, who alleged herself to be married, in the company of two Musalmans, (we think the prosecution case to be adequately made out, to that extent) may reasonably be held to have given rise to strong suspicions in the minds of Babu Ram and Badri, but the possibility of her having voluntarily left home remained and we are not prepared to hold that the possibility was negatived by anything communicated to Babu Ram and Badri by the girl or by her companions.....in other words, we are not prepared to hold that Babu Ram or Badri "knew" the girl to have been kidnapped or abducted, so as to render them punishable under s. 388, Indian Penal Code.

In these circumstances, we think the conviction of those men under s. 368, Indian Penal Code was not, in law, justified by the evidence. As to whether the girl can be said to have been "concealed" at the "ashram" it is not necessary for us definitely to decide, but we may say that despite what is contained in certain rulings, to which we have been referred on that point.—In re Ihurup Bhujun Singh (2); In re Chubboo (3); In re Phula Singh (4), we should have had no difficulty having regard to all the circumstances, in holding that Babu Ram and Badri "concealed" the girl. She said that she, and other women in the "ashram", used to be kept at times under lock and key, and even if she was not continuously kept concealed or confined (apparently she was not so kept concealed or confined), she was, in our opinion, kept concealed and confined at times. However, having regard to the view we take on the point of the knowledge of Babu Ram and Badri, it is not necessary to discuss that point further. We think that the conviction of Babu Ram and Badri under s. 368, Indian Penal Code was bad in law. It is possible that they might, on the evidence, have been properly convicted under some other section or sections of the Penal Code, but we do not think we need to consider that here. We set aside the convictions and sentences of Babu Ram and Badri under s. 368, Indian Penal Code, and direct that they be forthwith released.

It should not be necessary for us to state that we are far from approving of such activities as Babu Ram and Badri appear to have been carrying on at the so-called "ashram". We are told that those activities have now ceased, and we are glad to believe that that is so.

There remains the case of Thakur Dass. We need say little in that connection. It is not made out that he knew the girl had been kidnapped or abducted. She did indeed say at first, that she told him, before her "marriage", that she had a husband living, but she afterwards said that she could not remember whether she told him that before her "marriage" to him. After that "marriage," she said, she did not tell Thakur Dass that she had been forced to marry him. Yet again, she said that in the train she told Thakur Dass and his companions that she had not married "with her consent."

Little attention can be paid to what the girl has said at different times on this point. In any case, we are satisfied, that Thakur Dass cannot be said to have known that she had been kidnapped or abducted, so his conviction under s. 368, Indian Penal Code must be held to have been bad in law. We, therefore, set aside his conviction and sentence; he will be released forthwith.

We may mention with regard to the contents of sub-s. (2) of s. 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that we consider the verdict of the Jury to have been erroneous as regards Babu Ram, Badri and Thakur Dass owing to the fact that the learned Judge did not adequately bring out in his charge to the Jury the difference between knowledge, and the existence of grounds for belief or suspicion, and that at any rate the Jury failed to understand the importance of the difference between those two things for the purposes of a conviction under s. 368, Indian Penal Code.

Order set aside.

Oaths Act (X of 1873), ss. 8, 9, 10—Party, meaning of—Authorised agent, whether party—Statement by party to be bound—Effect on other parties—Mukhtar's power to bind.

The word 'party' in s. 9, Oaths Act, includes a duly authorised agent. Amir v. Mohammad Baksh (1), followed.

Where the terms of a mukhtarnama are very wide and give the mukhtar authority to make a compromise, confess judgment or make a reference to arbitration, such extensive powers must be deemed sufficiently wide to include authority to take action under ss. 8, 9 and 10 of the Oaths Act.

Statement by a party in pursuance of an agreement made under the Oaths Act, is ordinarily binding only as against the parties who had offered to be so bound, but where the rights and liabilities of certain parties are inseparable and some of them agree to be bound, the agreement is binding on all of them.

Second Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 15th February, 1930, affirming that of the Munsif, Bilgram, Hardoi, dated the 10th September, 1929.

Mr. Hakimuddin, for the Appellant.

Mr. Radha Krishna, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for demolition of a wall constructed by the defendants.

The persons who are related as brothers were impleaded as defendants. When the case came up for trial, the plaintiff through her mukhtar agreed to abide by the statement made by the defendant No. 1 inside a particular temple. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who were present at the time when this statement was made, agreed to the case being decided upon the said statement. The Court appointed a Commissioner to record the statement of defendant No. 1 in terms of the agreement above referred to. The statement was to the effect that the plaintiff is not entitled to get the wall demolished and that her suit ought to be dismissed against all the defendants. The Court accordingly dismissed the suit. This order has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

The contention urged before me is that the word "party" as used in s. 9 of the Oaths Act (X of 1873) does not include an authorized agent and that even if it did, the agent who made the agreement on behalf of the plaintiff had no authority to do so. In my opinion those contentions have no substance.

The first contention is fully covered by the decision of a Bench of this Court in Amir v. Mohammad Bakhsh (1), in which it was held that the word "party" under s. 9 of the Oaths Act includes a duly authorized agent. As regards the second contention the term of the mukhtar are very wide. They give the mukhtar authority to make a compromise, confess judgment or make a reference to arbitration. In my opinion such extensive powers as are given in this mukhtar are sufficiently wide to include authority to take action under ss. 8, 9 and 10 of the Oaths Act.

Lastly it was also contended that the defendant No. 3 is not a party to the agreement and therefore the plaintiff is entitled to have her suit decided on merits against the said defendant. Reference has been made to Ram Ratan v. Ram Lal Singh (2) in support of the argument that the statement made by defendant No. 1 in pursuance of the agreement made under the Oaths Act was binding only as against the parties who had offered to be so bound. The learned Counsel for the appellant in urging this argument admits that the decree passed in pursuance of the statement made by defendant No. 1 will be binding as between the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 but contends that it cannot bind the plaintiffs as against defendant No. 3. The position in the present case is a peculiar one. If the decree holds good as against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 it must hold good against defendant No. 3 also. The result of the decree passed in pursuance of the statement made by defendant No. 1 is that the plaintiff's suit for demolition of the wall must be dismissed. If this dismissal is to hold good against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 it is impossible for the plaintiff to get a decree for demolition against defendant No. 3. The rights and liabilities of the three defendants in the present case are inseparable. I therefore think the decision of the lower Court is correct.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Ghulam Hasan, for the Appellants.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the judgment and decree, dated 27th May, 1930, of the District Judge of Unao upholding the judgment, dated the 9th September, 1929, of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that place. It arises out of a suit for a declaration that certain deeds executed and loans taken by Musammat Sukhraj Kuar, defendant No. 1, were fictitious and not binding on the property of her deceased husband Kalka Singh or on the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' case was that Kalka Singh had on 8th January, 1916, executed a Will giving a life-interest to his wife Sukhraj Kuar and the remainder to the plaintiffs. They further alleged that Musammat Sukhraj Kuar had been given a limited power of transfer for certain specified purposes namely for funeral ceremonies, charity, religious purposes and performance of Gaya, etc. They also pleaded that under colour of this power she had executed various deeds purporting to be for objects for which she was authorised to make transfers but that, as a matter of fact, no money was required for any of those objects, and the transactions were only colourable and fictitious. The various deeds impugned by the plaintiffs have culminated in a sale-deed dated the 2nd July, 1927 for a consideration of Rs. 4,300. Both the lower Courts have found that Sukhraj Kuar borrowed various sums of money for purposes specified in the Will, and that these debts have all been paid up by means of the sale-deed dated 2nd July, 1927. The learned District Judge has also remarked that it is possible that she might have spent on these objects more than what was strictly necessary, but the plaintiffs cannot question the transfers on that ground. Both the lower Courts also recorded a finding, based on an interpretation of the Will of Kalka Singh to the effect that Sukhraj Kuar had an absolute estate in the property bequeathed to her by Kalka Singh.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants have sought to impugn all the findings recorded by the learned District Judge. We think that it is not necessary for us to enter into the question of the interpretation of the Will in the present case. As we have stated before the plaintiffs' claim was confined to a declaration about the transfers specified in para. 4 of the plain being colourable and fictitious. This matter is concluded by the concurrent findings of fact of the two lower Courts. It has been proved from the evidence both oral and documentary on the record that Sukhraj Kuar borrowed various sums of money from time to time under the deeds in question and received the consideration in respect of them. The deeds, therefore, cannot be regarded as fictitious.

It was also contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that admittedly Rs. 1,750 out of the consideration of the sale-deed dated 2nd July, 1927, has not yet been paid by the vendee to Musimmat Sukhraj Kuar and that the plaintiffs should be given a declaration at least to the effect that this portion of the consideration of the sale-deed was fictitious. We find ourselves unable to accede to this contention. The relief claimed was about the deeds in question being colourable and fictitious. If any portion of the consideration in respect of them has been paid the transaction cannot be considered to be fictitious, and the plaintiffs cannot get the declaration claimed.

Lastly the plaintiffs wanted us to determine the extent of the consideration of the sale-deed which was borrowed for the objects for which she has been authorised to borrow under the terms of the Will. This matter also seems to us to be wholly outside the terms of the relief claimed in the plaint. We, therefore, decline to enter into a discussion of it in this appeal.

The appeal must fail on the finding that the transactions in suit are not fictitious. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 413, 414, 415—Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 24—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 447—Conviction for criminal trespass and forcibly rescuing cattle—Combination of sentences—Order of conviction, whether appealable.

Where a person was convicted under s. 447, Penal Code, and s. 24, Cattle Trespass Act, and fined Rs. 50 for the former offence and Rs. 20 for the latter, by a Magistrate in the exercise of summary powers:

Held, that there was a combination of two punishments of the nature referred to in s. 414, Criminal Procedure Code, and the order was appealable.

The word "therein" in s. 415, Criminal Procedure Code, refers to ss. 413 and 414, and s. 415 is intended to apply to cases in which two or more of the punishments mentioned in s. 413, or s. 414, have been combined.

Criminal Revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 26th August, 1931.

Mr. A. N. Mulla, for the Applicants.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment—This is an application for revision under ss. 135-139 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, against the order dated the 26th of August, 1931, of the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad upholding the order dated the 12th of August, 1931, of a Magistrate First Class of the Fyzabad District convicting the applicants summarily under s. 447, Indian Penal Code, and s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act and sentencing each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 50, in default two months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 447, Indian Penal Code and a fine of Rs. 20, in default one month's rigorous imprisonment under s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act. Briefly stated the facts are that there is a military grass farm in Fyzabad. A portion of the land of this farm has been reserved for growing grass for the use of the military. This reserved area has been enclosed with barbed wire fencing. On the night of 21-22 June, 1931, the applicants were found grazing about sixty head of cattle in this reserved area. When the employees of the grass farm tried to secure the cattle in order to take them to the pound, the applicants resisted and rescued some thirty or thirty-five head of cattle with the result that the grass farm employees could manage to impound only nineteen head.

The learned Magistrate in an elaborate judgment after discussing the evidence at considerable length held that the prosecution case had been fully established and that all the accused persons were guilty of committing criminal trespass and also of forcibly rescuing cattle and that they were therefore liable to conviction under s. 447 Indian Penal Code and s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act. He accordingly awarded them the sentences stated above under each of these sections. The accused filed an application for revision in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad against this order of the Magistrate. The application was dismissed summarily by the learned Sessions Judge.

The first contention urged on behalf of the applicants is that as the Magistrate has awarded two punishments, one a fine of Rs. 50 under s. 447 and the other a fine of Rs. 20 under s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act, therefore the case is governed by s. 415 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and in spite of the provisions of s. 414 of that Code, the sentence was appealable to the Sessions Judge. Section 415 runs as follows:

An appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in ss. 413 or 414 by which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined, but no sentence which would not otherwise be liable to appeal, shall be appealable merely on the ground that the person convicted is ordered to find security to keep the peace.

The word 'therein' as used in this section must in my opinion refer to ss. 413 and 414. In other words, the section is intended to apply to cases in which two or more of the punishments mentioned in s. 413 or s. 414 have been combined. The punishments mentioned in s. 413 are a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month passed by a Court of Session and a fine not exceeding Rs. 50 imposed by a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the First Class. It is admitted that this section does not apply to the case. As stated before the conviction by the Magistrate was in the exercise of his summary powers and therefore the relevant section is 414. The punishment referred to in this section is a fine not exceeding

Rs. 200 only. In the present case the Magistrate has imposed two such fines, one of Rs. 50 and the other of Rs. 20. Thus the case is one in which two punishments such as are referred to in s. 414 have been combined. If any of these punishments stood by itself, the order by virtue of s. 414 could not be appealable but because the Magistrate imposed two such punishments, therefore by reason of the combination of the two punishments, s. 415 makes the order appealable. I therefore accept the applicants' contention. But the applicants cannot derive any benefit from it. The order of the Magistrate being appealable, the applicants instead of making an application in revision to the Sessions Judge ought to have filed appeals against their conviction and sentence. As they did not do so, the learned Sessions Judge was perfectly right in dismissing the applications for revision summarily. It was argued that the learned Sessions Judge ought to have treated the application for revision as an appeal. But no such request was made to him and he was not bound to do so. Section 439 cl. (5), Criminal Procedure Code, provides that where under this Act an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed. The result therefore is that the present application for revision is not maintainable. In this view of the matter it is not necessary for me to enter into the merits of the application.

The application fails and is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Acquittal—No appeal by Government—Revision, competency of.

It is open to the High Court to interfere with an order of acquittal in revision at the instance of a private complainant to the extent of setting aside the order of acquittal and directing re-trial. [p. 250, col. 2.]

Application for Revision of an order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 10th March, 1931.

Dr. J. N. Misra and Mr. Sri Ram Misra, for the Applicant.

Messrs. J. Jackson and L. N. Shukla, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This is a criminal revision at the instance of a private complainant against the acquittal of two men, Jitendra Mohan Singh and Mathura Singh, who were tried with the aid of a Jury by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge at Fyzabad. The charges against Jitendra Mohan Singh were under ss. 465 Indian Penal Code, and 477-A, or, in the alternative, under s. 477-A read with s. 114 Indian Penal Code. The charges against Mathura Singh were under ss. 465, 477-A and s. 204 Indian Penal Code.

The facts briefly are that on the 7th of April, 1909, one Raj Bahadur Singh executed a mortgage deed in favour of two men, Indra Bikram Singh and Jai Narain Singh. Jai Narain Singh is still alive. Indra Bikram Singh is dead. The accused Jitendra Mohan Singh is one of Indra Bikram Singh's sons. The mortgagor, Raj Bahadur Singh is also dead, having died in the year 1919. The complainant in the present case is his son, Girdhari Singh. It is said that in the year 1929, Jai Narain Singh and Jitendra Mohan Singh threatened Girdhari Singh with a suit for the recovery of Rs. 62,000 on the basis of the mortgage that has been referred to above. Thereafter, it is said Girdhari Singh having taken legal advice was informed that a claim on the basis of the deed aforesaid was time-barred and he went to Jitendra Mohan Singh accused and told him that he had been so advised. Jitendra Mohan Singh said that he, too, would take legal advice. The suggestion made by the complainant is that certain alterations were made in the account books of the mortgagee and certain pages in certain account books were destroyed in order to create evidence which would bring a suit on the basis of the mortgage-deed within time. Jai Narain Singh and Jitendra Mohan Singh, it should be mentioned, are carrying on a joint banking business, in which Mathura Singh is the manager.

A criminal complaint was lodged by Girdhari Singh against Jitendra Mohan Singh and Mathura Singh on the 11th of March, 1930. As a result of the magisterial inquiry, Jitendra Mohan Singh and Mathura Singh were committed for trial on charges that have already been set forth. The trial began in the middle of December, 1930, and continued till the 13th of March, 1931, on which date the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, accepting the opinion of the majority of the Jurors, found both the accused not guilty of the offences charged against them and acquitted them. It was not until the 14th of August last, that this application in revision was made to this Court against the acquittal of the accused in that trial. We are informed that the complainant had, in the meantime, moved the appropriate authorities to get an appeal instituted by Government against the acquittals, but Government refused to institute such an appeal.

On behalf of the applicant, we have heard Dr. J. N. Misra at very considerable length. He has cited to us numerous rulings both of this Court and of other Courts, as to our competency to entertain this application at the instance of a private complainant despite the fact that Government has declined to institute an appeal. We do not think it necessary to set out any of those rulings in detail, since we are prepared to hold that it is within our competency, should we see fit, to interfere in the matter at the instance of this private complainant to the extent of setting aside the orders of acquittal and directing a retrial.

On the merits, various points have been taken. The first is that the Jury, with the aid of which the Sessions trial was conducted, was not properly constituted. We see no reason to attach any particular importance to the suggestions made on that point especially in view of the fact that the Jurors were not objected to when the trial began. That was the time for the parties to raise any objection.

As to the merits of the matter in other ways, we find ourselves in some difficulty by reason of the fact that on the 12th of March, 1931, that is to say, two days after the decision of the Sessions trial, a civil suit was filed on the basis of this mortgage deed. This suit is still pending and that fact is the one that impresses us most in deciding what action we ought to take with regard to the revision. For us to go into all the details of the accounts would, needless to say, be to consider matters which will come up for decision in the civil suit. If a retrial of the criminal case were ordered, the effect would be that the circumstances would be under consideration both in the Criminal Court and in Civil Court. The object of the applicant in making this application in revision is, it is hardly necessary to point out, to obtain, if possible, the conviction of the men who were acquitted in the Sessions trial and it is we think in the highest degree undesirable that there should be a determination of the matter in the Criminal Court when it is still sub judice in the Civil Court. The case is one of high valuation and will be liable to go up on appeal to the highest Tribunal. In these circumstances, we think it best, now that one criminal trial has already been concluded, that the dispute should, for the future, be conducted in the Civil Court, which is the competent Court to decide the matters which are really at issue between the parties.

We do not think it necessary to say anything more save this that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge made a most elaborate and apparently exhaustive charge to the Jury, and there is no ground for any suggestion that he did not put the matter fully before them. However that may be, for the reasons given we do not think that in this particular case we ought to interfere in revision and order a retrial. We accordingly dismiss this application.

Application against an order of the Munsif, Tarabganj, Gonda, dated the 28th February, 1931.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. P. Misra and H. Husain, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of an order dated the 28th of February 1931, of the Munsif of Tarabganj, District Gonda.

It is necessary to state a few facts which have led up to the present application. One Ram Jiawan instituted a suit for partition in 1926. He was granted permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit on condition of his paying the costs of that suit to the defendants before he instituted a fresh suit. Subsequently he made a gift of his share in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff instituted a second suit for partition in 1930. One of the pleas raised against him was that payment of the costs of the previous suit had been made a condition precedent to the maintainability of a fresh suit, and as the costs had not been paid the suit was not maintainable. This plea was accepted and the suit was dismissed on this preliminary ground. There was an appeal to the Subordinate Judge who, on the 13th of October, 1930, set aside the order of the trial Court and remanded the case to the Court below with directions to determine it on the merits provided the plaintiff paid the costs of the former suit within a fortnight of the receipt of the order by the trial Court. The order was received by the trial Court on the 8th of November, 1930, on which date the learned Munsif recorded an order which is as follows:—

"Seen. Received here on 8th November, 1930. Put up on 24th November, 1930."

As the period fixed by the trial Court expired on the 23rd of November and the costs were not deposited by that date, the learned Munsif dismissed the suit on the 24th of November. The plaintiff made an application on the 12th of December, 1930, accompanied with a tender to deposit the amount of costs payable by him but the learned Munsif rejected it the same day. Thereafter the plaintiff moved the learned Subordinate Judge under s. 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, asking him to add in his order dated the 13th of October, 1930, a provision to the effect that fifteen days are to be calculated from the time of receipt of notice by the plaintiff of the record having been received in the trial Court. The learned Subordinate Judge found it unnecessary to make any such addition in his order and dismissed the application. The plaintiff then made another application on the 28th February, 1931 to the learned Munsif asking for permission to deposit the amount of costs.

This application was also rejected the same day. This last order of the learned Munsif forms the subject matter of this application for revision.

It has been contended in support of this application that the learned Munsif ought to have served the plaintiff with notice of the receipt of the record by him and that he was in error in dismissing the suit without issuing any such notice. The learned Counsel for the applicant has not been able to refer to any provision of law or any rules of practice making it obligatory for the learned Munsif to issue such notice. The order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge on the 13th of October 1930 was pronounced in the presence of the plaintiff. He ought to have taken necessary steps to find out when the file was received by the Munsif. Both the Courts being situate at the same place, he has obviously been negligent in having made no tender and taken no steps to find out when the record was received by the trial Court, before the 12th December 1930. In any case it seems to me that there is no ground for interference under s. 115. Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Munsif has rejected the application dated the 28th of February 1931 on the ground that it was not maintainable by reason of the previous order refusing to accept the tender. No question of jurisdiction is involved in this matter. I am not prepared to say that the order of the learned Munsif is incorrect but even if it were that would be no ground for interference under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in the absence of any question of jurisdiction.

I accordingly reject the application with costs.

Decree—Construction—Reference to judgment

A Court cannot look at the judgment to interpret the decree, where the language of the decree is plain and unambiguous. It is only when the terms of a decree are ambiguous that it can be interpreted in the light of the judgment. Kasim Ali v. Manik Chand (1), referred to. [p. 253, col 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Malihabad, Lucknow, dated the 24th January 1931, reversing that of the Second Munsif, District Lucknow, dated the 17th May 1930.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Radha Krishna and Ramapat Ram, for the Respondents

Judgment.—This is a second appeal in connection with the execution of a decree of the Court of an Additional Munsif of the Lucknow District. The suit was for possession of a small piece of land, 1 biwansi and 10 kachwansis in extent which was said by the plaintiff to have been encroached upon by the defendants. The piece of land lies between the houses of the respective parties. The Munsif came to the conclusion that the defendants had only encroached on a triangular piece of land, the area of which was only 4 kachwansis. In giving his finding on the 4th issue framed by him "To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?", the Munsif used the following language:

"The plaintiff is entitled to get the wall of the house of the defendants demolished but only such portion of it as stands on the triangular piece of the base of 9 inches and 4 kachwansis in area. This is clearly indicated in the Amin-Commissioner's report. But this would entail unnecessary difficulties and therefore it would be better if the plaintiff only tries to get money compensation. The plaintiff alleges that 1 biwansi and 10 kachwansis of his land has been encroached upon. But amount of encroachment as found by the amin is 4 kachwansis. The plaintiff values his suit at Rs. 200. The value thus put to the actual encroachment comes to Rs. 13-3-4. I, therefore, give him a decree for that amount with proportionate costs as against the defendants."

At that point the Munsif wrote his name and the date (17th March 1930). Immediately underneath, however, he wrote as follows:

Order.

"Suit decreed with proportionate costs as against the defendants. The plaintiff can get an amount of Rs. 13-5-4 as the value put on the land encroached. The Commissioner's report is part of the decree O. XX r. 1."

According to the actual wording of the decree, however, it was ordered:

"That the suit be and is hereby decreed to the extent of 4 Kachwansis land encroached, with proportionate costs as against the defendants. The plaintiff can get an amount of Rs. 13-5-4 as the value put on the land encroached. The Commissioner's report and map is made part of the decree O. XX, r. 1."

There was no appeal from this decision and the plaintiff proceeded to apply for execution. The plaintiff asked for the demolition of that part of the defendants' premises which stands on that part of the land found to have been encroached upon by them. The defendants then objected that the plaintiff had not been given a decree for demolition, but only for compensation. They relied upon the words used in the Munsif's judgment

"I, therefore, give him a decree for that amount with proportionate costs as against the defendants."

The learned Munsif, however, interpreted his own meaning to have been that monetary compensation was only awarded to the plaintiff as an alternative relief, and that he had been decreed, in the alternative, possession of the piece of land in dispute to the extent set forth in the judgment. The objection of the defendants was consequently rejected, and the plaintiff was found entitled to get the defendants' structures demolished.

Against that decision the defendants went in appeal. The Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal, and held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any demolition of the defendants' premises but only to money compensation amounting to Rs. 13-5-4. That is the decision which is the subject of this second appeal.

It is unfortunate that the Munsif did not express himself clearly in his judgment, portions of which certainly lend colour to the view that was taken by the Subordinate Judge. The decree, however, undoubtedly was to the effect that the plaintiff's suit was decreed to the extent of 4 kachwansis of land encroached upon, though it contains a provision also that the plaintiff can get an amount of Rs. 13-5-4 as the value put on the land encroached. The words in the decree, "to the extent of 4 kachwansis land encroached," are written above the line,—when precisely this was done does not appear, but they are undoubtedly there, and must be regarded as an integral part of the decree.

It has been contended for the defendants that the decree itself is not free from ambiguity, but I do not think that contention has any force. The decree can, in my opinion, only be regarded as awarding the plaintiff 4 kachwansis of the land in suit, or, if he preferred to accept monetary compensation, a sum of Rs. 13-5-4. According to a ruling reported in Kasim Ali v. Manik Chand (1) a Court cannot look at its judgment to interpret its decree, where the language of the decree is plain and unambiguous. It is only when the terms of a decree are ambiguous that it can be interpreted in the light of the judgment.

(1) 5 O. C. 35.

In the present case, as I have said, I do not regard the decree as being ambiguous, and, in any case, the Munsif, who decided the original suit, considered his judgment and said that the decree as drawn up properly embodied his intentions.

It seems to me to be a somewhat hard case for the defendants. I am given to understand that the defendants, thinking that only monetary compensation had been awarded to the plaintiff, did not appeal from the original decision of the Munsif, and that if they have to vacate even the small area of 4 kachwansis they will be put to a lot of expense and inconvenience. It seems to me, however, that the plaintiff is entitled under the decree to require, if he so chooses, that the defendants should vacate that area, and I think the appeal must be allowed. I accordingly allow it, and setting aside the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge restore that of the Munsif. The defendants must pay the plaintiff's costs in respect of the objection in all the three Courts.

Appeal against an order of the Munsif, Dalmau at Rae Bareli, dated the 14th March 1931.

Mr. P. N. Chaudhri for the Applicant.

Mr. Siraj Husain, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The Secretary of Ohhoti Bazar Bank, Rae Bareli, attached some moveable property (grain, cattle, etc) in execution of his decree against Bafati Gaddi of Rae Bareli. Baqridi brother of Bafati filed an objection which was disallowed by the execution Court in August 1930. His brother Baqridi and his sister Musammât Lallia and Musammât Dulia then filed a declaratory suit which was disposed of on the 8th of January 1931. The learned Munsif passed a decree in the following terms:—

"I hereby order that the property to the extent of two-thirds shall not be sold. But as the nature of the property is such that it is indivisible, then all of it shall be sold and out of the sale proceeds, the plaintiffs shall get two-thirds of the amount realised and one-third shall be taken by defendant No. 1 Secretary after deducting the expenses of the sale. The plaintiffs shall get half of the costs incurred by them in the prosecution of the suit from defendant No. 1".

This decree has admittedly become final. Baqridi and his sisters named above (plaintiffs in the declaratory suit) filed an application on the 4th February 1931, asking the Court to amend the decree under ss. 151, 152 and 153 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Munsif then passed the following order on their application on the 14th of March 1931:—

"Read application. It is opposed by S. Mohammad Ismail. There is no clerical mistake or ambiguity in the judgment and therefore no alteration is necessary. But I have to add this much to my previous order that only the interest of Bafati to the extent of one-third shall be sold and the property shall not be delivered to the purchaser but shall be entrusted to a supurddar and the purchaser, if any, shall have to get it partitioned before he can take delivery. A copy of this order shall be placed before the learned Munsif, Rae Bareilly, at the time of the sale".

The Secretary of the Ohhoti Bazar Bank has applied to this Court in revision under s. 115 Code of Civil Procedure.

I think this revision should be allowed. Under O. XX, r. 3, Code of Civil Procedure,

"The judgment shall be dated and signed by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it and, when once signed, shall not afterwards be altered or added to, save as provided by s. 152 or on review."

The learned Munsif has "altered and added to" his judgment by making the order in question. He was clearly wrong in doing so. There was no clerical or arithmetical mistake in the judgment or decree. There was no error arising from any accidental slip or omission. Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure was never meant to enable the Court to contravene a distinct provision of law—see Bhagwan Singh v. Sheo Nath Singh (1). The application of Baqridi and others (plaintiffs in the declaratory suit) ought to have been rejected.

Hence I allow this application for revision, set aside the order of the learned Munsif dated the 14th March 1931 and dismiss the plaintiffs' application dated the 4th February 1931 with costs.

Therefore, where a minor is represented in mutation proceedings by his mother who bona fide enters into a compromise with the other party without the leave of the Court as required by O. XXXII, r. 7 of the Code the compromise is not bad merely for want of such leave. [p. 256, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 5th February 1931, upholding that of the Munsif, Musafirkhana at Sultanpur, dated the 8th September 1930.

Mr. G. Imam, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur, dated the 5th February 1931, affirming the decree of the Munsif, Musafirkhana, Sultanpur, dated the 8th September 1930 dismissing the plaintiff's suit for possession of a share in village Gaura, Pargana Baraunsa, District Sultanpur.

The facts of the case are not in dispute. One Saheb Bakhsh Singh was the owner of shares in two villages Baraulia and Gaura. He had no son by a lawful wife, but he had several sons, of whom the first born appears to have been Sitla Prasad Singh, the present plaintiff-appellant, by his kept mistress. On the 31st of May 1918, Saheb Bakhsh Singh executed a deed of gift in respect of his entire property in favour of the plaintiff-appellant who was then a minor. No mutation of names was, however, effected in respect of the deed of gift and subsequent to the deed Saheb Bakhsh Singh mortgaged on two occasions small portions of the property in question in order to pay off his debts. After the death of Saheb Bakhsh Singh, five years after the execution of the deed of gift, and while the plaintiff-appellant was still a minor, his mother acting as next friend of her minor sons applied for mutation of names in their favour over the whole of Saheb Bakhsh Singh's property. The application was opposed by the defendants-respondents who alleged themselves to be the reversioners of Saheb Bakhsh Singh. Thereupon the plaintiff-appellant's mother applied for amendment of the mutation application and for mutation to be made in favour of Sitla Prasad Singh alone on the basis of the deed of gift. The defendants-respondents contested the amended application, and in the course of the proceedings, the plaintiff-appellant's mother and the defendants-respondents entered into a compromise under the terms of which the plaintiff-appellant was to get the Baraulia property, which in area is about three-fourths of the property of Saheb Bakhsh Singh, and the defendants-respondents were to get the Gaura property. The terms of this compromise were communicated to the mutation Court and mutation was effected accordingly by the order of the Court. The suit out of which the present appeal arises was instituted by Sitla Prasad Singh some three years after he attained majority to recover possession of the Gaura property on the ground that he is not bound by the compromise made by his mother in the mutation proceedings during his minority.

Both the Courts below came to the conclusion that the compromise arrived at in the mutation proceedings was in the nature of a family settlement and was not open to question by the plaintiff on attaining majority. The lower Appellate Court further found as a fact that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor as he obtained the larger part of the property without incurring the heavy expenses of litigation with uncertain result in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case as set out above, which might have put difficulties in the way of the plaintiff establishing his title.

Before us the case for appellant has been argued on a somewhat different basis, namely, that the compromise in the mutation proceedings having been entered into by the mother of the minor without the leave of the Court contrary to the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not binding on the plaintiff-appellant. It may be observed that this is a new point that has been raised for the first time in this Court in second appeal. We have, however, considered the point on the merits, and we find ourselves unable to accept contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant. If the compromise had been entered in a suit under the Civil Procedure Code there would have been no doubt as to the soundness of the contention that the compromise entered into by the next friend of the minor without the leave of the Court was voidable—Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row (1). Even the fact that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor would not have altered the legal position Bhiwa v. Devchand Bechar (2). It has, however, been contended by the learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents that the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 7 do not apply to mutation proceedings in a Revenue Court. We have given our careful consideration to this question, and we are not prepared to hold that the contention of the learned Counsel for the respondents is incorrect. In section 135 of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, it is clearly laid down that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, apply, to all suits and other proceedings under the Act. No such provision, however, finds a place in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1901; but where the procedure under that Act is to be governed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is expressly stated as, for example, in s. 204 of the Act. Under s. 234 of the Land Revenue Act the Local Government is empowered to make rules in respect of matters dealt with under the various clauses of the Act and in s. 10 of Circular No. 6 of the Board of Revenue, Department II (dealing with the rules affecting the procedure of the Revenue Courts) it is laid down that previous to appointing a guardian ad litem under the provisions of O. XXXII, Act V of 1908, the Court shall ascertain whether the person whom it is proposed to appoint is willing to act. The provisions of O. XXXII of the Code of Civil Procedure have not been expressly made applicable to proceedings under the Land Revenue Act either by that Act or by the Code of Civil Procedure itself, and the Circular as it stands does not appear to go further than to lay down that in the case of a minor litigant a guardian shall be appointed. We have been unable to discover any sufficient jurisdiction for holding that the whole of O. XXXII, does in fact govern procedure under the Land Revenue Act. In Shakur-un-nisa Bibi v. Abdul Majid Khan (3), the Board of Revenue took the view that the Code of Civil Procedure does not of its own force govern the procedure in proceedings under the Land Revenue Act. In a case which is on all fours with the present case it was held by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, Harpal Singh v. Sukhrani (4), that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply en bloc to proceedings in Courts constituted under the Land Revenue Act, and that where a minor was represented in mutation proceedings by his elder brother who bona fide entered into a compromise with the other party without the leave of the Court as required by O. XXXII, r. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the compromise was not bad merely for want of such leave. We are not called upon to find a reason for the omission to apply the provisions of O. XXXII, of the Code of Civil Procedure to the proceedings under the Land Revenue Act, but it may be observed that the remedy allowed by the general law is always open to a party dissatisfied with a compromise entered into during his minority in proceedings before a Revenue Court, namely, to have it set aside, if he can show that it was not beneficial to him. In the present case, however, as we have already observed it has been found as a fact that the compromise in question was for the benefit of the minor.

We accordingly see no reason to interfere with the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with Costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 142, 144, application of—Suit for possession by partition by transferee from daughter of her share in her father's estate—Dispossession not alleged—Limitation.

Article 142, Limitation Act, is restricted to suits which are in terms and substance based on plaintiff's prior possession which he has lost by dispossession or discontinuance of possession. A suit for possession by partition by a transferee from a daughter entitled to her share in her father's property where it is not alleged that she was ever dispossessed is not within the ambit of Art. 142 but is governed by Art. 144, Limitation Act.

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Kisch, Judge of the Chief Court, Oudh, Lucknow, dated the 19th May, 1931.

Messrs. Bishambhar Nath and Rauf Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ghulam Hasan and Iftikhar Husain, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These are appeals (Nos. 4 and 5 of 1931) under s. 12(2) of the Oudh Courts Act (No. 4 of 1925).

The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of our learned brother Mr. Justice Kisch, dated the 19th May, 1931, and they need not be repeated in this judgment.

The dispute in this case relates to certain groves in respect of which the plaintiff's claim has been decreed in second appeals Nos. 105 and 107 of 1931. The only point for determination in the appeals before us is whether the suit is governed by Art. 144 or by Art. 142 of the Indian Limitation Act.

It has been held in second appeals that the suit is governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 142 of the Indian Limitation Act. This finding has been challenged in the appeals before us. We have examined the pleadings in this case. We are of opinion that our learned brother, Mr. Justice Kisch, was perfectly right in holding that the suit is governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 142 of the Limitation Act. Article 142 is restricted to suits which are in terms and substance based on plaintiff's prior possession which he has lost by dispossession or discontinuance of possession. The present suit is a suit for possession by partition. The basis of the present suit is the title of Akhtar Jahan to her share in the property left by her deceased father Ahmad Hasan. The plaintiff is the vendee from Akhtar Jahan. He does not allege that Akhtar Jahan had been dispossessed from the property in suit at any time. It has been found that Akhtar Jahan, as the rightful heir and successor of her father Ahmad Hasan, is entitled to the property to the extent of the share claimed. It has also been found that Abdulghani is a mere dummy without any shadow of claim of his own either by title or possession. This being the case the suit was properly held to be governed by Art. 144 of the Indian Limitation Act. In our opinion the case was rightly and properly decided in second appeal. We can find no ground for interference and dismiss both the appeals with costs.

Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act (VIII of 1925), s. 16 (8), (3)—Nature of institution—Burden of proof—Udasi institution—Worship of samadh—Inference from circumstances—Udasis, whether 'Sikhs'.

An institution was founded in the time of Moguls by one Guria, and ever since its foundation all the mahants were Udasis, succession going from guru to chela, subject to confirmation by Udasi Bhek. The principal object of worship was the samadh of Guria, which existed on the date of dispute:

Held (1) that the onus of proving that Guria was a Sikh and that the institution had been established for use by Sikhs for the purpose of public worship and that it had been used for such worship by Sikhs, and fell within s. 16 (2) (3), Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act, was on those claiming it to be a Sikh Gurdwara; [p. 258, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2), that the institution must be regarded as having been founded by Udasis and must be treated as an Udasi Gurdwara; and.

(3) the mere fact that Adi Grantha was also kept in the institution and on occasions opened with due ceremony and passages from it read was not sufficient proof of the purely Sikh nature of the worship carried on at the Gurdwara or Dera. [p. 258, col. 1.]

The Udasis are not Sikhs within the meaning of the term 'Sikh' as used in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act. Ram Prasad v. Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee, Amritsar (1), followed. [p. 258, col. 2.]

First Appeal against a decree of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, Lahore, dated the 18th June, 1928.

Messrs. Sheo Narain and Bhagat Singh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Mehr Chand and Badri Nath, for the Respondents.

Broadway, J.—On 20th April, 1926, the Local Government published a petition duly made to it on 20th February, 1926, under s. 7, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925, relating to a Gurdwara at Machhike in the District of Sheikhpura.

On 21st July, 1926, a petition was duly made under s. 8 of the said Act by Mahant Gulab Das and other persons.

On 23rd July, 1926, Mahant Gulab Das filed a separate petition under s. 10 of the said Act claiming that the property attached to the institution in question was his personal property.

These petitions were sent to the Gurdwara Tribunal for disposal and the petition under s. 8 was disposed of by a majority of the members of the Tribunal in favour of the petitioners. This decision has given rise to this appeal which has been filed by the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee, etc., and in support of it we have heard Mr. Sheo Narain, while Diwan Mehr Chand has supported the case of the respondents.

It is common ground that this institution was founded a very long time ago by one Guria. The appellants asserted that Guria was a Sikh, whereas the respondents Gulab Das, etc., claimed that he was an Udasi Sadh and not a Sikh. The majority of the members of the Tribunal held that the onus of proving that Guria was a Sikh and that this institution had been established for use by Sikhs for the purpose of public worship and that it had been used for such worship by Sikhs, was on the appellants who had failed to discharge it.

Mr. Sheo Narain did not think it necessary to take us through the statements of all the witnesses led by his clients. He contented himself with drawing our attention to the statements of six witnesses who were regarded by him as the most reliable as well as most knowledgeable (?). These witnesses are Bhagwan Singh (R. W. No. 2), Ralla Ram (R. W. No. 5), Kesar Singh (R. W. No. 9), Sawan Singh (R. W. No. 12), Kala Singh (R. W. No. 18) and Fauja Singh (R. W. No. 24).

I have very carefully studied the statements of these witnesses and have come to the conclusion that they do not prove the appellants' case. I have also perused the other evidence on the record and find that they do not carry the case any further for the appellants. It appears that this institution is the only one of its kind in village Machhike. The inhabitants of this village, as well as of the surrounding villages, are mainly Sikhs. It has been amply established (and indeed Mr. Sheo Narain did not challenge the fact), that since its foundation the mahants have all been Udasis and that succession has gone from Guru to chela. The buildings fell into disrepair at one time and one Kharak Singh, contractor, financed the reconstruction of the said buildings and it appears either made himself or was made mahant by the villagers. This led to a case which was instituted on 18th July, 1925, by Bawa Gopal Das who described himself as an Udasi Sadh and claimed to be the duly appointed mahant of the Machhike Gurdwara which is also known as Bawa Guria's dera. He prayed for the removal of Kharak Singh, alleging that Kharak Singh had been improperly made a mahant. His claim was decreed and Gopal Das apparently managed the affairs of this institution since that time up to his death when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Gulab Das. When the Akali movement began Gulab Das was forcibly turned out of this institution and it seems that the Akalis or their representatives have been in actual possession of the institution since.

It seems to me that there can be no doubt that the appellants have failed to prove that this institution was one falling within the purview of s. 16 (2) (iii), Sikh Gurdwaras Act. In 1919, the revenue records of this village were destroyed by fire during the disturbances which took place in Gujranwala. There is thus no documentary evidence to show how this institution came into existence. It is significant that some fourteen zamin-dars who definitely claimed to be Sikhs, appeared in the witness-box and stated that this institution was not a Sikh Gurdwara. The witnesses relied upon by Mr. Sheo Narain, to whom I have already referred, are clearly interested in the Akali movement.

As has been held by the majority of the members of the Tribunal, one of the principal objects of worship in this institution is the Smadh of Bawa Guria. It is true that the Adi Granth is also kept in this institution and on occasions opened with due ceremony and passages from it read. This circumstance by itself cannot, in my opinion, be held as proof of the purely Sikh nature of the worship carried on at this Gurdwara or dera. Some of the appellants' witnesses have themselves admitted that on Diwali days women used lime and whitewash the Smadh of Bawa Guria. Whether or not there were other small Smadhs or Marhis is open to doubt. Mr. Mehr Chand contended that, while the Akalis were in possession, they demolished these Smadhs and indeed endeavoured to obliterate the traces of Bawa Guria's Smadh as well. In the opening stage of the case the witnesses for the appellants stated that they had seen no Smadhs in the building at all. Later on, after the buildings had been inspected by the Tribunal and the existence of Bawa Guria's Smadh had been clearly demonstrated, the other witnesses for the appellants admitted the existence of this particular Smadh but denied that there had been any other Smadhs or marhis on the premises.

As I have already said the evidence on the record shows that ever since the foundation of this institution which was said to have taken place in the time of the Moghuls, all the mahants have been Udasis. Succession has been from guru to chela with confirmation by the Udasi Bhok. It has, I think, been established that the Smadh of Bawa Guria still exists and is the principal object of worship. In these circumstances, I consider that the conclusion arrived at by the majority of the members of the Tribunal is correct and that this institution must be regarded as having been founded by Udasis and must be treated as an Udasi Gurdwara.

There remains the question as to whether Udasis are Sikhs within the meaning of the term "Sikh" as used in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act. This question has been discussed at length in Ram Prasad v. Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee, Amritsar (1) and has been decided by us against the present appellants. In these circumstances the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 75 (1), (3)—Order refusing to restore appeal dismissed for default, whether appealable—Power to grant leave after expiry of limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, r. 17—Substituted service—Duty to allow sufficient time to appear.

An appeal lies under the proviso to s. 75 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, from an order of the District Court refusing to restore an appeal dismissed for default. At any rate, even if such an order be regarded as one passed otherwise than on appeal the appellant can appeal with the leave of the High Court or of the District Court, under s. 75 (3). [p. 259, col. 1.]

Leave to appeal may be granted even after the expiry of limitation and even if there is no prayer for it in the memorandum of appeal. [p. 259, col. 2.]

Even in the case of substituted service duly effected under O. V, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, sufficient time must be allowed from the date of the affixation of the process on the door of the defendant's house and the date of the hearing of the case. One day is obviously inadequate in the absence of special circumstances. [p. 260, col 2.]

Miscellaneous First Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 1st August, 1930, dismissing the application for restoration of the appeal from an order of the Insolvency Judge, dated the 19th July, 1928, dismissed by him in default on the 22nd January, 1930.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kishan Dayal and Bhagwat Dayal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are given in the order of remand passed by a learned Judge of this Court dated the 8th November, 1929. It is not necessary to recapitulate them here.

On remand the learned District Judge dismissed the appeal in default. The appellant then applied for restoration under O. XLI, r. 19, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judge took the evidence and found that the applicant had failed to establish that he was not in Delhi at the time when the process was first endeavoured to be served on him, and that the report of the process server established that the appellant was evading service. Substituted service was, therefore, correctly ordered and was sufficient, and therefore, rejected the application to rehear the appeal. The appellant has now come in appeal from the order refusing to restore.

The first objection taken is that no appeal lies. The learned Counsel for the respondent relies upon the terms of s. 75 (1) of the Insolvency Act. His contention is that, though the case originally fell within the purview of s. 4 of the Insolvency Act and on appeal lay to the District Judge, and, as a point of law, to the High Court, yet the appeal was terminated by the order dismissing the appeal in default. The order refusing to restore does not come within the meaning of the proviso to s. 75 (1) and, therefore, as the Insolvency Act is a special Act no appeal lies. The learned Counsel for the appellant contends, firstly, that the appeal lies under the proviso to s. 75 (1) for the order refusing to restore is also one passed on appeal by the District Court. He next contends that, in any case, if this is an order passed otherwise than in appeal the appellant can appeal to the High Court by leave of the District Court or of the High Court under the provisions of s. 75 (3).

The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that s. 75 (3) only applies to orders passed in original jurisdiction and not to this kind of order. In my opinion, though the point is not free from difficulty, the case is covered by the proviso to s. 75 (1) and, in any event, if it is held to be governed by the provisions of s. 75 (3) then, as the point is not free from difficulty and no direct ruling of any High Court has been cited on the point, I would in the circumstances, give leave to the appellant to appeal.

The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that leave to appeal cannot be granted unless it is prayed for in the memorandum of appeal nor after the expiry of limitation. But with this contention—though it again raises a point of some difficulty—I am not prepared to agree as at present advised.

Coming now to the merits of the case it appears that the process server went on the 14th of January to the place where the appellant is alleged to reside. He reported that, on knocking at the door, a man used to come out, go back into the rooms, return and state that the appellant was not to be found. He, therefore, inferred that the appellant was evading service deliberately and craved permission to take action under the terms of O. V, r. 17. On the 20th the Court ordered him to take action under the terms of O. V, r. 17, and affix the summons to the door of the appellant's alleged residence. This was done on the 21st and on the 22nd the appeal was heard and dismissed in default.

Counsel for the appellant contends, firstly that O. V, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, could not be invoked as the appellant had filed the appeal through Counsel and, therefore, there was a person available on whom service could be effected.

The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that the engagement of Counsel had terminated with the original hearing of the appeal, but, under the terms of O. III, r. 4 (2), the appointment was not terminated until leave of the Court had been obtained on a writing signed by the client or Pleader or until all proceedings in the suit were ended. Order III, r. 4 (3) shows that the mere hearing of the appeal does not conclude the authority of the Pleader. Secondly, it is contended that if service was duly effected under O. V, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, yet no sufficient time was allowed to elapse from the date of the affixation of the process on the door of the appellant and the date of the hearing of the appeal.

In my opinion it is unnecessary to decide the first point as the appellant must succeed on the second. The law does not provide that on proof that a person is evading service of summons he should be treated as served. On the contrary it provides another way of service of summons. This clearly implies that sufficient time must elapse between the service ordered and the time of the hearing of the appeal in order to furnish the person room for repentance. Therefore, it follows that an adequate time must be allowed from the date of the service and the hearing of the appeal. The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that it was never argued before the learned District Judge, that one day was not sufficient in the circumstances of this case. This is so no doubt, but it seems to me that one day must obviously be held to be inadequate until special circumstances are shown that it was adequate.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and restore the appeal and direct the learned District Judge to dispose of it according to law. In the circumstances I make no order as to the costs of this appeal which will be borne by the parties.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 251—Partnership—Adjustment of firm debt towards private debt of partner, whether binding on firm—Absence of prejudice—Court holding adjustment illegal—Interference in second appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100.

Where a partner in the plaintiff-firm owes a certain sum to the defendant-firm and gets his liability cancelled by cancelling the debt due by the defendant-firm to his firm, such adjustment does not necessarily amount to a fraud and in the absence of proof of fraud or prejudice it is binding on the plaintiff-firm. Sheikh Ibrahim v. Rama Iyer (2), Mannava Anapurnamma v. U. Akayya (3), Palaniappa Chettiar v. Veerappa Chettiar (4), Annamalai Chetty v. Annamal Chetty (5), Hodi v. Nidha (6) and Veerasawmi Naicker v. Ibrahimsa Romther (7), relied on. Baikunta Nath v. Hara Lal (1), explained. [p. 261, col. 2.]

In such a case the Court errs in law if it holds that such a mere act of adjustment, in the absence of proof of fraud or prejudice to the plaintiff-firm, is prejudicial to the plaintiff-firm and it is open to the High Court to interfere in second appeal, [ibid.]

Second Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Shahpur, dated the 1st May, 1926.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Appellants.

Mr Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-firm consisting of three partners, Ram Das, Uttam Chand and Bashi Ram, sued the defendant-firm for Rs. 2,000 balance due on certain transactions between them. The trial Court decreed the sum of Rs. 68-10-9 with proportionate costs in favour of the plaintiff-firm and dismissed the rest of the claim with costs to the defendant-firm. There was an appeal by the plaintiff firm to the District Judge who granted a decree for Rs. 1,559-7-3 with proportionate costs of both Courts. Against this decision the defendant-firm has appealed.

The lower Appellate Court allowed in addition to what was allowed by the trial Court an item of Rs. 1,278-12-6 plus interest on that item, and the appeal is confined to the dispute about this item and its interest. Bashi Ram was an active partner and, in fact, manager of the plaintiff-firm. He owed Rs. 1,278-12-6 to the defendant firm while the defendant-firm owed the plaintiff-firm that amount. At the request of Bashi Ram his liability to the defendant-firm was cancelled by his cancelling the liability of the defendant-firm to the plaintiff-firm. This was held to be a good transaction by the trial Court. It further found that Bashi Ram had been giving other discharges like that disputed in the present case. It also found that there was no evidence that this act was done mala fide or to the prejudice of the plaintiff-firm or in fraud thereof. On appeal the learned District Judge also held that Bashi Ram had been setting off items in this way in other cases but considered that that did not affect the merits of the present case. He purported to follow 9 Ind. Cas. 116 [Baikunta Nath v. Hara Lal (1)], and, though there was no evidence of prejudice to the plaintiff-firm, he held that the fact that the other co-partners had been prejudiced by the amount due to the firm having been credited to the private account of one of the partners was obvious enough and required no proof. He has thus assumed that such an act would be always prejudicial to the partnership.

There are numerous authorities which show that payment to a partner is a valid payment to a firm, while a release by a partner is also valid; the other partners are bound by such acts unless there has been fraud or collusion. In Sheikh Ibrahim v. Rama Iyer (2), it was held that payment to one of several joint creditors would not operate as a payment to all the creditors if the payment was fraudulently made to one and not for the benefit of all. In this ruling the general principle was assumed that such payments are valid but it was held that they would not be valid if there was fraud or if the payment was obviously for the benefit of one. In Mannava Anapurnamma v. U. Akayya (3), the general principle is enunciated that one of several payees of a negotiable instrument can give a valid discharge of the entire debt without the concurrence of the other payees. In Palaniappa Chettiar v. Veerappa Chettiar (4), it was held that a partner can release a partnership claim and that the surviving partners have a right to do so after the death of a partner. It was further held that, if such a release by a partner is fraudulent, the other partners can avoid it and seek to recover their share of the released debt, but that the legal representatives of the deceased partner cannot do so, as such a right is personal to the partners. It is clear from these authorities that a partner has authority to release debts and to give receipts for the debts of a partnership. In 52 Ind. Cas. 456 [Annamalai Chetty v. Annamalai Chetty (5)], it was held that a partner was competent to give a valid discharge of a debt due to the partnership even after its dissolution. In 54 Ind. Cas. 272 [Hodi v. Nidha (6)] it was held that where payment had been made to one partner the firm could not sue for the debt.

In 1 Ind. Cas. 200 [Veeraswami Naicker v. Ibrahimsa Rowther (7)], it was held that the general rule was that a partner could give a valid discharge of a debt due to the partnership, but that rule did not apply if the discharge so given was in fraud of the aggrieved partner or was the result of collusion between the partner giving the discharge and the debtor.

Reliance however was placed, by the other side, on 9 Ind. Cas. 116 [Baikunta Nath v. Hara Lal (1)]. It was held there that one partner could not discharge a separate debt of his own by setting it off against a debt due to his firm, to the prejudice of his co-partners. If this authority be accepted it still does not help the respondent's firm. It must be proved that the act of setting-off was fraudulent, or collusive, or done to the prejudice of the plaintiff-firm. Such an adjustment may be in many cases a matter of convenience. In itself it does not necessarily amount to a fraud and does not necessarily prejudice the plaintiff-firm. There is no evidence that there was any fraud or that there has been any prejudice to the plaintiff-firm by the fact that Bashi Ram, one of its members, set off his debt against the sum in question. Further, seeing that a partner can give a valid discharge of a debt due to a partnership and can even release it, provided there is no fraud, there seems to be nothing against such an adjustment as has taken place in the present case provided again that there has been no fraud or prejudice to the plaintiff-firm. It would have been easy for Bashi Ram to have collected the debt due to the plaintiff-firm from the defendant-firm and then to have paid the money back to it in adjustment of his own debt. On the authorities such a transaction would be valid, always assuming the absence of fraud and prejudice to the partnership. It seems unnecessary to demand the double transaction and to hold that the single transaction is illegal.

Clearly it is open for us on second appeal to interfere as it is obvious from the judgment of the District Judge that there was no proof of any fraud or prejudice to the plaintiff-firm. He erred in law in holding that the mere fact of the adjustment in question having taken place was prejudicial to the plaintiff-firm.

For the reasons given we accept the appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and restore the order of the trial Judge, decreeing a sum of Rs. 68-10-9 with proportionate costs on that sum and dismissing the rest of the claim with costs to the defendant-firm. The appellant-firm will also have its costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

The respondent, a Hindu, married the petitioner, a Christian lady, by license at Manchester. After living with the respondent for some time in India the petitioner returned to England and the respondent married a Hindu lady in India by a Hindu form of marriage and had a son by her. The petitioner sued for dissolution of marriage:

Petition under s. 10, Indian Divorce Act, (XVII of 1869), for dissolution of marriage.

Mr. M. C. Mahajan, for Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kahan Singh, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a petition by the wife Mrs. Gladys Seinapatti for dissolution of her marriage. The petitioner then Gladys Wainwright married the husband Seinapatti son of Kahan Singh by license at the Church of St. Luke's Cheetham, Manchester, on the 13th of May, 1922. They cohabited in Manchester and finally in Amritsar until the 6th of January, 1924, when Mrs. Seinapatti returned to England, in consequence, as she alleges, of her husband's cruelty and harshness. Since that time the parties have not lived together. She claims divorce on the ground that in 1925, her husband Sainapatti went through a form of a marriage with the co-respondent Musammât Rani and was thereby guilty of bigamy and further that the respondent and the co-respondent had since that date of the second marriage lived and cohabited together, as husband and wife and committed adultery with each other in consequence whereof a male child had been born in Amritsar. She denied any collusion or connivance.

The facts are admitted by Seinapatti, who is now residing at Behrampur. He, however, urged that he had been agreeable to the petitioner going to England and had given her about Rs. 3,000 for the purpose and had gone to Karachi to see her off. Subsequently he went to Manchester to bring her back to India and had been supplying her with funds there. She, however, refused even to see him or to return to him at Manchester. He accordingly returned to India and married Musammât Rani early in 1925, by a Hindu form of marriage and has since been living with her as husband, first at Amritsar and then at Behrampur. He has had by her a son, now aged four years.

This Court clearly has jurisdiction, as the wife takes the domicile of her husband and the last place where the parties resided together was Amritsar.

The question is whether there is good ground for granting a decree. As will be seen from the petition, the petitioner based her claim on the ground that the respondent had committed bigamy with adultery with the co-respondent Musammât Rani. It was also urged that if the respondent's marriage with Musammât Rani was not held to be bigamous, the petitioner could claim divorce under s. 10 of Act (IV of 1869), on the next ground, viz., marriage with another woman with adultery. Now, there is no doubt that the petitioner's marriage with the respondent having been celebrated in England was a valid Christian marriage, despite the Indian domicile of the husband. The validity of the marriage, is clear, in view of the authorities that have been cited, viz., Chetty v. Chetty (1) and R v. Hammersmith Registrar of Marriages Mir Anwar-ud-Din, Ex parte (2). In Brinckley v. Attorney General (3), a case in which the marriage of a British subject with an Irish domicile of origin, contracted with a Japanese woman in Japan, was recognised as valid, the question of what constituted a "Christian marriage or marriage in Christendom" was discussed, and it was held that the idea which has to be expressed was this—that the only marriage recognised in Christian countries or in Christendom is the marriage of the exclusive kind. As was remarked in Thapita Peter v. Thapita Lakshmi (4), “the idea of the union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of others is present in it.”

Thus it is clear that in England the law would hold that the respondent by going through a Hindu form of marriage with the co-respondent had committed bigamy and having cohabited with her and having had issue had committed adultery. The Indian Divorce Act of 1869, does not define either bigamy or adultery. “Bigamy with adultery” is defined in s. 3 (7) as meaning “adultery with the same woman with whom the bigamy was committed” According to Rayden on Divorce, page 86, Second Edition, “Bigamy was defined as the marriage of any person during the life of the former husband or wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place within his Majesty's Dominions or elsewhere.”

This presupposes that the first marriage must be subsisting. The question, however, remains whether in India the second marriage contracted by the respondent can be held to be bigamous. No authority has been cited before me on this point. In discussing the expression “marriage with another woman”, Rattigan in his Law of Divorce in India at page 24 writes as follows:—

“Under the Indian Penal Code (s 494) a person who contracts a marriage during the life of a former husband or wife ‘does not commit the offence of bigamy’ if such husband or wife, at the time of the subsequent marriage shall have been continually absent from such person for the space of seven years, and shall not have been heard of by such person as being alive within that time, provided that the person contracting such subsequent marriage shall, before such marriage takes place, inform the person with whom such marriage is contracted of the real state of the facts so far as the same are within his or her knowledge”.

Under such circumstances a man who, during the life of his wife, marries another woman does not commit bigamy. But if, after such second marriage, he cohabits with such woman, or (apparently) commits adultery with any other woman, the wife is entitled, under s. 10 of the Act, to apply for a dissolution of marriage just as she would have been entitled to apply had the husband been guilty of ‘bigamy with adultery’.

From this apparently it would follow that to constitute bigamy the second marriage must be such as would render the person contracting it liable for punishment (4) 17 M. 235 at p. 241.

under the Indian Penal Code. In the present case the respondent being a Hindu would not in this country be precluded from marrying a second wife during the life-time of the first, and I am, therefore, of opinion that it is doubtful whether his marriage with Musammatt Rani could be held to bring him within the scope of s. 494, Indian Penal Code, as the marriage would not be void by reason of its taking place during the life of his first wife. I am, therefore, of opinion that the petitioner cannot claim divorce on the ground that the respondent has committed bigamy with adultery.

As regards the divorce on the ground of the respondent's marriage with another woman with adultery, it appears to me that the petitioner has a valid ground for claiming dissolution of marriage. Though as already noted, “bigamy with adultery” is specifically defined as meaning adultery with the same woman with whom the bigamy was committed, “marriage with another woman with adultery” is not defined. The definition contained in s. 3 (8) merely deals with “marriage with another woman” which is defined as meaning, “marriage of any person being married to any other person during the life of the former wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place within the Dominions of his Majesty or elsewhere”.

Rattigan in his commentary in the passage already cited remarks that if a man after such second marriage cohabits with such woman, the wife is entitled to apply for dissolution of marriage just as she would have been entitled to apply if the husband would have been guilty of “bigamy with adultery”. No authority is cited by him but it seems reasonable to suppose that that was the meaning and intention of the Legislature when differentiating between “bigamy with adultery” and “marriage with another woman with adultery”.

In the present case there appears to me not the least ground for thinking that there is either collusion or connivance on the part of either the petitioner or the respondent. I, therefore, hold that the petitioner has established that she is entitled to a decree for dissolution of her marriage with the respondent on the ground of his marriage with the co-respondent with adultery. I accordingly grant her a decree nisi.

As regards the question of costs, it is urged that in the circumstances of the case the respondent should not be ordered to pay the costs. But as Rattigan pointed out at page 369,

"Where the wife is the petitioner and is successful in her suit, her husband will, as a matter of course, be ordered to pay her costs."

I, therefore, direct that the respondent pay the petitioner's costs.

A. Order accordingly.

A co-owner who redeems a mortgage becomes a charge-holder and not a mortgagee and a suit by the other co-owners against him for possession is governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 148 of the Limitation Act. The possession of the redeeming co-owner does not become adverse to the other co-owners from the date of redemption but becomes adverse only when he does any unequivocal overt act showing his intention to hold adversely to the other co-owners. [p. 265, col. 2.]

Second Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 18th March, 1930.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

Broadway, J.—On the 26th April, 1923, one Munshi Ram obtained a decree against Vaishno Das for Rs. 2,000. In execution of this decree he got attached, and brought to sale, one-fifth of three houses Nos. 826, 806 and 507 and a site bearing number 837. Ganda Ram and Hira Lal raised objections to the sale of these properties on the ground that the properties were ancestral and not liable to be sold. Their objections having been dismissed, on the 2nd November, 1927, they instituted a suit for a declaration to the effect that the houses attached and sold were ancestral qua them and, therefore, not liable for the decree passed against Vaishno Das.

The trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their allegations. On appeal, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that house No. 806 was ancestral as also was the site bearing No. 837. House No. 826 found to be the property of Rallia Ram, father of Vaishno Das, to which the plaintiffs had no right whatever, with regard to house No. 507 it was held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that their common ancestor Maghi Ram had ever possessed the same, and that it had as a matter of fact been proved that the house had at one time belonged to one Dhaunkalya Mal who had gifted, half of it to one Kahna Jhiwar and the remaining half by Will to Rallia Ram and Nathu, uncle of the plaintiff Ganda Ram and father of Hira Lal (now deceased). That portion of the house, which had been demised to Rallia Ram and Nathu, was under mortgage to Imam Din who was in possession thereof. Inasmuch as the mortgagee was in possession, the legatees were unable to obtain possession so long as the mortgage subsisted. Rallia Ram brought a suit for possession by pre-emption of that half of the house which had been gifted to Kahna Jhiwar and obtained a decree in due course. Half of this house No. 507 clearly belonged to Rallia Ram alone. Qua the half of which Rallia Ram was one of the two legatees, it appears that the said Rallia Ram paid Imam Din, the mortgagee the sum of Rs. 60 due under the mortgage and obtained exclusive possession of the same. He was thus in exclusive possession of the entire house (No. 507) of which he was the sole owner of half and a co-owner with Nathu of the redeemed half. Having come to this finding the learned District Judge held that, inasmuch as Rallia Ram had redeemed the mortgage, he was a charge-holder qua that portion of the house which he had redeemed, and that Nathu was not entitled to possession until such time as he paid up his share of the mortgage money. He proceeded to find that Rallia Ram's possession having been exclusive from that date of the redemption and Rallia Ram having done various overt acts advertising his exclusive ownership of this property, Nathu's descendants were barred from advancing any claim to the share that otherwise would have devolved on their ancestor Nathu. He accordingly dismissed the claim advanced by the plaintiffs qua this house (No. 507). He also noted at the end of his judgment that house No. 807, which was in the possession of the plaintiffs, was ancestral.

Against this decision Ganda Ram alone (Hira Lal having died) has preferred a second appeal to this Court, and it has been urged by Mr. Fakir Chand on his behalf that the view taken by the learned District Judge is wrong. He has also objected to the declaration noted at the end of the learned District Judge's judgment qua house No. 807. This note does not appear in the decree, and I do not think it necessary to refer to it further.

So far as house No. 826 is concerned, the findings are findings of fact which cannot be re-opened in second appeal and the same applies with regard to house No. 806 and the site bearing number 837.

There remains the question of house No. 507. Mr. Fakir Chand's argument has been that, when Rallia Ram paid off Imam Din he stepped into Imam Din's shoes, and must, therefore, be regarded as a mortgagee and that, therefore, Art. 145 applied and the appellant's claim to be a co-owner of the redeemed portion of this house was within limitation. Mr. Shamair Chand has contended that, when Rallia Ram redeemed the mortgage, he did not become mortgagee but was a charge-holder and that, therefore, Art. 148 did not apply, the relevant Article being Art. 144. Mr. Fakir Chand's contention is based on certain authorities of the Allahabad High Court. These authorities have been considered by practically all the other High Courts in India which have taken a different view—a view that has been accepted by a Division Bench of this Court in Jhandu v. Nur Muhammad (1) decided on the 18th February, 1931. In these circumstances I must hold that the view taken by the learned District Judge that Rallia Ram was a charge-holder and not a mortgagee was correct.

The question, however, for determination is the date from which time should begin to run. On this point there was a certain amount of conflict in the authorities of this Court. The former view taken in three cases by three Judges sitting alone was that time began to run from the date of the redemption—a view that did not find favour with the Division Bench in Jhandu v. Nur Muhammad (1) where it has been held that the co-owner out of possession is still a co-owner and that the possession of his co-owner cannot be regarded as adverse unless and until the said co-owner in possession can prove some clear and unequivocal overt act showing his intention to hold adversely to the other co-owner. This, in my opinion, is the correct view.

The learned District Judge in his judgment has considered that Rallia Ram did certain overt acts which evinced his intention to assert his sole ownership. These overt acts, however, were not enumerated in the judgment; and, on being asked what they were, Mr. Shamair Chand found it impossible to refer to any with the exception of an entry in the khana shumari papers of 1917 in which Rallia Ram is shown as the sole owner. He also referred to certain leases which Rallia Ram had been executing since 1905 in which he had described himself as the sole owner. Not one of these leases appears to have been registered, and it is perfectly clear that knowledge of the contents of these leases cannot be attributed to Nathu or his descendants, so that any allegations made in these leases cannot, in my judgment, be regarded as overt assertions of a denial of a co sharer's rights.

The next point made was that the plaintiffs themselves in this suit claimed that this particular house was ancestral and had devolved on them from Maghi Ram. It has been urged that had Nathu or any of his descendants been aware of their rights in this house they could not possibly have alleged that this house had ever belonged to their common ancestor Maghi Ram. The want of knowledge on the part of Nathu and his descendants cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as an overt act on the part of Rallia Ram which would entail the starting of limitation against them. In these circumstances it seems to me that the view taken by the learned District Judge with regard to this particular house No. 507 is incorrect, and that the appellant must be held to be the owner of half of that portion of the house (No. 507) which had been redeemed by Rallia Ram from Imam Din and their share, therefore, is not liable to be attached and sold under the decrees against Vaishno Das. In the circumstances of the case I would leave the parties to bear their own costs in this appeal.

Johnstone, J.—I agree.

Second Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Jullundur at Ludhiana, dated the 12th February, 1927, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Jullundur, dated the 11th October, 1926.

Messrs. Achhru Ram and N. C. Mehra, for the Appellants.

Lala Durga Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On the 21st February, 1921, one Ganesha Singh a Jat, obtained a decree for a certain sum of money against Atma Ram another Jat, and in execution of that decree he attached a house and an open site belonging to the latter. The judgment-debtor's sons, Ujagar Singh and Natha, unsuccessfully objected to the attachment, and then brought an action for a declaration that they were the owners of the property attached by the decree-holder, and that the attachment was, therefore, invalid. They also added an alternative prayer that the property being ancestral was not liable to be sold in execution of a decree, because the money, for which the decree was obtained, was not raised for any legal or valid necessity. That suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the property belonged to them and not to the judgment-debtor, and the judgment of the trial Court was confirmed on appeal.

After the dismissal of the suit, the property was sold on the 21st August, 1925 and this sale was attacked by Natha, one of the sons of the judgment-debtor, on the ground that there was no necessity to justify the alienation. The suit brought by him to protect his reversionary rights has been dismissed on two grounds (1) that it is barred by the rule of res judicata, and (2) that the alienation was for necessity, and consequently binding upon the reversioners.

The decision of the learned District Judge on the first point cannot be sustained. In the first place, it is clear that mere attachment does not give the reversioner a right to bring a suit for a declaration that it shall not affect his reversionary rights. As laid down in 74 Ind. Cas. 479 [Chet Ram v. Spedding & Co., Ltd. (1)], a mere attachment infringes the rights of only the judgment-debtor and has the effect of placing the property attached in custodia legis. It does not amount to an infringement of the rights of his reversioners and cannot furnish the latter with a cause of action for a suit for a declaration that the attachment shall not affect their reversionary rights. This view has been endorsed by a Division Bench in 78 Ind. Cas. 926 [Shib Deo Singh v. Uttam Singh (2)] It is, therefore, clear that the sons of the judgment-debtor could not, before the sale in dispute, bring a suit objecting to the attachment of the property, and any finding on that point would have been wholly unnecessary for the decision of the former suit. Moreover, neither the Court of first instance nor the District Judge decided that case on the ground that the attachment infringed the reversionary rights of the then plaintiffs. The rule of res judicata does not, therefore, operate as a bar to the present action.

Coming now to the question of necessity, we find that the judgment debtor, Atma Ram, had gone to Vancouver and engaged in trade there. He borrowed the money from Ganesha Singh, who too was in Vancouver at that time, and used it for the purposes of trade. The learned District Judge finds that Atma Ram had not followed the profession of agriculture for many years and had been "living out of India and carrying on trade and sending money to his sons" in India. It must be remembered that it was only a house with the land attached to it which was sold in execution of the decree obtained against him, and his agricultural land was neither attached nor sold. In these circumstances the learned District Judge was justified in holding that the money borrowed for carrying on business constituted a valid necessity. Our attention has been invited to the judgment in Santa Singh v. Waryam Singh (3), in which it was decided that an alienation of an ancestral land in lieu of money borrowed for the purposes of carrying on a trade is not an alienation for a necessary purpose; and it was observed that the "village custom would not look with favour upon the conversion of a Jat agriculturist into a shop-keeping trader". But as pointed out in Mohamad Hassan-ud Din v. Saif Ali Shah (4) the judgment in Santa Singh v. Waryam Singh (3) was not intended to lay down that under no circumstances could a member of an agricultural tribe alienate ancestral property for the purposes of engaging in trade. The same view was taken in 95 Ind. Cas. 433 [Taj Din v. Dula (5).]

(1) 74 Ind. Cas. 479; 5 Lah. L. J. 234; A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 52.

It would be unreasonable to suggest that an agriculturist should not improve his financial position by starting an industry or engaging in trade, and that he should in no case, be allowed to alienate his ancestral property in order to finance his business. No hard and fast rule can be laid down that ancestral property can never be alienated for the purpose of providing funds for trade or business. The decision in each case must depend upon its own peculiar facts, and having regard to the circumstances mentioned above and to the fact that the son, who has brought the present suit, has himself benefited from the earnings of the trade carried on by his father, I consider that the money borrowed by the latter constituted a valid necessity for the sale of the house.

I would accordingly affirm the decree of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI—Sale by Official Receiver—O. XXI, applicability of—Objection by insolvent—Limitation.

The rules laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, regulating sales under that Code are not applicable to sales by Official Receivers in insolvency proceedings. Sale by the Official Receiver is not, therefore, irregular merely because it was held at his office and not at the spot. [p 268, col 1]

Though an insolvent who is aggrieved by an act of the Receiver is entitled to move the Court under s. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, he must take action within the period prescribed by the proviso to that section. [ibid.]

Miscellaneous Second Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 12th November, 1930, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, dated the 6th December, 1929.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy ud-Din, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. A. Cooper, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—One Shakar Khan was adjudicated an insolvent in September 1928. His property, therefore, vested in the Official Receiver who took possession of it and apparently, on the 3rd April 1929, sold certain land and a house at his office in Jhelum, the purchaser being one Feroz Khan. On the 30th August 1929, the insolvent Shakar Khan filed an application in the Court of the Insolvency Judge objecting to the sale on the ground that it had been held at the office of the Official Receiver instead of on the spot. Presumably this application was made under s 68 of the Insolvency Act. The Insolvency Court being under the impression that O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code applied to sales by Official Receivers cancelled the sale holding that it was "irregular" to sell the land at the Official Receiver's office instead of on the spot.

Against this order one of the creditors preferred an appeal to the District Judge. The appeal was heard ex parte and the learned District Judge on the 1st April, 1930 accepted the said appeal holding that the Insolvency Court had wrongly held that the sale had been held in an irregular manner. Shakar Khan then filed an application to have that ex parte order set aside. It is not quite clear what locus standi he had in this matter but the order was set aside and the matter was re-heard. But the original order of the learned District Judge was maintained, the sale being held valid. This was on the 18th November 1930.

Against this order Shakar Khan has preferred this second appeal to this Court under s 75 of the Insolvency Act. It has been urged that he has no locus standi and further that in any case no question of law exists which can be considered in second appeal. There can be no doubt that the Insolvency Court was under the mistaken impression that the rules laid down in the Civil Procedure Code regulating sales under that Code were applicable to sales by Official Receivers in insolvency proceedings and it was for that reason, and that reason alone, that the sale was cancelled by that Court. The learned District Judge was, therefore, correct in holding that no irregularity had been committed and his order is, therefore, not open to attack in second appeal. Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, however, has urged that the acts of the Official Receiver are under the general control of the Insolvency Court and he referred to s. 59 of the Insolvency Act. Section 59 by itself does not afford Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, any assistance. It is clear that the Official Receiver has full power to deal with the property that is vested in him in his official capacity. It is, however, perfectly true that his acts are subject to the control of the Insolvency Court for the Receiver is an officer of the Court. Section 68 empowers the insolvent, when aggrieved by any act of the Receiver, to move the Court, and on being so moved, the Court will examine the proceedings and decide whether the act of the Official Receiver should be upheld or not. The insolvent, however, must take action within the period prescribed by the proviso to s. 68 which lays down that no application under this section should be entertained after the expiration of 21 days from the date of the act or decision complained of. As I have already said, the sale appears to have been effected on the 3rd April, 1929. Shakar Khan did not move the Insolvency Court till the 30th August 1930, or long after the period provided by the proviso to s. 68 of the Insolvency Act. The Insolvency Court, therefore, should not have entertained the application.

After a consideration of all the circumstances of this case I am unable to say that the learned District Judge's order refusing to cancel the sale is wrong and I, therefore, dismiss this appeal. No order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 145, O. XXXVIII, r. 7—Attachment before judgment—Properties delivered to sapurdar—Suit by defendant against sapurdar for rent of premises—Maintainability.

Where certain moveable properties belonging to the defendant were attached before judgment and they were handed over to a sapurdar and as the sapurdar did not remove the goods from the defendant's premises the latter brought a suit against the sapurdar to recover a certain sum of money by way of rent of the premises and damages and for a permanent injunction against the sapurdar restraining him from using the premises :

Held, that inasmuch as the cost, if any, incurred in storing the property attached would be a legitimate charge on the properties or the proceeds of their sale when they were delivered eventually to the party who succeeded in the suit, the question was one between the parties to the suit and the suit was not maintainable under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. Doda Shah v. Bishan Das (1), referred to. [p. 269, col. 2.]

Second Civil Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 7th February, 1931, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Gujranwala, dated the 11th August, 1930.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

Pandit Bishen Narain, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—In a suit for a large sum of money which was owed by Kundan Lal, proprietor of the American Trading Company, Gujranwala, to the Peoples Bank of Northern India, the latter got the property of Kundan Lal, approximately worth about Rs. 13,000 attached before judgment. It consisted of machinery and tools including three planing machines, shearing and punching machine, stamping press and electric motor etc. Mr. Sohan Lal, the manager of the Gujranwala branch of the Peoples Bank of Northern India, was made a sapurdar of this property, when it was attached. He did not, however, remove the things from the premises of the American Trading Company and the property remained there for more than two months. I understand that the suit in which the attachment before judgment was obtained is still pending. In the meanwhile Kundan Lal brought a suit against Sohan Lal for recovery of Rs. 300 by way of rent of his premises and damages and also prayed for a permanent injunction against him not to use his premises any longer for storing the goods attached. The plaintiff states that he had asked the sapurdar to remove the attached property from his premises and had told him that if he did not do so, rent at the rate of Rs. 5 per day would be charged. He also gave him a notice on 1st October, 1929, stating that rent at the rate of Rs. 10 per day would be charged if the goods were not removed within three days. The defendant raised many objections to this suit relating, inter alia, to its valuation for purposes of Court-fees, the locus standi of the plaintiff to bring the suit and the non-joinder of the Peoples Bank of Northern India as a party. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit after giving findings in favour of the defendant on all the issues raised by him, except one, which concerned the possession of the premises in dispute by the plaintiff. On appeal the decision of the Court of first instance was maintained by the learned District Judge. He held that the valuation for Court-fees was correct but he agreed with the Court below that the plaintiff had no locus standi to bring a separate suit against Soman Lal and that his proper remedy was by an application to the attaching Court on the analogy of s. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code. He also held that the Peoples Bank of Northern India was a necessary party.

The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court and Diwan Mehr Chand, on his behalf, challenges the correctness of the finding as to the locus standi of the plaintiff, on the ground that s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to this case. Mr. Bishen Narain for the respondent lays stress on the fact that a sapurdar is a surety, and the question of his liability or otherwise for any rent of the premises on which the property attached was left, is a question which can be gone into in execution proceedings under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, and can be decided only by the Court that passed the orders attaching the property and that a suit against the sapurdar is not competent. Counsel refers to a Division Bench decision of this Court in Doda Shah v. Bishen Das (1) where it was laid down that a sapurdar being a person to whom goods attached in execution of a decree are entrusted is a surety and his liability can be enforced in execution proceedings in virtue of s. 145 read with s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. He also refers to O. XXXVIII, r. 7 Civil Procedure Code, according to which attachment before judgment is to be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of the decree. He contends that the provisions relating to the execution of decrees are applicable to an attachment before judgment. Diwan Mehr Chand replies that even if the sapurdar is considered to be a surety in the light of the authority referred to above, he may be a surety for the purposes of keeping the property in safe custody and producing it when required by the Court, but the question of payment of rent for the premises occupied by the goods which came under his control is a distinct and separate matter between him and the defendant in the original suit and cannot be regarded as a question arising between the parties to the suit according to the terms of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that the cost, if any, incurred in storing the property attached would be a legitimate charge on the said property or the proceeds of its sale, when it is delivered eventually to either of the litigants, who succeeds in the suit, and that this is therefore clearly a question between the parties. I think there is force in the contention of the respondent. With regard to the custody of the property, a sapurdar cannot incur any expenses personally. The expenses incurred by him must come either out of the pocket of the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor. Without pronouncing in any way on the merits of the claim of the present plaintiff Kundan Lal, I must say he seems to have rushed prematurely into Court. If he loses the main case, any costs of the custody of the property in question incurred by the sapurdar will have to be borne by himself. If he wins, he could claim a deduction of the rent due for the use of his premises against the decree-holder when the latter takes possession of the property or its proceeds in satisfaction of his decree. I am of opinion that the Courts below have rightly held that in view of the provisions of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, the present suit of the plaintiff against the sapurdar is not competent.

The opinion expressed by me on the above question justifies the dismissal of the appeal and it is not necessary to go into any other question raised between the parties in this case. I dismiss this appeal but under the circumstances of the case leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Benami transactions—Property standing in wife's name—Presumption—Onus of proof of benami nature.

There is no presumption that when a document stands in the name of a woman, the property conveyed by it must be deemed to belong to her husband. The onus is clearly upon the person alleging the transaction to be benami to show that the apparent state of things is not the real state of things. Sura Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandarama Pillai (1), distinguished. [p. 270, col. 2.]

Second Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 2nd January, 1927, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 13th November 1926.

Mr. M. C. Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shaikat Rai, for the Respondent.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On the 15th July, 1903, a deed was executed in favour of Musammam Ananti, the wife of one Radhu Ram, evidencing the sale of the house in dispute in her favour for Rs. 1,250. The deed was registered on the 18th July, and before the Sub-Registrar she was represented by her husband who on her behalf paid the price to the vendor. Radhu Ram died in 1920, and Musammam Ananti, on the 2nd October, 1925 made a Will devising the house to her brother's son Kundan Lal.

Radhu Ram's brother Hari Ram has, after the death of Musammam Ananti, taken possession of the house and disputes the title of Kundan Lal. He raised various objections regarding the Will made by Musammam Ananti, but these objections have been over-ruled by the Courts below.

The only question, which has been debated by Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, in this second appeal, is that the sale in favour of Musammam Ananti was a benami transaction and that her husband, Radhu Ram was the beneficial owner of the house. The learned Counsel places his reliance upon the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Counsel in Sura Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandarama Pillai (1), and contends that a purchase by a husband in favour of his wife must be presumed to be a benami transaction. A perusal of the judgment, however, shows that the money, with which the purchase was made in that case, belonged to the husband; and it is an incontestable doctrine that the criterion in cases of this kind is to determine the source of the purchase money. There is absolutely no evidence in the present case that money, which was paid by the husband before the Sub-Registrar on behalf of his wife, belonged to him, and not to the wife. It is significant that Hari Ram, who relied upon the benami character of the transaction, has not gone into the witness-box in order to give evidence in support of his allegation that the money belonged to his brother or to the joint family consisting of the two brothers. It is also significant that though Musammam Ananti dealt with the property as her own, Hari Ram did not during her lifetime, dispute her title.

There is no presumption that, when a document stands in the name of a woman, the property conveyed by it must be deemed to belong to her husband. The onus is clearly upon the person alleging the transaction to be benami to show that the apparent state of things is not the real state of things; in other words, that the person, who appears as the owner on the face of the deed, is not the real owner.

For the aforesaid reasons I would affirm the decree of the learned Additional District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

It is a general rule of law that partition should be made with due regard to the possession of the parties. Fateh Chand v. Bilas Rai (1), followed.

Where in an appeal from a partition suit all that the appellant claims is that he should not have been held liable to pay certain sum to the respondent by the trial Court, he is bound to pay ad valorem Court-fee on such sum.

A party may give up a part of his claim so that the Court-fee already paid may suffice.

First Appeal from the preliminary decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 23rd March, 1925.

Messrs. Muhammad Hussain and Manohar Lal Sachdev, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Tirath Ram and Darbari Lal, for the Respondent.

Addison, J.—This is a partition suit brought by the plaintiff against his brother, the defendant. A preliminary decree was passed for partition of the immovable property. It was further held that the plaintiff had to give the defendant half of Umar Din's debt, half of Rs. 4,580 on account of Maula Bakhsh's debt and half of Rs. 150 on account of certain repairs done by defendant. It was also ordered that the Lahore house in which the defendant resided should be allotted to the defendant at the final partition and the residential house of the family in Niaz Beg should be allotted to the plaintiff as he had always lived there with the deceased father of the parties. The plaintiff claimed that certain other sums should be paid by the defendant to him. This claim was disallowed as well as the claim of the plaintiff for a share of the earning of the defendant.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed on several grounds. One ground was that the decision of the trial Court was wrong that the earnings of the defendant did not constitute joint family property. Another was that the decree of the trial Court was contrary to law and facts on the record and under this head it was claimed that the trial Court should not have given the Lahore residential house to the defendant and the Niaz Beg residential house to the plaintiff. These two grounds were certainly covered by a Court-fee of Rs. 21-4-0. There were, however, other grounds of appeal, namely, that the plaintiff should not have been held liable to pay to the defendant half of Rs. 4,580 due from Maula Bakhsh and that the trial Court was wrong in disallowing to the plaintiff certain sums amounting to about Rs. 1,000 which he claimed from the defendant. In these grounds it was claimed that the liability of the plaintiff to the defendant should be reduced by definite sums and obviously Court-fees were necessary on these claims ad valorem. As these had not been paid, plaintiff's Counsel limited his appeal to the grounds mentioned above as being covered by the Court-fee paid. We allowed him to do so.

The father of the parties lived in Niaz Beg where he kept a shop and lent money. The plaintiff used to live with him. The defendant, however, stayed in Lahore. He passed the Entrance Examination in 1892 and thereafter got a post in the Punjab Civil Secretariat at Rs. 15 a month. He has very slowly worked his way up and is now drawing Rs. 260 a month. The plaintiff's claim is that he has accumulated savings out of his pay in the Punjab Civil Secretariat and that as he was educated at the family expense these accumulations are joint family property.

In the first place, it has not been proved that there are any savings of the defendant out of his pay. Further it is clear that if there were any, they could not be described as "gains of science". As stated in Mulla's Hindu Law, 6th Edition, para. 231, at page 245,

"Gains made personally and without the aid of joint funds by a member of a joint family, who was maintained at the expense of the joint family and received no more than an ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the family, are the self-acquired property of such member, and not joint family property."

Education up to the Entrance pass is a very ordinary education and a clerk who started life on Rs. 15 a month, even though now he is drawing Rs. 260 a month, cannot be said to be a member of a profession or occupation requiring special training. Any saving, therefore from his pay cannot be described as "gains of science", and this part of the appeal must fail.

The only other point argued was that the defendant should not have been allotted the residential house in kucha Sethan, Lahore, as by this order the plaintiff's interests were prejudiced. I am unable to agree with this contention. The plaintiff in para. 12 of his plaint asked that partition should be done with due regard to possession of the parties, and this is the general rule as laid down in Fateh Chand v. Bilas Rai (1). The plaintiff as a witness stated that both brothers were in possession of the Lahore house in dispute up to the death of their father, defendant having a lock on the upper storey while plaintiff had his on the lower storey. After their father's death in 1919, however, the defendant broke his lock and took possession of the whole house. In this he is supported by Sant Ram, who was married to the sister of the parties who is now dead. It is clear from Sant Ram's evidence, however, that he is a partisan of the plaintiff. On the other hand, the defendant has stated in the witness-box that he himself built this house in 1900-1901 and lived in it since that date. In this respect he is supported by Barkat Ali D. W. No. 9, who supplied the bricks for the building. Further, it is clear that the defendant has all along been living in Lahore while plaintiff and his deceased father resided in Niaz Beg. In these circumstances I must hold that defendant has all long been in possession of the house in kucha Sethan just as plaintiff has been in possession of the Niaz Beg residential house where he lived with his father. The order of the trial Judge, therefore, that the possession of the parties should be maintained with respect to these two houses was correct.

For the reasons given I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Criminal trial—Cross cases under ss. 326 and 302, Penal Code, close connection between—Commitment to Sessions Court of case under s. 326, propriety of—Procedure.

It is no ground for committing to Sessions Court a case under s. 326, Penal Code, that it is closely connected with a counter case under s. 302, Penal Code, for the offence under s. 326 is triable and can be adequately punished by a Magistrate of the First Class or at any rate by one exercising enhanced powers under s. 30, Criminal Procedure Code. The object of avoiding a possible conflict of decisions can be achieved by awaiting the result of the Sessions trial under s. 302.

Case reported by the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, with his No. 73 of 1931.

Report.—Bakhu, Jhanda, Karam Ilahi and Ohanan, weavers of Kot Fattah Din, in the town of Kasur, have been committed for trial under s. 302 read with s. 34, Indian Penal Code, for the murder of Karam Din. Along with this case, Nathu, Karmun and Shahabu, weavers of Dhur Kot, in the town of Kasur, have been committed for trial under s. 326 read with s. 34. Indian Penal Code, for having caused hurt with dangerous weapons—an offence not triable exclusively by a Court of Session. The reasons given by the learned Magistrate in his committal order for committing the latter case are that this case is a cross case to one under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, and it "presents a quite different story which cannot be separated from the murder case without discussing at any great length the merits of that case." It also appears that the question of the exercise of right of private defence also arises in the case.

The apparent connection of the case under s. 326, Indian Penal Code, with the case under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, is in my opinion no ground whatsoever for committing it to this Court when the offence involved is triable and can be adequately punished by a First Class Magistrate or one exercising enhanced powers under s. 30 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The circumstances are entirely on all fours with the reference made by the Sessions Judge, Lahore, with his No. 483 of 16th March, 1931, Crown v. Santa Singh and others (see High Court Revision No. 400 of 1931). In this connection I would also refer to 3 Cr. L. J. 94 Emperor v. Dharam Singh (1), Emperor v. Asha Bhatti (2) and 31 Cr. L. J. 178 Emperor v. Karm Singh (3). The accused in the case under s. 326, Indian Penal Code, are not in the least likely to be prejudiced by the trial of the case under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, in this Court. As submitted in the report in 31 Cr. L. J. 178 Emperor v. Karm Singh (3) if the object of the Magistrate is to avoid a possible conflict of decisions, this can be achieved by awaiting the result of the Sessions trial in the case under s. 302, Indian Penal Code.

For the above reasons I submit the case to the High Court and recommend that the commitment of the case under s. 326, Indian Penal Code, be quashed and would request that orders may be passed as early as possible so that there may be no delay in the Sessions trial.

ORDER.—For reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge I quash the order of commitment and direct that the case be tried in accordance with law by the Magistrate who has been dealing with this case, or any other Magistrate, as the District Magistrate thinks proper. The record will be returned at once.

First Appeal from decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 17th April, 1930.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and B. N. Sahai, for the Appellant.

Dr. N. C. Vaish and Messrs. P. L. Banerji, and Shabbir Hasan, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of possession on the strength of a lease. Defendant No. 2 is the owner of the property which consists of a quarry to be worked. He had granted a lease in favour of defendant No. 1 which was to expire at the end of May, 1928. Another lease was executed by Pahlad Narain, professing to be the general attorney of the owner, on the 10th of April, 1926, in favour of the plaintiff for a period of 10 years to come into effect from June, 1928, on the expiry of the lease in favour of defendant No. 1.

The plaintiff alleged that he had not obtained possession and accordingly sued to recover possession. He impleaded both the owner and the former lessee as defendants. On behalf of the defendants it was denied that any valid lease was executed by Pahlad Narain. On behalf of the owner it was urged that the alleged agent had no authority to grant any such lease. There was also a plea of want of notice under s. 106. A few other pleas also were taken.

The learned Subordinate Judge framed no less than seven issues, but disposed of the case on his findings of fact on Issues Nos. 1 and 2 only. The learned District Judge has come to a contrary conclusion on those points and has remanded the whole case.

The first point to be considered is whether a private copy of the power-of-attorney under which Pahlad Narain, the agent professed to act was admissible in evidence. The Courts below have differed.

A copy of the general power-of-attorney cannot be obtained by any person who is no party to the deed. The original could be produced either by defendant No. 2 or his agent Pahlad Narain, and we think that a copy could be obtained by these persons alone. The learned Subordinate Judge had first ordered defendant No. 2 to produce either the original power-of-attorney or a certified copy within 10 days. This he failed to do. Later on he was allowed to appoint a special attorney for the purpose of obtaining such copy from Patna where the deed had been executed. The only copy which was obtained from Patna was of an abstract of the power-of-attorney and not a copy of the whole document, although an application for a copy of the whole document had been made.

The abstract shows that the document was executed before and authenticated by the Sub-Registrar under s. 33 (i) (a) of the Indian Registration Act. It was obviously not registered and that is why a complete copy of the original has not been retained by the Sub-Registrar. Section 74, sub s. (2) of the Indian Evidence Act cannot apply to this case because the Sub-Registrar was not called upon to keep a public record of this private document. We are, therefore, satisfied that the learned District Judge was right in holding that when the original was not forthcoming it was open to the plaintiff to prove a private copy of it in the way allowed by law.

The other question that is raised on behalf of the defendants is that notice under s. 106 should have been given before the suit was instituted. As pointed out by the learned District Judge this is not a suit for possession brought by the plaintiff lessee against his own lessor-defendant No. 1 who is retaining actual possession. Section 106 does not apply to the case of a lessee for a fixed term when the term has expired.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that by virtue of the provisions contained in s. 116, notice became necessary if the lessor subsequently assented to his continuing in possession on the expired lease or accepted rent. But these sections regulate the rights of the lessor and the lessee inter se when a suit for ejectment is brought.

The next question urged is whether a suit by the plaintiff as lessee against defendant No. 1 who is continuing in possession is maintainable without a proper ejectment suit having been brought by the lessor himself. Reliance is placed on the case of 53 Ind. Cas. 140 [Ibad Ullah Khan v. Ram Charan Sah (1)] for the proposition that no such suit by a lessee is maintainable. An examination of the facts of that case however shows that there the lessee could have been ejected only by the Revenue Court, and he not having been so ejected, the Civil Court had no power to dispossess him. It was in these circumstances that the learned Judge of the Oudh Court held that a suit by the lessee in a Civil Court was not maintainable.

Under s. 108, sub-s. (b) the lessor is bound on the lessee's request to put him in possession of the leased property. Thus there is a liability on the lessor to put the lessee in possession even though the actual transfer of interest in the immoveable property may not have taken place. There is no reason why the lessee should not be able to enforce his own rights and the liability of the lessor to put him in possession. If the lessee can sue the lessor for possession in order to enforce the same, there seems to be no good ground why he should be debarred from doing so, merely because the lessor chooses to allow another person to continue in possession of the leased property. In this case both the lessor and the person in actual possession have been impleaded and we cannot see that there is any defect in the frame of the suit which is fatal to the claim.

As the learned Subordinate Judge had disposed of the question of ownership only and left practically all the other issues undecided, the learned District Judge thought that the case had been disposed of on a preliminary point and he accordingly remanded the whole case for disposal. He also directed that the parties should have an opportunity to produce evidence on the question of the authority of Pahlad Narain to grant the lease. He has also left undecided the other matters which are covered by Issues Nos. 3, 4, 6 and 7. The plea covered by Issue No. 5 had been given up at the trial.

We think that the order of the learned

District Judge is right and we accordingly dismiss the appeal, and direct that the costs should abide the event.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 11, 31—Appeal—Summary dismissal—Judgment, contents of—Compliance with r. 31, necessity of—Interpretation of Statutes—Headings of chapters.

In a judgment delivered on hearing an appeal under O. XLI, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code by a Court subordinate to the High Court, compliance with the provision of r. 31, O. XLI, is necessary. Samin Hasan v. Piran (1), overruled [p. 276, col. 1].

The question whether in a particular case there has been a substantial compliance with the provisions of r. 31 is a different one depending on the nature of the judgment delivered in each case. A non-compliance with the strict provisions of this rule may not vitiate the judgment and make it wholly void, and the irregularity may be ignored if there has been a substantial compliance with it and the second Appellate Court is in a position to ascertain the findings of the lower Appellate Court. [p. 276, col. 2.]

Headings in the body of an Act are of some help in clearing up obscurities when there is an ambiguity, but they cannot control the provisions of the sections when they are unequivocal and clear. [p. 276, col. 1.]

Second Appeal from a decision of the Second Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 18th July, 1931.

On 1st July, 1931, Mr. Justice Mukerji and Mr. Justice Allen made the following Order of reference to a Full Bench.—This appeal the valuation of which is rather small, being only Rs. 49 and, therefore, cognisable by a single Judge, came for admission before Niamatullah, J. and he ordered that it should be put up before a Bench of two Judges for hearing. We are of opinion that it should be heard by a larger Bench so that the question raised may be definitely decided so far as this Court is concerned.

This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. The suit was dismissed by the learned Munsif, after he had written a judgment, covering 12 pages of the manuscript copy, which has been filed by the appellant. The learned Additional Dis-strict Judge before whom the plaintiff's appeal came for hearing dismissed the appeal under O. XLI, r. 11 by writing a judgment which covers seven typed lines. The judgment is simply to the effect that the learned Judge is satisfied, on reading the judgment and hearing the Counsel for the appellant, that the case has been properly decided, that the mortgage alleged by the plaintiff has not been satisfactorily proved and that it was not established that the "site of the house in dispute was formerly covered by his father's house."

Sitting in second appeal we are not in a position to know from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court what were the points for determination, and how the learned Judge came to the conclusions at which he arrived.

As already stated, this was a suit relating to property and was complicated. The alleged mortgage is said to have been made about 32 years prior to the institution of the suit.

The point taken by the plaintiff-appellant is that as the judgment is not in accordance with law, the Court below should be called upon to give a proper judgment.

Findings of fact are binding on second appeal provided the findings are arrived at without any contravention of any rule of law, for example, the rule as to burden of proof, admission of evidence, and so on and so forth. In order to enable the High Court to see that a finding of fact has been properly arrived at, there should be a properly written judgment before it. This advantage is denied to us by the judgment complained of.

It has been held by a Bench of this High Court in Samin Hasan v. Piran (1) that the rules laid down in s. 574 of the old Civil Procedure Code did not apply to an appeal which was heard under s. 551 of the old Code. Order XLI, r. 31 has now taken the place of the old s. 574, and O. XLI, r. 11 has taken the place of the old s. 551. The change in the law is not material, and the question is whether the decision in Samin Hasan v. Piran (1) is good law.

With all respect, we doubt the correctness of this decision, and find it desirable that the case should go before a larger Bench so that the point of law involved may be settled once and for all so far as this Court is concerned.

There is a conflict of decision among several High Courts on this point, and some of these cases have been noted by Ohari, J., in Ma Saw v. Ma Bwin Byu (2). The learned Judge agreed with some decisions and dissented from others and held that a judgment pronounced after hearing under O. XLI, r. 11 must comply with the requirements of O. XLI, r. 31.

The argument in favour of the proposition that a decision given after a hearing under O. XLI, r. 11 may be a summary one, and it is not necessary to comply with the requirements of O. XLI, r. 31, is very often based on the headings to be found in O. XLI, Sch. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, for example, over the r. 16 we find the heading "Procedure on hearing". Over the r. 9, similarly we find the heading "Procedure on admission of appeal". Again over the r. 20 we find the heading "Judgment in appeal". It has been sometimes argued on the basis of these headings that r. 31 applies only when there is a contested appeal in which both the parties are represented.

These headings are no part of the enactment. They are on the same lines as the marginal notes to the sections or rules. They are never put to the vote in the Legislature, and they are meant merely as guides for the person trying to find out a particular rule of law in a particular Code. That these headings are very faulty and have been prepared without much consideration will be apparent from the fact that the heading "Procedure on hearing" comes between rr. 15 and 16. The heading would imply that previous to the stage to which r. 16 is applicable, there is no hearing at all of the appeal. But if we look at r. 11, we see that it distinctly requires that the Appellate Court shall 'hear' the appellant or his Pleader. Surely, then, there was a hearing at the stage for which r. 16 is meant.

It is not necessary to discuss the point at length, because we are of opinion that the question is of such importance as requires the decision of a larger Bench. We direct that the record be laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for the formation of a Full Bench for the decision of the following point, namely,

"whether in a judgment delivered on hearing an appeal under O. XLI, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code by a Court subordinate to the High Court, compliance with the provisions of r. 31, O. XLI is necessary.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sankar Saran, for the Respondents.

(2) 95 Ind. Cas. 881; 4 R. 66; 5 Bur. L. J. 60; A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 129.

Opinion.—The question referred to the Full Bench is

"Whether in a judgment delivered on hearing an appeal under O. XLI, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code by a Court subordinate to the High Court, compliance with the provisions of r. 31, O. XLI is necessary."

The question which we have to answer is whether r. 31, O. XLI requiring that the judgment of the Appellate Court shall be in writing and shall state the points for determination, the decision thereon, the reasons for the decision and, where the decree appealed from is reversed or varied, the relief to which the appellant is entitled and shall at the time that it is pronounced, be signed and dated, applies to a dismissal of an appeal under O. XLI, r. 11.

The answer will depend on the question whether, when an appeal is dismissed summarily under O. XLI, r. 11, there is a judgment delivered and r. 31 applies to such a judgment.

There can be no question that in dismissing an appeal under O. XLI, r. 11 the Appellate Court delivers a judgment, in accordance with which the decree is prepared. Such a judgment is treated as a judgment from which a Letters Patent Appeal could be entertained, and a certified copy of it is required under the law when a second appeal is to be filed. It is unthinkable that there could be a decree passed dismissing the appeal, without there having previously been a judgment. If a judgment has to be delivered by the Appellate Court, there seems to be no reason why r. 31, which applies to judgments of Appellate Courts, should not be applicable. Our attention has been drawn to the case of Sami Hasan v. Piran (1) and some cases of other High Courts where the view has been taken that s. 574 of the old Code corresponding to this rule was not applicable in its entirety. On the other hand, there are a large number of cases which have held the other view.

The learned Judges, who have taken a view in conformity with the view taken in Samin Hasan's case (1) have relied mainly on the effect of the headings which precede the groupings of the rules in this order. No doubt headings in the body of an Act are of some help in clearing up obscurities when there is an ambiguity, but they cannot control the provisions of the sections when they are unequivocal and clear. The headings are like preambles which supply a key to the mind of the Legislature, but do not control the substantive sections of the enactment. As has been pointed out by the learned Judges referring this case, the groupings of the sections under various headings in this order are not at all happy and cannot be relied upon in order to control the effect of the provisions.

If r. 31 were not to apply to judgments delivered under O. XLI, r. 11, the necessary result would be that there would be no provision of law which would require such judgments to be in writing or to be signed and dated by the Judge. A judgment under O. XLI, r. 11 could then be pronounced orally. This could not possibly have been intended by the Legislature.

Furthermore, a second appeal is allowed from such decrees under O. XLII, Civil Procedure Code and before the Appellate Court in second appeal can make up its mind as to whether there are grounds for interference under s. 160 Civil Procedure Code, it must know the points which were for determination and the decision of the lower Appellate Court on each of those points in order to decide whether the decree can be affirmed or not. If the Appellate Court were simply to dismiss the appeal summarily without pointing out what its decisions are, the result would be that it would be impossible to know what findings of fact are binding upon the second Appellate Court and what questions of law have been decided and how.)

The question whether in a particular case there has been a substantial compliance with the provisions of r. 31 is a different one depending on the nature of the judgment delivered in each case. A non-compliance with the strict provisions of this rule may not vitiate the judgment and make it wholly void, and the irregularity may be ignored if there has been a substantial compliance with it and the second Appellate Court is in a position to ascertain the findings of the lower Appellate Court. Our attention has not been drawn to any reported case of this Court after the passing of the new Code, in which the case of Samin Hasan v. Piran (1) has been followed. Our answer to the question referred to us is in the affirmative.

The making of a false charge to the Police of a cognizable offence is the institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211, Penal Code. Where the accused made a report of an alleged offence under s. 304, Penal Code, and thereby caused the Police to make an investigation:

Parahu* (2), Queen-Empress v. Bisheshwar (3), Emperor v. Jagmohan (5) and Barkatullah v. Sadho Kalwar (6), dissented from. [p. 279, col. 1.]

Order on Reference submitted by the Sessions Judge, Agra as per his Letter No. 138 I, dated the 17th April, 1930.

The Assistant Government-Advocate, for the Crown.

Bennet, J.—This is a Reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Agra recommending that the commitment of Johri to the Court of Sessions for trial under the second part of s. 211, Indian Penal Code, should be quashed. Johri made a report under s. 304, Indian Penal Code, against certain persons, and the case for the prosecution is that that report was false. If the case comes under the second part of s. 211, Indian Penal Code the case would be triable only by the Court of Session. The Police made an investigation into the report and found it to be false, and the persons named in it were not prosecuted. Hence the Sessions Judge considers that no criminal proceedings were instituted and, therefore, the charge of making the false report comes under the first part of s. 211, Indian Penal Code, and is punishable with two years' imprisonment of either description or with fine or with both and as the Committing Magistrate can pass such sentences he should dispose of the case himself.

The view of the Sessions Judge is in accordance with rulings of this Court. But as three other High Courts have taken a different view, the learned single Judge of this Court before whom the case came referred it to a Bench of two Judges.

Section 211 states as follows :

"Whoever, with intent to cause injury to any person, institutes or causes to be instituted any criminal proceeding against that person, or falsely charges any person with having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge against that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both ;

and, if such criminal proceeding be instituted on a false charge on an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards, shall be punishable with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine."

The words in this section which have given rise to difference of opinion are the words "if such criminal proceeding be instituted." The Allahabad view of these words has been that they mean that a criminal prosecution should have taken place. The High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Patna hold that these words cover a report in the Police Station even though the Police do not prosecute on it.

The Allahabad cases are in historical order as follows. Empress of India v. Pitam Rai (1). Pitam made a false report to a Police Officer but the Police did not prosecute the person he accused. A single Judge, Mahmood, J., held that there was no institution of criminal proceedings and therefore, no offence under the second part of s. 211, Indian Penal Code. In the next year, 1882, this ruling was followed by another single Judge in Empress v. Parahu (2). In 1893 the matter came before a Bench of two Judges of this Court, in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshwar (3), on a reference by a Sessions Judge who considered that the Full Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Karim Bakhsh v. Queen-Empress (4) should be followed. Unfortunately the Acting Public Prosecutor did not place this view before the Court and in a ruling of eight lines the Bench stated that they preferred the previous Allahabad rulings. There is no discussion of the merits of either view in this ruling, so it can hardly be taken as an authoritative decision between the two conflicting views.

This case was followed in 1909 by Emperor v. Jagmohan (5), and in 1912 by

(1) 5 A. 215; A. W. N. (1882) 225.

(2) 5 A. 598; A. W. N. (1883) 149.

(3) 16 A. 124; A. W. N. (1894) 10.

(4) 17 C. 574 (F. B.).

(5) 4 Ind. Cas. 812; 6 A. L. J. 989; 11 Cr. L. J. 54.

Barkatullah v. Sadho Kalwar (6). These were single Judge rulings.

In none of these rulings is there any discussion of these difficulties; there is merely the assumption that the phrase "institution of criminal proceedings" can only refer to the institution of a criminal case in Court.

The Calcutta High Court followed the Allahabad view in a Bench ruling Queen-Empress v. Karim Bakhsh (7) but the matter was fully considered by a Bench of five Judges in 1888 in Karim Bakhsh v. Queen-Empress (4) where it was laid down that :

"aman who sets the criminal law in motion by making a false charge to the Police of a cognizable offence institutes criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 121 of the Penal Code, and if the offence fall within the description in the latter part of the section, he is liable to the punishment there provided."

The reasoning on which this conclusion is reached is as follows :

"there are two modes in which a person aggrieved may seek to put the criminal law in motion. He may make a charge.....to the Police. If the information discloses a cognizable offence, the proper officer of Police may proceed to make an investigation; and if the result of that investigation is adverse to the accused, he is, in due course, brought by the Police before a Magistrate. If the information does not disclose a cognizable offence, the Police cannot take any step of their own authority. Secondly, a person aggrieved may lay a charge, or, as the Court calls it, a complaint (s. 191) before a Magistrate. Whichever of these methods is adopted, the thing done by the accuser is the same, that which is called in the one case giving information, in the other making a complaint. In each case the steps that follow are governed by the Criminal Procedure Code. In each the first step taken by the accuser is ordinarily also the last, for from that time the control of the investigation or the enquiry passes out of his hands into those of the constituted authorities."

The ruling then points out that the expressions "instituting proceedings" and "making a charge" are not mutually exclusive, because there is no mode by which a private accuser can institute criminal proceedings except by making a charge, and because the second part of the section speaks of proceedings instituted on a false charge." But the expressions are not co-extensive, because a charge to the Police of a non cognizable offence or a charge to a Civil Court or a public officer asking for sanction to prosecute, cannot be considered the institution of criminal proceedings.

A Bench of the Madras High Court in Queen-Empress v. Nanjunda Rau (8) followed the ruling of the Calcutta Full Bench in Karim Bakhsh v. Queen-Empress

(4) and dissented from the Allahabad rulings reported as Empress of India v. Pitam Rai (1) and Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (3). One passage in this ruling may be quoted:

"It is argued that, when a charge is preferred to the Police, it merely sets them on enquiry, and they may find the charge to be false and refuse to proceed with the charge without the accused being even aware that any complaint has been made against him; but precisely the same may be said when a complaint is made to a Magistrate. He is not bound to take any action against the person accused... yet it could hardly be contended that the complaint to the Magistrate did not amount to the institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of the section.

Reference was made to the Calcutta Full Bench ruling Karim Bakhsh v. Queen-Empress (4), in a later case in the Madras High Court. The Sessions Judge of Tinnevely Division v. Sivan Chetti (9), Full Bench, where the principle of that ruling was followed and where the majority of the Full Bench extended the principle by holding that a false complaint to a Village Magistrate or an offence which he was bound to report to the Police under s. 45, Criminal Procedure Code was an institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211, Indian Penal Code. In 1925 the matter came before a Bench of the Patna High Court in Parameshwar Lal v. Emperor (10), and the Bench dissented from the Allahabad ruling Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (3) and followed the Calcutta Full Bench ruling Karim Bakhsh v. Queen-Empress (4). The Allahabad ruling Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (3) has, therefore been considered and dissented from by three other High Courts, and in one case dissented from by a Bench of five Judges. The weight of authority is, therefore, heavily against the ruling Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (3). The reasoning contained in the rulings of the other High Courts is clear and cogent. I, therefore, consider that we should follow the rule of the other High Courts and hold that making of a false charge to the Police of a cognizable offence is the institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211, Indian Penal Code. There is another reason which inclines me to this view, which reason has not been mentioned in any of the rulings. This is the definition of "investigation" and "judicial proceedings" in s. 4 (1) (l) and (m) of the Criminal Procedure Code. "Investigation" includes all the proceedings under this Code for the collection of evidence conducted by a Police Officer or by any person (other than a Magistrate) who is authorised by a Magistrate in this behalf." This clearly shows that "criminal proceedings" include the investigation by a Police Officer. On the other hand proceedings in Court are distinguished, as sub-s. (m) says 'judicial proceeding includes any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath.' These definitions show that if the second part of s. 211, Indian Penal Code were intended to apply only where proceedings had taken place in Court the language used would not have been "if such criminal proceeding be instituted" but "if criminal proceedings be instituted in Court" or "if judicial proceedings be instituted." As the section simply refers to criminal proceeding I consider that it refers to a Police Investigation as well as to a prosecution.

(7) 14 C. 633.

Another reason for accepting the Calcutta view is that it would be unlikely that the Penal Code would make such a distinction in the two parts of the section as regards the amount of punishment, and make the difference depend on consequences over which the accused had no control.

I consider that the commitment of Johri to Sessions was correct, and that the reference should be refused, and that the Sessions Judge should be directed to proceed with the trial of Johri according to law.

King, J.—I agree. The accused is alleged to have made a report to the Police falsely charging certain persons with having committed an offence under s. 304, Indian Penal Code. The Police investigated and found the charge to be totally false. The persons charged were not prosecuted. The question is whether the accused, by causing the Police to make an investigation, should be held to have caused the institution of a criminal proceeding on a false charge, within the meaning of the second paragraph of s. 211, Indian Penal Code.

I think an investigation of an alleged cognizable offence must be regarded as a "criminal proceeding." This is in accordance with the ordinary meaning of those words, as I understand them. Moreover, under s. 4 (1) (l) an "investigation" is expressly defined as including all the proceedings under the Code for the collection of evidence conducted by a Police Officer. So if Police make an investigation in consequence of a false charge of a cognizable offence, I think it must be held that "criminal proceedings" have been instituted on a false charge, within the meaning of the second paragraph of s. 211, Indian Penal Code.

It may be objected that if a false charge resulting in an investigation amounts to instituting a criminal proceeding, then how are we to give effect to the distinction, made in the first paragraph of s. 211, between (1) instituting a criminal proceeding, and (2) charge a person with the commission of an offence? One answer is that the institution of criminal proceedings does not necessarily involve an accusation of any offence. For instance a man may make an application to a Magistrate that security for good behaviour should be taken from a certain person on the ground that he is by habit a robber. No charge is made of any offence, nevertheless the application must, I think, amount to the "institution of criminal proceeding" if the Magistrate holds any inquiry. The same argument would apply to all proceedings requiring security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour. The fact that they are "criminal proceedings" cannot be doubted, but they do not proceed upon the allegation that any offence has been committed. There is, therefore, at least one clear distinction between the institution of criminal proceedings and the accusation of having committed an offence. There may be other distinctions, but it is unnecessary for our purpose to pursue the subject further.

The Allahabad decisions, starting with Empress of India v. Pitam Rai (1), merely assume that the institution of criminal proceedings means the institution in a Criminal Court, or the institution of judicial proceedings. They do not even discuss the question whether "criminal proceedings" cannot be given a wider meaning so as to include a Police investigation. They only Allahabad case decided by a Bench of two Judges is Queen-Empress v. Bisheshwar (3), but with all due respect to the learned Judges I do not think the judgment can be considered satisfactory. The point at issue was not argued and no reasons are given for dissenting from the Full Bench decision in Karim Bakhsh v. Queen-Empress (4). My learned brother has discussed the case law and shown that the Madras and Patna High Courts have expressly dissented from the Allahabad view and have preferred to follow the Calcutta Full Bench decision. I also think that the latter decision is correct and should be followed.

I concur in the order proposed.

By the Court.—We reject the reference and direct that the Sessions Judge will proceed with the trial of the case.

Civil Revision No. 210 of 1931.

November 26, 1931.

NIAMATULLAH, J.

BINDESHARI—APPLICANT

versus

Babu BANSHI LAL—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60—'Cooking vessels', 'artisan', 'tool', meanings of—Gagra, whether cooking vessel—Soap maker, whether artisan—Interpretation of s. 60.

Section 60, Civil Procedure Code, ought to receive a liberal interpretation. The expression "cooking vessels" in the said section does not mean only vessels in which food is actually cooked but includes vessels necessary for cooking operations, such as, a thali and a gagra. [p. 280, col. 2.]

One who practises the art of soap making should be considered to be an artisan within the meaning of that word in s. 60, cl. (b), and the paraphernalia of such a person for the soap factory should be considered as tools of an artisan within the meaning of s. 60 and are, therefore, not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree. [ibid.]

Civil Revision against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Benares, dated the 7th March, 1931.

Mr. Mansur Alam, for the Applicant.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This revision arises out of execution proceedings. The respondent obtained a decree for Rs. 257 against the applicant Bindeshari who is a soap manufacturer by profession. The respondent attached certain articles specified in lists A and B annexed to his application for execution. It was objected by the judgment-debtor that the articles attached were his "cooking vessels" and "tools of an artisan" within the meaning of s. 60, cls. (a) and (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure and were not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree. This objection was dismissed by the lower Court except as regards a batua. Besides the batua exempted, list B mentioned 2 other articles, a thali and a gagra. List A gave particulars of a number of articles which formed the paraphernalia of the judgment-debtor's soap factory. It includes a brass seal for making soap cakes, an iron pan, canisters, tubs etc. It cannot be disputed that all these articles are necessary for manufacturing soap. The order of the lower Court proceeds on the ground that gagra and batua are not cooking utensils and that the articles specified in list A cannot be considered to be tools of an artisan. Accordingly it directed the sale of all the properties attached except a batua as already stated. In revision it is contended that all the articles aforesaid are exempt from attachment and sale in execution of a decree in view of the provisions of s. 60, cls. (a) and (b), Civil Procedure Code.

In my opinion, s. 60, cls. (a) and (b) ought to receive a liberal interpretation. A thali is one of the most necessary cooking vessels in a Hindu household. Gagra, which is a brass jug for water, though not indispensable, is generally part of kitchen requirements in the society to which the judgment-debtor belongs. The expression "cooking vessels" does not mean only vessels in which food is actually cooked but includes vessels necessary for cooking operations. I am satisfied that these two articles are "cooking vessels" within the meaning of s. 60, cl. (a), Civil Procedure Code.

As regards the paraphernalia for manufacturing soap, the question is whether the judgment-debtor can be considered an artisan within the meaning of s. 60, cl. (b) and the articles which form such paraphernalia can be considered to be his "tools". The meaning of the word "artisan" as given by Murray in his Dictionary is "one who practices or cultivates an art", an "artist". If this definition of the word "artisan" be accepted, and there is no reason why it should not be, (though in common parlance it is generally taken to mean handicrafts man) one who practises the art of soap making should be considered to be an artisan within the meaning of that word in s. 60, cl. (b). The word "tool" is defined in the same dictionary as. "Any instrument of manual operation, a mechanical implement for working upon something as by cutting, striking, rubbing, or other process, in any manual art or industry, usually one held in and operated directly by the hand (or fixed in position, as in a lathe), but also including certain simple machines, as the lathe". This is a very comprehensive definition of the word "tool" and would prima facie include the entire paraphernalia for the soap factory of the judgment-debtor. I hold that all the articles mentioned in list A should be considered as tools of an artisan within the meaning of s. 60 (b) Civil Procedure Code and, therefore, exempt from attachment and sale in execution of a decree.

The result is that this application for revision is allowed. The articles attached in execution of the respondent's decree shall be forthwith released.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 421—Jail appeal—Summary dismissal—Discretion unfettered.

Under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code, a Judge receiving an appeal from the Jail has power to dismiss the appeal summarily on perusing the same if he considers there is no sufficient ground for interference. He is not bound to call for the records or to state the reasons and has an unfettered discretion. Queen-Empress v. Nannhu (1), commented upon.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision of an order the Additional Sessions Judge of Meerut rejecting summarily an appeal received from the Jail. The Court was doubtless acting under s. 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which lays down that a Judge on receiving such a petition shall peruse the same, and if he considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering he may dismiss the appeal summarily. The same section lays down in clear words that the Court hearing such an appeal is not bound to call for the record in the case. I have been referred by the learned Counsel to a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court passed three years before Act No. V of 1898 was enacted Queen Empress v. Nannhu (1), which shows that at that time this Court thought that it was advisable for a Court rejecting an appeal summarily to give some reasons. But that opinion of the Full Bench of this Court was not incorporated in the subsequent Code of Criminal Procedure. The law, in my opinion, does not mean to fetter the discretion of a Court receiving such Jail appeals and there is no ground of revision arising from the action of the learned Additional Sessions Judge in this case. I have been into the case on its merits and I find that the order rejecting the appeal summarily was, in the circumstances of the case the only proper order which the Court could have passed. I dismiss the application.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. D. Malaviya and Gopalji Mehrotra, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—In this case although the original mortgage was simple and the mortgagor was to pay interest to the mortgagee, he executed a subsequent document in favour of the mortgagee putting him in possession of two plots in lieu of interest and authorising him to cultivate those plots or to let them out to tenants. No question was raised before the learned Judge of this Court that this document was for any reason invalid. In the ordinary course of the management the mortgagee let out these plots to defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The plaintiffs redeemed the mortgage out of Court, but instead of suing the tenants in the Revenue Court for their ejectment, in case they had such right, they brought a suit for possession in the Civil Court impleading the mortgagees also. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that the tenants could be ejected by the Revenue Court only. The lower Appellate Court took a contrary view. A learned Judge of this Court has overruled the view of the lower Appellate Court and restored the decree of the first Court.

We are of opinion that the view taken by a learned Judge of this Court is perfectly right. The plaintiffs had given authority to the mortgagees either to cultivate the plots themselves or to let them out to tenants. They let them out to tenants. The redemption of the mortgage put an end to the mortgage of the proprietary interest but that did not make the agricultural tenants trespassers from that date. It is unnecessary for us to express any opinion as to whether these tenants can, as the law now stands, be or be not ejected by the Revenue Court. It is, however, obvious that the only remedy, if any, which the plaintiffs have is to eject these tenants through the Revenue Court. The learned Advocate for the appellant relies on the case of Ram Chand v. Ran Hans (1). On the other hand the learned Advocate for the respondent relies on the case of the Collector of Basti v. Sarnam Gharak (2).

We think that when the mortgagees were in possession of these plots and had full authority to let them out to tenants and they gave them to tenants in the ordinary course of their management of the zamin-dari these latter tenants did not become trespassers on the redemption of the mortgage so as to entitle the plaintiffs to use them for ejectment through the Civil Court.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Held, that the editor was guilty of contempt of Court.

Dr. K. N. Katju Messrs Iqbal Ahmad and K. Verma, for the Applicants.

Messrs. K. D. Malaviya and J. C. Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application for taking proceedings against Babu Rao Vishnu Pararkar, Editor, Printer and Publisher of the 'Aj' newspaper. The facts are not now in dispute and may be accepted as substantially set forth in the written statement filed by the editor. On the 28th of January 1931 one Beni Ram Shukul brought a certified copy of a document purporting to be a Will of one Musammam Raj Rani and showed it to the assistant manager Sri Baldeo Das and requested him to publish it as an advertisement. Rupees 15 were paid for the costs of printing and the copy was published in the paper. We may assume in favour of the editor that the certified copy was actually shown to the assistant manager and was taken back after a copy of it had been retained in his office. The editor however does not deny that the assistant manager understood that this was a document filed in a suit pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares. As a matter of fact the copy itself purported to have been taken from a document filed in that suit. It is also now an admitted fact that in the proceedings relating to the substitution of names in that suit the genuineness of the alleged Will of Musammam Raj Rani was seriously disputed by the opposite party.

On these facts there cannot be the slightest doubt that the whole object of publishing the Will in the advertisement column was to announce to the public that a Will of Musammam Raj Rani existed and that the contents of it were as put in the paper. The whole purpose obviously must have been to make the public believe in the genuineness of the document and to act upon it. It is obvious that this was likely to prejudice the mind of the public against the party to the suit who was impugning the genuineness of the document. The publication undoubtedly helped to create an atmosphere in favour of the party relying upon it and adverse to them who were contesting it. If before the disposal of a pending suit in which a Will is disputed newspapers are allowed to interfere in this way with a fair administration of justice there would be a serious harm done.

In Oswald's Contempt of Court (3rd Edition, page 95) it is noted that 'printing, even without comments, and circulating the brief, pleadings, petition, or evidence of one side only, is a contempt; and accounts of a case by notices, advertisements, or circulars, which misrepresent, or present mere ex parte statements of the case, are a contempt.' The publication of this Will was in no sense the publication of a bona fide report of the proceedings of the Court. As a matter of fact it was not published as such. The editor, therefore, cannot claim a qualified privilege on that account. We are satisfied that the publication of this document if unchallenged would seriously prejudice the other party and he has a just right to complain.

We are satisfied that the act of the persons responsible for this paper amounted to a contempt of Court.

Before we pass our final order we would like to have a statement to be made on behalf of the editor, printer and publisher of 'Aj' whether he is prepared to publish an unconditional apology in his paper without delay.

Mr. Malaviya on behalf of the editor states that the editor will be prepared to publish such an apology. Mr. Iqbal Ahmad states before us that in view of the fact that the editor has agreed to publish an apology he does not press for anything except nominal costs. We accordingly issue only a warning to Babu Rao Vishnu Pararkar the editor, printer and publisher and order him to pay one rupee as nominal costs of the applicants.

A. Order accordingly.

Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, is not applicable to the dismissal of an application under O. XXI, r. 90, but there is an inherent jurisdiction in the Court to Civil Revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 21st December, 1929.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Applicant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Agra dismissing an application for the restoration of a previous application under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code.

After the sale had taken place the applicant applied to have it set aside on the ground of material irregularities and fraud as well as substantial loss. On three occasions he took steps to get service effected on the opposite party but each time the summons was returned with the report that he could not be found. On the fourth occasion the Court ordered him to deposit the necessary costs but he failed to do so on the date fixed and no one appeared on his behalf. The application was accordingly dismissed on the 3rd of August 1929.

The applicant then applied to have the dismissal set aside on the ground that he had been ill and could not attend the Court. He subsequently filed an affidavit in support of his application. The application did not expressly mention that it was made under O. IX, Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Subordinate Judge by a summary order has dismissed the application on the ground that the objection admittedly was an execution proceeding and that O. IX, did not apply to such proceedings.

It is contended on behalf of the applicant that O. IX, read with s. 141 Civil Procedure Code applied to the case. While the old Code was in force it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (1) "that inasmuch as Chap. XIX of the Code consisting of 121 sections, is devoted to the procedure in executions, it would be supporting if the framers of the Code had intended to apply another procedure, mostly unsuitable, by saying in general terms that the procedure for suit should be followed as far as applicable."

Order XXI, r. 90 had a corresponding section in Chap. XIX, of the old Code and the remarks of their Lordships apply with an equal force to this procedure. It is, therefore, very difficult to hold that merely because of the general provision contained in s. 141 the procedure provided in this Code for suits shall, as far as it can be made applicable, be followed in all proceedings under O. XXI, so as to make O. IX, applicable to the application for setting aside a sale.

This was the view expressed by one of us in the case of Ganesh Prasad v. Bhagelu Ram (2), where it was remarked that it was difficult to accept the view that O. IX would in terms be applicable to such miscellaneous proceedings. It was further pointed out, that the proper remedy was by applying to the Court to invoke its inherent jurisdiction under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, Daniels, J, however, relying on certain Oudh cases took a contrary view on the question of the applicability of O. IX, Civil Procedure Code, but agreed that s. 151 would certainly apply. Since that case the Calcutta High Court has agreed that the correct view to take is that O. IX, is not applicable but that there is an inherent jurisdiction in the Court to restore an application if a good case is made out. We think that O. IX, Civil Procedure Code cannot be applied to the dismissal of the application under O. XXI, r. 90. As pointed out in Ganesh Prasad's case (2) the applicability of O. IX might involve a further difficulty of allowing appeals from such orders. We, therefore, think that the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in his view when he remarked that O. IX did not apply to these proceedings, although he was wrong in thinking that it was in the nature of an execution proceeding.

We have already pointed out that the application was not limited to O. IX, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judge has not at all considered the question that he had inherent jurisdiction to intervene if a good case was made out. This point is not expressly taken in the grounds of revision before us, but we think that as the learned Judge has not considered the application on the merits but has merely dismissed it thinking that it is not entertainable, he has failed to exercise jurisdiction which was vested in him.

We accordingly allow this revision and setting aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, send the case back to his Court for disposal of the application on the merits. He need only interfere if he is satisfied that good cause was shown.

In the circumstances we direct that the parties should bear their own costs of this

An application for the grant of probate of an oral Will can be entertained under the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881). [p. 286, col. 2.]

The fact that the substance of the oral Will was taken down at the time the Will was made would not make any difference in the eye of the law. That fact would only be a strong piece of evidence to prove the contents of the oral Will. In re the Will of Haji Mohamed Abba (2) referred to. Gokul Chand v. Mangal Sen (1), followed. [p. 287, col. 1.]

First Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 16th December, 1926.

On 16th December, 1930, Sulaiman and Young, JJ, made the following Order of Reference to a Full Bench.—This appeal arises out of an application for grant of Probate, said to have been made by one Pandit Chunni Lal orally on the 29th of April, 1925. Four witnesses were produced on behalf of the applicants to prove the making of this Will by the deceased Chunni Lal. The learned District Judge has remarked that he accepts the evidence of these four witnesses. He has, however, thought that the evidence of these witnesses coupled with a piece of paper containing a note of the substance of the oral Will made by one of the witnesses only makes out the wish of Chunni Lal to make a Will and not a complete Will made by him.

The valuation of this case is over Rs. 15,000 and there is a possibility of the matter going before their Lordships of the Privy Council.

The first point which ought to be settled is whether an application for the grant of a Probate of an oral Will can at all be entertained under the Probate and Administration Act of 1881, which is applicable to this case. Both the oral Will and the application for the grant of Probate were prior to the coming into force of the new Act (Act XXXIX of 1925).

Undoubtedly there is the authority of Gokul Chand v. Mangal Sen (1) in favour of the applicants. That case followed an earlier case of the Bombay High Court In re the Will of Haji Mahomed Abba (2).

The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court thought that if a nuncupative Will was not admitted, the result would be that although the Succession Act expressly permitted an oral Will, it would at the same time be practically nullified. The Allahabad Judges considered that the question of admitting an oral Will to Probate was one of some difficulty, but following the practice of the English Law which, according to them, presented a bridge by which they could escape from the difficulty of finding that whereas a Hindu or Muhammadan can make a good oral Will, no effect can be given to that Will, such as would be given to a written document they were led in that direction by the Bombay ruling.

As far as we can find, these rulings have not been reconsidered since then. It is not necessary to refer to cases relating to Wills prior to Act V of 1881.

An examination of the provision of the Probate and Administration Act of 1881 raises a considerable doubt as to the correctness of the rule of law laid down in these cases. No doubt in s. 3 the definition of "Will" is wide enough to include an oral Will. The definition of "codicil" which does not arise in this case, will however exclude such an idea, because it refers to an instrument. The word "Probate" is defined as "the copy of a Will certified under the seal of a Court of competent jurisdiction, with a grant of administration to the estate of the testator".

Under s. 62 of the Act, an application for Probate has to comply with certain requirements. It should either have the original Will annexed to it, or, in cases mentioned in ss. 24, 25 and 26, it may have a copy, draft or a statement of the contents thereof annexed to it. A reference to ss. 24, 25 and 26 would make it clear that they contemplate the existence of a written Will, which has either been lost, mislaid or destroyed or is in the possession of a person outside the province who refuses or neglects to deliver it up, but has transmitted a copy. None of these sections refer to an oral Will. It would therefore, seem to follow that the application for Probate must either have the Will annexed or, where the original Will exists but is not forthcoming, a copy or draft statement of its contents annexed. Furthermore, s. 62 requires a declaration that the writing annexed was the last Will of the testator and that it was duly "executed". Section 63 also provides that where the Will, copy or draft is written in a language other than English or than that in ordinary use in the Court, there shall be a translation duly certified to be a true and accurate translation.

Section 27 also shows that administration may be granted of the original Will, where it is in existence but not produced, limited until a Will or an authenticated copy of it is produced.

In view of these provisions of law, it is extremely doubtful that a Probate can be granted by a Court of an oral Will.

We also think that, if a Probate could not be granted of an oral Will, it would not necessarily follow that the right of a Hindu or a Muhammadan to make an oral will would be taken away by the Act, and that such an oral Will would be wholly ineffective and inoperative. The property might vest under the Will, unless there is any express provision of law prohibiting it.

We are, therefore, of opinion that before finally disposing of this appeal it is necessary that the following questions of law may be referred to a Full Bench for an authoritative pronouncement:—

(1) Whether an application for the grant of Probate of an oral Will can be entertained under the Probate and Administration Act (Act V of 1881)?

and (2) Whether the Act would apply to a case where the substance of the oral Will was taken down by a witness at the time?

Let this case, therefore, be put up before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for constitution of a Full Bench to decide the above two points.

Messrs. N. S. Asthana and Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. U. P. Bajpai, S. N. Chaube and Hari Ram Jha, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Two questions have been referred to this Full Bench for consideration. They are:—

(1) Whether an application for the grant of Probate of an oral Will can be entertained under the Probate and Administration Act (Act V of 1881).

and

(2) Whether the Act would apply to a case where,

(1) 25 A. 313; A. W. N. (1903) 63.

(2) 24 B. 8; 1 Bom. L. R. 715.

the substance of the oral Will was taken down by a witness at the time?

If the questions were res integra and we had to consider nothing but the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act (Act V of 1881) there would be considerable difficulty in holding that a Probate of an oral Will could be granted.

No doubt the definition of "Will" though not that of "codicil", in s. 3 was wide enough to include an oral Will. But "Probate" was defined as meaning the copy of a Will certified under the seal of a Court of competent jurisdiction, with a grant of administration to the estate of the testator. We then had ss. 24, 25, 26 and 27 relating to the grants limited in operation. The language of these sections presupposed that the Will has been lost or mislaid, or was in the possession of a person residing outside the province or that it was in existence but was not forthcoming. The language of these sections was, therefore, appropriately related to a written Will and not to an oral Will. Lastly, we had s. 62 which referred to the application to be made for Probate which must have the Will annexed or in the cases mentioned in ss. 24, 25 and 26, a copy, draft or a statement of the contents thereof annexed and must also state that it was duly executed. It did not expressly say what was to be done in the case of an oral Will. Section 63 referred to the case where the Will was in a language other than English, of which a translation had to be annexed.

Reading these sections together, it would have followed that the procedure laid down for the grant of a Probate related to the Probate of a written Will and not an oral one.

No doubt under the Succession Act (Act X of 1865) privileged Wills made by soldiers or mariners need not be wholly in writing. Then there was s. 187 which laid down that no right as executor or legatee could be established in a Court of Justice unless a Court of competent jurisdiction had granted Probate of the Will under which the right was claimed. But the language of s. 244 of the Succession Act though similar in some respects to that of s. 62 of the Probate and Administration Act, was not absolutely identical, as the latter section had the words allowing the annexing of "a copy, draft or statement of the contents of the original Will" limited to the cases covered by contents 24, 25 and 26. It might also have been difficult to interpret s. 62 of the Probate and Administration Act not according to its plain language but in the light of the difficulties which might arise under the Succession Act. However, the fact remains that the Bombay High Court In re the Will of Haji Mahomed Abba (2) held that a Probate of a nuncupative Will could be granted. This case was followed by the Allahabad High Court in Gokul Chand v. Mangal Sen (1) where the difficulties were fully appreciated but it was considered more convenient and in accordance with the practice in England to admit Probate of an oral Will.

The Legislature has now consolidated these two Acts and passed the Indian Succession Act (Act XXXIX of 1925). It permits of oral Will being made by Muhammadans as well as by soldiers, mariners and airmen whose Wills are not required to be in writing. The language of s. 276 is almost identical with that of the old s. 62 of the Probate and Administration Act. It does not expressly refer to oral Wills. It must be presumed that the Legislature was aware of the trend of rulings in this country. And when in re-enacting the Statute it has adhered to the former phraseology, we are justified in inferring that the interpretation laid down in the rulings has been approved of by the Legislature.

If oral Wills are not to be admitted to Probate there would certainly be one serious difficulty in the way of soldiers, mariners and airmen. Section 213 of the new Act does not exempt them and lays down that their executor or legatee cannot establish the Will without having obtained Probate or Letters of Administration. If s. 276 does not permit of a Probate being granted of an oral Will, their Wills would be nullified in their effect.

We may further note that although the Will in this case was made before the new Act came into force and would accordingly not be invalid, the application was made shortly before the coming into force of the new Act. The Act lays down a rule of procedure and not a substantive law and, therefore, there is no reason why the new Act should not govern these proceedings. It is also obvious that there was nothing to prevent the applicant from withdrawing this application and filing a fresh application as soon as the new Act came into force. Having given the case our best consideration we think that the rule laid down in Gokul Chand v. Mangal Sen (1) should be followed.

Our answer to the first question is, therefore, in the affirmative.

In our opinion the fact that the substance of the oral Will was taken down at the time the Will was made would not make any difference in the eye of the law. That fact would only be a strong piece of evidence to prove the contents of the oral Will.

A. Answered in the affirmative.

Case No. 40 of 1930.

February 5, 1931.

BOYS, BANERJI AND NIAMATULLAH, JJ.

In the matter of Pandit SHANKAR LAL.

Legal Practitioners—Misconduct—Enquiry should not be started without grave consideration.

It is right and proper that all judicial officers high or low should keep a vigilant eye on the conduct of legal practitioners, of whatever status, who are all ministers of the Court and should in proper cases institute inquiries under the Legal Practitioners Act or make complaints under the Bar Councils Act according to the status of the legal practitioner concerned, but legal practitioners are one and all of whatever status, entitled also to the protection of the Court, and inquiries should not be instituted or complaints made without having given very grave consideration to the reasonable probability of the case against the legal practitioner being well founded. Permanent and undeserved harm may be caused to the reputation of any legal practitioner against whom ill-considered proceedings are taken. [p 288, cols. 1 & 2]

Judgment.—This case came up before us on the 7th of March, 1930, for consideration as to what action, if any, should be taken by this Court under s. 10 (2) of the Bar Councils Act, XXXVIII of 1926, in reference to a complaint forwarded by a Magistrate of the First Class, Mr. Waliullah, charging Pandit Shankar Lal, an Advocate practising at Fatehpur, with gross misconduct, in that he instigated a false complaint against Sub-Inspector Mukhtar Ahmad. The complaint against Mukhtar Ahmad was filed by one Sheodarshan who alleged that, having come to Court for the purposes of giving evidence in a case, he was taken by Sub-Inspector Mukhtar Ahmad from the verandah of the Court to a little distance away under a tree and was there told that he must give evidence identifying a particular accused in another case. Sheodarshan, according to his own account then given, had refused and was threatened by the Sub-Inspector that he would be challaned under s. 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and upon his persisting in his refusal he was slapped once or twice by the Sub-Inspector. On hearing the commotion two or three of the Vakils, according to Sheodarshan, arrived, and the Sub-Inspector went away. Sheodarshan says that he went straight to the Court of Mr. Ganga Ram, Sub-Divisional Officer of Khaga, and complained that he had been beaten by the Sub-Inspector. The Sub-Divisional Officer Mr. Ganga Ram in his evidence corroborates Sheodarshan on this point, and apparently sent for the Sub-Inspector and the Sub-Inspector came and the latter alleged that Sheodarshan was to have been a witness in the case and had been got at by the other side and refused to give evidence. Apparently Mr. Ganga Ram took no further action, and one can only assume that he let the matter slide. Sheodarshan then about 5 o'clock in the evening, the incident having taken place between 1 and 2 o'clock, filed a complaint against Sub-Inspector Mukhtar Ahmad. This all took place on 19th April, 1928, nearly three years ago.

On 11th June 1929 after many delays (we do not suggest that the Magistrate was wholly responsible) the Magistrate, Mr. Waliullah, acquitted the accused Sub-Inspector Mukhtar Ahmad, writing a very lengthy judgment criticising the witnesses for the prosecution, the great bulk of those criticisms having, in our view, no value whatever.

On 17th October, 1929, Mr. Waliullah forwarded his judgment to the District Judge with the present complaint of gross misconduct against Pandit Shankar Lal Advocate, alleging that he had instigated the false complaint made by Sheodarshan against Sub-Inspector Mukhtar Ahmad. This complaint was based on the statements of defence witnesses in the criminal case that Pandit Shankar Lal and another legal practitioner, a Pleader, Mr. Hashmat Ali, had instigated Sheodarshan to make a false complaint against Sub-Inspector Mukhtar Ahmad.

Similar proceedings but under the Legal Practitioners Act were instituted against Mr. Hashmat Ali a Pleader and on 7th March, 1930, when this matter first came before us, we were of opinion that we should not pass any orders until the result of the proceedings against Mr. Hashmat Ali under the Legal Practitioners Act were known. We have now received the report of Mr. Waliullah dealing with the case of Mr. Hashmat Ali. We have been unable to discover that there is any substantial difference between the case against Pandit Shankar Lal and the case against Mr. Hashmat Ali. In the former case, however, Mr. Waliullah's report is unfavourable to Pandit Shankar Lal, while in the latter case he has found that the main charge against Mr. Hashmat Ali has not been proved. In the former case he proceeded merely upon his findings in the case against Mukhtar Ahmad. In the latter case he has held his separate inquiry. The difference in the procedure adopted is due to the fact that Pandit Shankar Lal was an Advocate of this Court and proceedings against him are governed by the Indian Bar Councils Act, while Mr. Hashmat Ali is a Pleader and action against him is governed by the Legal Practitioners Act. The result is that the complaint against Pandit Shankar Lal was forwarded to this Court without any notice to him or any opportunity being given to him of showing cause.

Before we had had the advantage of seeing the result of the inquiry into the conduct of Mr. Hashmat Ali we were disposed on reading the judgment in the case, Sheo-darshan v. Sub-Inspector Mukhtar Ahmad, to hold—

(a) that there was no reason for believing that the complaint made by Sheo-darshan against Sub-Inspector Mukhtar Ahmad was at the very least very probably a true complaint

(b) that there was certainly not sufficient material on the record for issuing any notice to Pandit Shankar Lal calling upon him to explain his conduct or directing the District Judge to make any inquiry.

That opinion of ours even so held has been amply strengthened by the report in the case of Mr. Hashmat Ali. We hold that there is no ground for directing any inquiry into the conduct of Pandit Shankar Lal, and we summarily reject the complaint.

We cannot, however, leave the matter at that without putting on record our view that the Magistrate was unduly hasty in making that complaint. It is right and proper that all judicial officers high or low should keep a vigilant eye on the conduct of legal practitioners, of whatever status, who are all ministers of the Court and should in proper cases institute inquiries under the Legal Practitioners Act or make complaints under the Bar Councils Act according to the status of the legal practitioner concerned, but legal practitioners are one and all of whatever status, entitled also to the protection of the Court, and inquiries should not be instituted or complaints made without having given very grave consideration to the reasonable probability of the case against the legal practitioner being well founded. As much injustice may be done to a legal practitioner by ill-conceived proceedings against him as may be done to the public interest and to the general body of legal practitioners by failure to keep a vigilant eye upon and take proper strong action against cases of misconduct. It is manifest that permanent and undeserved harm may be caused to the reputation of any legal practitioner against whom ill-considered proceedings are taken. We say advisedly "ill-considered" proceedings. It is equally the bounden duty of every judicial officer to initiate proceedings where he has upon grave consideration, reason to believe there has been misconduct as it is to refrain from ill-considered proceedings and vice versa. In the present case the Magistrate could at least and should have refrained from initiating proceedings against Pandit Shankar Lal until he made inquiry into the proceeding which he was initiating against Mr. Hashmat Ali. Even though there may have been no suggestion that Pandit Shankar Lal and Hashmat Ali were acting in concert a failure to establish the case against the latter would have suggested doubts as to the truth of the case against the former. We hold that in this case no complaint should have been filed and the proceedings have disclosed nothing whatever to the discredit of Pandit Shankar Lal, and on the other hand it is more than probable that such action as he took was properly taken. The complaint is rejected.

A copy of the order in the Miscellaneous Case No. 102 against Mr. Hashmat Ali will be attached to this order. Copies of these orders will be sent free of cost to Pandit Shankar Lal.

SCROOPE, J.

J. AGARWALA—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Factories Act (XII of 1911), ss. 34, 41—Failure to report accident—Liability of occupier—Joint trial of occupier and manager—Legality—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 5, 239 (a)—Offences under Factories Act, whether offences of the same kind.

Although s. 34, Factories Act, makes the manager liable for failure to report an accident, under s. 41 of the Act the occupier is also liable for such failure jointly and severally with the manager.

Under s. 41, Factories Act, the liability is fastened on the occupier irrespective of the actual offender for the breach of certain provisions.

Offences under ss. 41 (h) and s. 41 (j) of the Factories Act are offences of the same kind within the meaning of s. 239 (c), Criminal Procedure Code, and so persons jointly and severally liable for offences under the said clauses may be tried together for two offences committed by them.

Criminal Revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Manbhum Sambalpur, dated the 13th October, 1931.

Mr. S. P. Verma, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Manzar, for the Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment—The petitioner Mr. J. Agarwala has obtained a rule from this Court against his conviction under ss. 41 (h) and 41 (j) of the Indian Factories Act. He was tried along with Mr. Rakhit for offences under these sections and they were sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 each under s. 41 (h) and they were sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 each under s. 41 (j). On appeal to the Sessions Judge of Parulia the separate sentences of fine were set aside and it was directed that the fine in each case should be jointly payable as laid down in s. 41. The case for the prosecution was that the petitioner Mr. Agarwala was the occupier of the Tatanagar Foundry at Jamshedpur. The other person with whom he was tried, Mr. Rakhit, was the manager of the factory. These facts are not disputed now, nor is it disputed that when the Inspector of Factories inspected the factory in June last he found that there was no register of workers maintained in the factory as required by s. 35 of the Act. It was also discovered that there had been two serious accidents in the factory but no notice had been sent to the authorities as required under s. 34. Mr. Agarwala, who is now the petitioner and with whose offence alone we are now concerned, pleaded that he was not the occupier of the factory and he could not, therefore, be guilty of any offence. Both the lower Courts have found that in fact he was the Managing Agent of the factory and in fact had control of the factory and was an occupier within the meaning of the Act and Mr. Verma for the petitioner does not dispute this finding now. But his first contention is that under s. 34 it is the duty of the manager to give information about accidents, and not the duty of the occupier and as no duty has been cast on the occupier by this section he should not have been made jointly liable with the manager. But s. 41 is to my mind perfectly clear. It lays down that in case of breach of certain provisions and it is not disputed here that these provisions have been infringed, the liability is fastened on the occupier irrespective of the actual offender. Section 34 is the section which makes the manager liable for failure to report an accident and s. 41 the occupier of the factory, and the reference to "the manager" in the latter section emphasises his joint and several liability along with the occupier.

The next point taken was that the joint trial of the petitioner along with Mr. Rakhit is bad, but I do not see any substance in this when s. 41 (j) makes them jointly and severally liable. Such joint and separate liability could not be enforced in two separate trials. This is a particular provision of the Factories Act and is one of the cases contemplated by sub cl. (2) of s. 5 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The other argument on this point was that assuming that there could be a joint trial of the petitioner along with Mr. Rakhit for each separate offence they could not be jointly triable for both offences at the same time. In other words the contention amounts to this that there should have been two trials of both the petitioner and Mr. Rakhit for the two offences. Section 239 (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure answers this argument. In my opinion the offences under the Factories Act are offences of the same kind within the meaning of that section.

The petition must therefore be rejected.

ROSS AND DHAVLE, JJ.

BHEKDHARI SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTSversusSRI RAMCHANDERJI AND OTHERS—*DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Religious endowments—Dedication—Essentials—Delivery of possession to trustee, necessity of—Construction of deed—Absolute dedication or mere charge—Tests—Estoppel of reversioner—Evidence—Admission of loose zemindari papers at late stage—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XIII, rr. 1, 2.

Where an endowment deed purported to be a deed of dedication of the settlor's properties to certain deities but there was failure to carry out the dedication into effect by delivery of the property by the settlor to the mutawalli, nor was there any change effected in the mode of expenditure of the properties dedicated, a large part being spent for the settlor and a very small one for the deities as before:

Held, that under the circumstances all that the settlor effected by the deed was the creation of a charge on the properties for the service and worship of deities therein mentioned, and not an out and out dedication. Ganga Narain Sircar v. Brindabun Chunder (2), Ram Pershad Doss Adhikaree v. Sreehuree Doss Adhikaree (3), Madhub Chandrav. Saratkumari Devi (4), Siri Thakur Parmod Banabihari v. Atkins (5), Jadunath Singh v. Puhaj Ditary Mohapattur (14), referred to. [p. 296, col. 2.]

Where the donor of a religious endowment constitutes himself the mutawalli there must be some unmistakable act to show that the possession was transferred to the deities and that the donor completely divested himself of the ownership of the property. The effective way of showing this transfer of possession is by altering the land register. Deosaran Bharthi v. Deoki Bharthi (11), relied on. [p. 295, col. 2.]

Where a mutawalli has been appointed to look after the temple properties, an acceptance by the temple pugari of a gift on behalf of the deities would not amount to an acceptance in law because the gift to the deities must be accepted on their behalf by the mutawalli. [ibid.]

Where a reversioner bought a portion of a village, the other portion of which was bought by the deceased for settling that portion on certain deities and both the purchases were effected by the same deed:

Held, that the purchase by the reversioner under the same deed did not raise any estoppel and it was open for him to challenge the settlor's dedication to the deities. [p. 295, col. 1.]

Ordinary zemindari papers on loose-sheets can be fabricated at any time and such papers should not be admitted by the Court at a late stage of the case O. XIII, rr. 1, 2, Civil Procedure Code is intended to provide for papers of this kind. [ibid.]

Civil Appeal from the decision of the Sub-

Judge, Gaya, dated the 31st August, 1927.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, Ganesh Sharma and S. N. Rai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Hasan Imam, G. S. Prosad and N. K. Prosad, for the Respondents.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a reversioners' suit. Plaintiff No. 1 is admittedly the next reversioner to Nanhuprasad Singh who is said to have dedicated his property to certain deities by two deeds. Plaintiff No. 2 is the son, and plaintiff No. 3, the nephew, of plaintiff No. 1. The plaintiffs in effect seek a declaration that the deeds of dedication are colourable and inoperative and do not bind the reversioners. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are the deities to whom the dedication was made, defendant No. 6 is the widow of Nanhuprasad Singh and defendant No. 7 is the minor daughter of Nanhuprasad Singh and was represented, after an amendment of the plaint, by her maternal grandfather; defendants Nos. 8 to 13 are the managers under the deeds of dedication of whom defendants Nos. 8 to 11 were named in the first and second deeds and defendants Nos. 12 and 13 in the second only. Three written statements were filed; the first by defendants Nos. 1 to 6 who pleaded a valid dedication; the second by defendants Nos. 8 to 13 whose defence was similar, and the third by defendant No. 7 who supported the plaintiffs.

The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the dedication and dismissed the suit. The appeal is resisted by defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and by defendants Nos. 8 to 13.

The dedication was by two deeds: (a) Ex. E, dated 2nd November, 1922; and (b) Ex. O, dated 27th August, 1925. The execution and registration of these deeds, though disputed at the trial, has been admitted in the appeal. Nanhuprasad Singh at the time of the first deed had a wife Chandrajote Kuer who was his fourth wife and a daughter by her Musammatt Bachhi Kuer (defendant No. 7). Chandrajote Kuer died in August or September, 1924, and Nanhuprasad Singh married a fifth wife Jaitoon Kuer (defendant No. 6) in June or July, 1925, and died shortly after the execution of the second deed on 12th September, 1925. By the second deed he purported to cancel the first and to re-dedicate the property with certain changes. The first deed was in favour of four deities and by the second a fifth was added, Sri Prabatiji Maharani, whose name was said to have been omitted in the first deed by mistake. Apparently there was a clerical mistake in the first deed because although only four deities are named the word "five" is used in two places in the deed; and the second deed may, therefore, be valid to the extent of this amendment, even if the first deed constituted a valid wakf. Ohandrajote Kuer, who had been designated in the first deed as mutawalli after Nanhuprasad Singh, having died, Jaitoon Kuer was in the second deed named in her place. One of the five managers Sheodayal Singh named in the first deed had died and in his place Dasi Singh (defendant No. 12) was nominated in the second deed and Rameswar Prasad Singh (defendant No. 13) was appointed as head panch with certain powers over the others. In the second deed provision was also made for the devolution of the *mutawalli*ship in the event of Nanhuprasad Singh's leaving male heirs; but this event did not happen. It was the case of both sides that the second deed was intended merely to confirm and supplement the first deed and that it had no effect in law if the first deed was a valid dedication, so far as it varied or added to the first deed. Whether Jaitoon Kuer and the two new managers have been validly appointed depends upon whether Nanhuprasad Singh reserved to himself in the first deed power to make such appointments.

Exhibit E, the deed of 2nd November, 1922, which is the most important document in the case, recites that the executant had no heir except his wife Ohandrajote Kuer and a minor daughter, Musammatt Bachhi Kuer, and that he had installed the idols of Sri Ramchandra, Lachuman, Jankiji and Sheoji, that is to say, the five deities, and he had been meeting the costs of their worship etc, from his own funds and from the income of the zemindari, but so far he had not been able to make any permanent arrangement for management of the thakurbari which would meet the costs of festivities and Rajbhog of the said deities in the way in which these were made in his life. He fears that on his death his heirs and representatives would not perform these works after his wishes and there would be difficulty in holding festivities and in offering the Rajbhog and therefore he was advised to create a wakf of his moveable and immovable properties, which were and should be in his possession, in favour of the deities, to make them absolute owners of the same and to establish for administration and supervision of the said properties a Committee of management.

Therefore he dedicated his whole and entire properties specified in the schedule to the deed, without any exception together with his entire dakhli and khariji rights and incidents of zemindari which he had acquired or should acquire later on to the aforesaid deities and made them absolute owners of his moveable and immovable properties. The deed then goes on to appoint the five persons named therein as managers and mutawallis for the management and administration of the said properties with the proviso that among the said managers and mutawallis he in his lifetime and his wife in her lifetime on his death should be the first (sadr) manager. They were to get their names registered in the Land Registration Department as manager and mutawalli of the said deities. They (i. e., the executant and his wife) were to be in possession and occupation of the wakf properties in the capacity of manager and mutawalli. Then were set forth the objects upon which the income of the wakf properties was to be expended; first, the payment of public demands; secondly, the salaries of amlas and costs of boundaries and earth work and of suits relating to the wakf properties; thirdly, the residue of income was to go towards the maintenance of worship, the offering of Rajbhog and festivities of Sri Thakur Maharaj and the other deities installed in the said thakurbari and temple; and fourthly if any surplus remained after meeting all these expenses, this should be utilized for chanting of kathas and purans, for payment of dakshina to the pandits, for opening of a Sanskrit Pathshala connected with the thakurbari for Sanskrit and Hindi education of boys, for establishment of a sadabarat institution to offer help to fakirs, sanyasis and hungry people. Then comes the following clause:

"Whereas in my lifetime (the original contains words omitted in the official translation "and, after my death, in the lifetime of my wife") I shall get my personal expenses (kharch zati) as well as that of my dependants of my family from the income of the said wakf properties dedicated to Sri Thakurji aforesaid according to my position in life (hasab liyakat apne) and when my minor daughter Musammatt Bachhi Kuer reaches her marriageable age, her marriage expenses shall be met by the income of the wakf property; whereas for the performance of her marriage it will be incumbent upon the manager to meet all suitable expenses from the income of the wakf properties and they shall have no objection whatsoever regarding it."

Then follow provisions for the maintenance of a priest and servant and for the managers' keeping accounts and holding monthly meetings to check the accounts and provisions for the constitution of these meetings. Then come the words:

"Whereas I reserve the right of appointment of managers in my own hand during my lifetime and on my death my wife Musammam Chandrajote Kuer shall exercise this power and on her death the appointment of mutawallis shall be with the consent of all or with the consent of the majority of the surviving managers; whereas if any of the abovenamed managers dies, is turned out or resigns after my or my wife's death, the surviving panches shall hold a meeting and appoint in place of the deceased one, another manager."

And then follow certain provisions relevant to the appointment of managers. Then comes a clause declaring that the properties are iralienable and that there is only a limited power of leasing for five years; and finally the following clause:

"If any property is acquired from the income of the wakf property, the same shall also be treated as accretion to the wakf property and cannot be conveyed by sale or any other deed by anyone."

Before dealing with the construction of this document as a whole, I shall refer briefly to the position of Musammam Jaitoon Kuer and defendants Nos. 12 and 13. The deed is very inartistically drawn and it is by no means clear that the settlor intended the Committee of management to function during his life or the life of his widow; and I am inclined to think that this was not the meaning of the deed. No real distinction seems to be drawn between manager (muntazim) and mutawalli. The settlor reserves to himself and to his wife (if she survived him) the power to appoint managers; but this appears to be merely a power to fill up vacancies among the managers and there does not seem to be any power reserved to appoint a manager who would hold the same position as the settlor and his wife Chandrajote Kuer; and, after the death of the settlor and his wife Chandrajote Kuer it is quite clear that any vacancies in the management are to be filled by the surviving managers. While therefore the appointment of defendant No. 12 Dasi Singh in place of the deceased manager Sheodayal Singh appears to be within the powers reserved, and possibly though doubtfully, the appointment of Rameswar Prasad Singh (defendant No. 13) who however has not appeared to defend the appeal, there seems to be no power to appoint Musammam Jaitoon Kuer as mutawalli if this deed as a whole is read as a dedication out and out of the settlor's property. If however it is construed as creating a charge only, these questions do not arise.

The argument for the appellants is that on the proper construction of the deeds of dedication there was no valid gift, but at the most a charge was created in favour of the deities for their service and worship; and that on the evidence it should be held that the deeds did not take effect as an absolute gift.

Before dealing with this argument it will be convenient to examine some of the authorities on the subject of wakf in order to ascertain how deeds of this nature are to be tested. In Kasheshuree Dassee v. Krishna Kamenee Dassee (1), their Lordships after construing the deed in that case as a deed of endowment said:

"The lower Court has not... tried the fact of the bona fide nature of the endowment with reference to the use of the proceeds from the time of the confirmation of the endowment exclusively for religious and pious purposes, but has confined its decision to the inference drawn from the wording of the deeds. If however the result of this enquiry establish that Koylass himself never intended that the proceeds were so to be used, and accordingly they were not used, the case for the plaintiff must fail."

In Ganga Narain Sircar v. Brindabun Chander (2) their Lordships said:

The tests of a bona fide or a nominal endowment are, how did the founder treat this property, or how have his descendants treated it. Has the income of the endowed lands been continuously applied to the object of dedication. We can never assent to the doctrine—that because a nominal endowment has been once made it is to be regarded as an endowment for ever."

In Ram Pershad Doss Adhikaree v. Sreehuree Doss Adhikaree (3) it was said:

"It may be that a portion of the profits of the lands in the possession of the defendant had been for some time used for the worship of the idol, but that circumstance cannot impose on the respondent the liabilities attached to the office of a shebait."

These decisions were relied upon in 6 Ind. Cas. 26 Madhub Chandra v. Saratkumari Devi (4) and from these and other decisions the conclusions were drawn that in order to support the case that the lands in suit formed the subject of a valid public endowment, it must be established that an absolute grant was in the first place made with the intention that the profits should be applied for the services of the idol; that the profits have since been so applied and that the members of the family of the founder have not treated the property as one the profits of which were mainly intended to be applied for their benefit. This decision was followed in this Court in Sri Thakur Parmod Banabihari v. Atkins (5), where it was said that a dedication to be effectual must be real and not nominal and it must be shown that the grantor completely divested herself of every portion of the property which was the subject-matter of the grant.

It was pointed out that the property had always stood recorded in the name of the estate in the Land Registration Department and that the mode of dealing with the property by the parties interested in the endowment showed that they regarded the property as belonging to the estate; and it was held that the original endowment was altogether ineffectual and that the trust in favour of the idol was never brought into existence. In Jadunath Singh v. Sitaramji (6) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee were dealing with the construction of a deed of endowment and they referred to Sonatun Bysack v. Juggut Soondree Dosee (7) and to Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterji (8). In both of these cases there was a nominal gift at the beginning to the idol, but the subsequent dispositions so cut down that gift that there was no right to the idol such as to make the property pass as an absolute and entire interest in its favour. In the case with which their Lordships were dealing, it was held that there was no such cutting down although half the income was reserved for the remuneration of the members of the grantor's family as managers. But it was pointed out that if the income of the property has been large a question might have been raised in the circumstances, as throwing some doubt about the integrity of the settlor's intention but, as the entire income was only Rs. 800 the payment was of a trifling kind and it was held that there was no impropriety in the ear-marking of a certain part of the money to remunerate the members of the family as managers so long as they should so continue.

In Sri Thakurji v. Sukhdeo Singh (9) it was held that there was no dedication on the following facts: (1) the transfer was of the whole property; (2) the failure to obtain mutation of names; (3) the failure to produce any accounts; (4) the fact that the expenditure on the idol was at the most one-tenth of the whole income; and (5) the absence of any explanation by the widow on any of the above points and of any accounts by her of her managership and dealing with the income. On these facts it was held that although the deed purported to make over the property irrevocably to the idol, there was in fact no intention to dedicate. In Harnarayan v. Surja Kunwari (10) the Judicial Committee laid down that the question whether the idol itself should be considered the true beneficiary, subject to a charge in favour of the heirs for their upkeep, or the heirs should be considered the true beneficiaries of the property subject to a charge for the upkeep of the worship and expenses of the idol is a question which can only be settled by a conspectus of the entire provisions of the instrument. The instrument in that case was a Will. The question therefore was one purely of construction.

In Deosaran Bharthi v. Deoki Bharthi (11) it was held by this Court that there must be something shown to indicate an acceptance on the part of the donee and whether there has been an acceptance and what constitutes acceptance depends on the circumstances of each case. The giving away of the property as the essential ingredient for a valid gift implies a divesting of the ownership in the property by the donor; and it was held that a registered deed of gift cannot take the place of those essentials among which is the complete divesting of the ownership by the donor; and it must be proved in each case, apart from the registration of the document that there was a complete divesting of the ownership and that a registered deed of gift, as any other such document, may be merely a nominal transaction. The essential ingredient that constitutes a gift whether of movable or immovable property in the Hindu Law is the sankalp and the samarpan whereby the property is completely given away, and the owner completely divests himself of the ownership of the property. The evidence of the actions of the party after the deed was gone into as determining the question whether there had been a real dedication i. e., the sankalp and the samarpan of the property; and one of the points emphasized was that there had been no attempt by the donee to have his name mutated in the landlord's sharista. Abadi Begum v. Kaniz Zainab (12), a case of a Muhammadan wakf, their Lordships pointed out the significance of the absence of mutation of names and the suppression of accounts on the question whether there was a dedication or not. In Mahomed Ahsanullah Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (13) the Judicial Committee were dealing with a Muhammadan wakf but the principles are equally applicable to the case of a Hindu endowment. It was observed as follows :

"Their Lordships do not attempt in this case to lay down any precise definition of what will constitute a valid wakf, or to determine how far provisions for the grantor's family may be engrafted on such a settlement without destroying its character as a charitable gift. Their Lordships think there is good ground for holding that provisions for the family out of the grantor's property may be consistent with the gift of it as wakf," and then quote the opinion of Kemp, J., in Muzhurool Haq v. Puhaj Ditary Mohapattur (14):

"We are of opinion that the mere charge upon the profits of the estate of certain items which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family and which after they lapse will leave the whole property intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made, does not render the endowment invalid under the Muhammadan Law."

In that case it was held that the effect of the deed was only to create a charge on the property for the religious and charitable purposes therein mentioned.

Turning now to the construction of the deed as a whole it appears from the recitals that the object of the deed was to provide for the maintenance of the service and worship of the deities in the way in which they had been celebrated in the settlor's lifetime. The operative words, however, purport to dedicate the whole property to the deities and to provide for the expenditure of the entire income under four heads which are exhaustive of everything. Thereafter comes the clause which I have quoted in full; and it is on this clause that the appellants rest their main argument. It is contended that the effect of this clause is to cut down the grant in favour of the deities and in effect to reduce it to a charge on the estate, because the settlor reserves the right to his personal expenses and those of his wife and family according to his position in life, as well as the marriage expenses of his daughter. The clause indicates that no change was to be made in the settlor's scale of expenditure. The words used are hasab liyakat apne, that is to say, he was to get his personal expenses and the expenses of his family out of the estate according to their position in life or according to their means. It is contended that this imposes no limit and further that these expenses are not reserved to the settlor for his expenses as manager. On the contrary they are his personal expenses according to his position in life. Now it is to be observed that this clause follows the clauses which completely exhaust the income of the property. And if it is to be given a meaning it seems as if that the intention was that the donor and his family were to be provided for as they had been in the past, and that what was available for religious purposes was the balance of the income.

On the other hand due weight must be given to the clauses appointing mutawallis and managers of the property. These persons are not members of the settlor's family and that fact that the property to be handed over to them after the death of the settlor and his wife is a strong indication that the intention was to dedicate the property; and reading the deed as a whole, as a pure matter of construction, I should hold that although it is not altogether consistent in its terms, it was an out and out dedication of the property charged with the maintenance of the settlor's family. But that does not conclude the case.

Besides the question of the construction of the deed, a further question is whether it was put into operation by delivery of the dedicated property to the deities and how the property was in fact dealt with after the deed. Learned Counsel for the respondents referred to the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the sankalp and samarpan ceremonies had been performed; a finding which was not contested and argued that this completed the gift. It was further argued for the respondents that the settlor showed his intention to dedicate the property by taking two conveyances in the name of the deities a conveyance of Mauza Rampur which was purchased by the deities through Nanhuprasad Singh and by his relations Jaldhary Singh, Bhekhdhari Singh and Mohipnara Singh in equal shares on 26th June, 1925: (Ex. A), and a conveyance of an interest in Mauza Chapuk on 14th March, 1923, to Nanhuprasad Singh for the deities Ex. A-1. On the other hand there are two other deeds a sale-deed of 17th December, 1923, and a mukarrari lease of the same date both of which Nanhuprasad Singh took in his own name Exs 9 and 10. These deeds therefore do not carry the matter further.

I should here refer to the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the fact that the reversioners joined in the purchase of Rampur by Ex. A amounted to an estoppel barring the suit. In my opinion this view is wrong. The fact that the reversioners or some of them may have purchased 8 annas of a village of which the other 8 annas was purchased by the same deed by Nanhuprasad Singh for the deities does not seem to me to raise any estoppel. There is nothing in this which changed the position of the deities nor is there anything in their entering into the transaction to prevent the reversioners from raising the question as to what the true effect of the dedication was.

The other documents upon which the respondents rely are village papers. It is argued for the appellants that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in admitting these documents in evidence. They were admitted at a very late stage, more than a year after the issues were settled. The learned Subordinate Judge has not recorded any reason for admitting these documents which were produced by the defendants' patwari. They are ordinary zamindari papers on loose sheets which might be fabricated at any time and it is precisely to meet papers of this kind that rr. 1 and 2, O. XIII, were framed. It seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge paid too little regard to these rules of the Code in admitting these papers. So far as the village collection papers are concerned, all that they show is that the names of the deities are entered at the top. This is consistent with the deed (Ex. E) but does not really advance the case. Nor are the papers uniform, because the counterfoil rent receipts (Exs. 2 and 3) show receipts by Nanhuprasad Singh personally. Two other documents were referred to by the respondents; Exs. Z and Z 1. These are decrees for rent in suit of 1926. As rent was claimed for the year 1333 it is clear that the suits must have been instituted in or about September, 1926. But the present suit was brought in February, 1926 and consequently these documents have no probative value.

The decisive questions on this part of the case are whether possession was delivered under the deed and whether the income was appropriated to the deities.

The first question is not answered by the formal finding that the sankalp and samarpan ceremonies were performed. The real meaning of the samarpan ceremony has been made clear by the decision which I have quoted at length above in Deosaran Bharthi v. Deoki Bharthi (11). Here the donor is himself mutawalli for the deities. Consequently the donor and the donee are the same and there must be some unmistakeable act to show that the possession of the property was transferred. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the pujari accepted the gift on behalf of the deities, but this would not amount to acceptance in law because the gift is to the deities and must be accepted on their behalf by the mutawalli and the effective way of showing this acceptance is by altering the land register. But not only did the settlor not effect registration of the names of the deities in substitution for his own name, for these properties, but he actually applied for registration of his own name; subsequently to the deed of dedication in the case of a property which came to him in 1924 Ex. 13. This was part of one of the dedicated properties Mauza Kurwa in which a female member of the family had had a life interest for her maintenance. The fact that the settlor applies for registration of his own name in respect of this property is irreconcilable with the terms of the dedication. The land revenue chalan (Ex. 16-h) of 8th June, 1925 shows that the land revenue was paid by Nanhuprasad Singh as proprietor. Judged by this test therefore the dedication fails.

Nor does the matter stand otherwise when the appropriation of the income is examined.

The result then is that on the defence evidence there is an annual expenditure of Rs. 1,700 on the objects of the trust, while the net income of the property appears to be at least Rs. 5,300. This means that Rs. 3,600 was spent by the settlor's family on themselves. It was argued by learned Counsel for the respondents that to this expenditure must be added what was paid for Rampur and Ohapuk: Exs. A and A 1. But the purchase of property is not one of the objects upon which the income is to be expended and the fact that income was spent in this way is a clear indication that it was not in fact devoted to the objects set forth in the deed, In my opinion the way in which the money has been spent since the so called dedication leads to the conclusion that the deed in fact did not make an absolute dedication or lead to any change in the manner of expenditure. The same inference is to be drawn from the fact that when this deed was executed the settlor was still having children. In fact his wife subsequently died in child-birth and he married again. It is most unlikely in these circumstances that he intended an out and out dedication of his property, especially as the deed on the face of it purports to dedicate his entire estate thus leaving his descendants, of whom he might still have several entirely unprovided for after his own, and his wife's death. A further indication of the nature of his intention is to be found in the fact that he actually executed a second deed by which he made provision for his possible descendants. This shows that he did not understand the full legal effect the apparent language that he used and that he considered that he could still deal with the property. All this seems to me to indicate quite clearly that all that was intended was to charge his property with the service of the deities in order that that service might be maintained as heretofore.

The conclusion to be drawn from the whole evidence in the case is that although as a pure matter of construction the deed is properly to be read as a deed of dedication yet from the failure to carry the dedication into effect by delivery of the property and by effecting a change in the mode of expenditure of the income it must be held that all that the settlor effected by the deed was the creation of a charge on the property for the service and worship of deities therein mentioned and not an out and out dedication. The result is that the appeal must be decreed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and in lieu thereof there will be a decree declaring that the true effect of the deeds in the plaint mentioned is to charge the property of the settlor with the service of the deities therein named and that the deeds do not effect a dedication of the property. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs of both Courts but in view of the nature of the litigation and of the absence of any personal interest in the defendants in defending the suit the costs will come out of the estate and not from the defendants personally.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 24th August, 1929.

Mr. Baldeo Sahay (with him Messrs. Kishundeo Prasad and J. K. Prasad), for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. A. Syed Ali and Ahmed Reza, for the Respondent.

Macpherson, J.—In this appeal we have not found it necessary to call upon the respondents.

It is preferred from a decision of the District Judge of Patna rejecting an application of February 1929, for revocation of a probate granted in 1916 of the unregistered Will of one Beni Das, dated the 21st Jeth, 1321 Fasli.

The first petitioner states that he is mahanth of the Piparpanti math in the District of Monghyr to which the Pundarak math in the Patna District, of which Beni Das, deceased, was mahanth, is subordinate. The other two petitioners state that they and Beni Das were descended from mahanth Nanak Baksh Das as shown in the genealogy annexed to the petition. They all set out that Prem Das who has obtained probate, having accepted the post of pujari under them and having in 1927 refused to account for the proceeds of the properties they made inquiry and learned of the Will for the first time, whereupon they filed a regular suit but were confronted with the difficulty that the genuineness of the Will could not be gone into except in the probate Court. It is admitted that in the regular suit mentioned they claimed that the properties in suit did not belong to the testator but were properties of his math or of the Thakurji. In their application for revocation they also set out as follows in para. (9):

"For that the applicant obtained the grant of probate fraudulently also by concealing from the Court the fact that Beni Das had no property of his own and all the properties detailed in his petition belonged either to the math or to the Thakurji and thus no citation was issued to the ultimate mahant your petitioner No. 1."

Upon this issue No. 5 was framed:

"Are the applicants disqualified from maintaining this application by their denial in para. 9 thereof that the testator had any estate of his own."

This reference is of course to s. 283 (1) (c) of the Succession Act, under which a citation is to be issued to all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased and the numerous decisions that a person disclaiming interest in the estate is not entitled to citation and has no locus standi in the Probate Court. When this issue was framed the petitioners-appellants applied to withdraw para. (9) of their application on the ground that the averment therein contained that the properties detailed in the application for Probate never belonged to Beni Das is liable to misconstruction, and purported to explain their ground for revocation as really heirship. The application was rejected by Mr. Wali Mahomed as inconsistent and confusing, and when the case came to trial his successor cited numerous rulings, including Abhi Ram Das v. Gopal Das (1), Srigobind Pershad v. Laljhari Kuar (2), Kalajit Singh v. Parmeshar Singh (3), Mahasundar Kuar v. Ratan Prasad Sahi (4), Devendra Prasad Sukul v. Surendra Prasad Sukul (5), and came to the conclusion that, on the state of the authorities which could not be distinguished and which were binding upon him, he had no option but to hold that the petitioners had no locus standi to maintain the application to revoke the grant of Probate.

Mr. Baldeo Sahay on behalf of the appellants eventually comes to the position that he cannot withstand the weight of authority which has been cited. Indeed there are also other decisions to the same effect: Pirojshah Bikhaji v. Pestonji Merwanji (6) and Gopal Chandra Bose v. Asutosh Bose

(7) 20 Ind. Cas. 342.

(7) (20 Ind. Cas. 342) and the law may be taken to be settled. But the learned Advocate strenuously contends that the rulings cited do not cover his case inasmuch as petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 are heirs of the deceased in any view of the case. To my mind the petition itself in particular para. (3) taken with the genealogy by which it is expressly controlled, goes to show that the petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 are not at all blood relations of the deceased Beni Das. The genealogy is a mixture of blood and spiritual relationship and a perusal of it leaves no room for a claim that there is any actual relationship at all between the deceased and the petitioners Nos. 2 and 3. The application for revocation is really based upon the same dispute as to title as the civil suit is. There is indeed a definite allegation that the deceased had no estate, and the substance of the application is that the properties which the testator purported to make over by Will were properties which he held not in his personal but in his official capacity and which actually belonged to the math or the Thakur. In my mind it is clear that the decision under appeal is correct and that the petitioners had no locus standi to maintain the application for revocation of the probate.

I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs: hearing fee five gold mohurs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 107 (1)—Issue of area decided under s. 106—Decision to the contrary in rent suit—Validity—Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

Under the provisions of s. 107 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, a Court trying a rent suit has no jurisdiction to decide an issue between the parties which has already been finally and definitely decided by a decision under s. 106 of the said Act.

So while the decree in a rent suit ought to be regarded as a valid decree so far as the liability of the parties during the years then in suit is concerned, a decision therein that bhaoli rent is payable only in respect of certain areas cannot be treated as res judicata to determine the areas for which such rent shall be payable in subsequent years, where such decision is at variance with an earlier decision under s. 106 of the Act. Maharaja Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Yunus Momin (1), followed.

Appeals from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 2nd January, 1929, modifying that of the Munsif, Samastipur, dated the 2nd July, 1927.

Messrs. Parmeshwar Dayal and Siva Narayan Bose, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. K. Jha and P. Jha, for the Respondents.

James, J.—These appeals arise out of four suits for arrears of cash and produce rents. After the preparation of the Record of Rights there were proceedings under ss. 105 and 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by which the tenants' cash rents were settled; and it was determined for what land bhaoli rent was payable. In 1923 the landlords instituted suits for arrears of rent based on the Record of Rights as finally framed under s. 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenant-defendants took the defence that the rents had been reduced by agreement immediately after they were settled, and that remissions had been annually made by the landlords. They also contended that the area for which bhaoli rent was payable was less than that stated in the plaint. The Munsif found that since the settlement of rent the landlords of the holdings had always realised rents at lower rates than those settled; and he decreed the suits at the rents which appeared in the finally published Record of Rights before proceedings had been taken under s. 105. For the area for which bhaoli rent was payable the Munsif, apparently not noticing that this area had been increased by the operation of the decrees under s. 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, gave decrees to the plaintiffs in accordance with the Record of Rights as finally published under s. 103-B of the Act. The plaintiffs have now again sued for arrears of rent. There is not at present any dispute between the parties regarding the amounts payable as cash rent, but the plaintiffs claimed bhaoli rent for the areas which were recorded as bhaoli in accordance with the decisions under s. 105, while the defendants took the plea that the bhaoli rent was payable only for the area finally published under s. 103-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act as bhaoli land. The Munsif of Samastipur held that the decision under s. 106 operated as res judicata and that the decision of the Rent Court in 1924, so far as it was at variance with the decrees under s. 106, was without jurisdiction. His decision was reversed on appeal by the District Judge of Darbhanga, who held that the decision of 1924 operated as res judicata on the question of the area for which bhaoli rent was payable.

The learned Advocate for the plaintiff-appellants argues that the decision of 1924, so far as it is concerned with the area for which bhaoli rent is payable, should be regarded as affecting only the years in respect of which rent was then claimed; and that in view of the provision of ss. 107 and 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the Munsif and the District Judge had no jurisdiction to determine what was the permanent character of this land. He relies mainly on the decision in Maharaja Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Yunus Momin (1) in which it was held that the provisions of s. 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had this effect, that the decision of a Rent Court, which was at variance with the previous decision under s. 105 of the Act, could not operate as res judicata. Mr. Pitamber Jha on behalf of the respondents does not suggest that the decision under s. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not operate as res judicata in 1924; but he argues that when the question was raised by the defendant it was necessary for the Munsif to decide it, and the effect of his decision as res judicata is not affected by the question of whether he committed an error of law in arriving at it. He also points out with respect to the decision in the case of Maharaja Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Yunus Momin (1) that s. 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act though it prohibits a Court from entertaining suits or applications which have formed the subject matter of a suit under s. 106, does not prohibit a Court from entertaining defences which may be at variance with the decision of Revenue Officers under s. 106. Now, it is true that the question of whether the Court in arriving at its decision committed errors of law may not affect the question of whether the decision operates as res judicata between the parties; but the question is of whether the Courts in 1924 had jurisdiction to determine whether bhaoli rent was or was not payable for the land in dispute in the years subsequent to those years in respect of which the suits of 1923 were instituted. On this matter I consider that the case should be held to be governed by the decision in Maharaja Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Yunus Momin (1). Section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act may not in express terms prohibit a Civil Court from entertaining a defence which is at variance with a decision under s. 106; but it is clear from the provisions of s. 107 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, that a Court trying a rent suit has no jurisdiction to decide an issue between the parties which has already been finally and definitely decided by a decision under s. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In these circumstances I consider that while the decrees of 1924 ought to be regarded as valid decrees so far as the liability of the parties during the years then in suit are concerned, the decision that bhaoli rent is payable only in respect of certain areas cannot be treated as res judicata to determine the areas for which such rent shall be payable in subsequent years, in defiance of the provisions of s. 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

I would, therefore, allow the appeals, set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decrees of the Munsif. The plaintiffs will be entitled to their costs throughout Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 53—Benami transfer by insolvent—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court to consider nature of transaction, whether controlled by s. 53.

In the case of benami transactions the limitation of two years imposed by s. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, does not apply, and an Insolvency Court can decide the question whether a transfer by an insolvent is benami under s. 4 of the Act even if the transaction took place more than two years before the presentation of the petition in insolvency. *Anwar Khan v. Section 4 of the Act is controlled by s. 53 only in respect of real transfers made by the insolvent. [p. 301, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 19th July, 1929.

Messrs. S. N. Sahay, R. N. Lal, S. N. Rai and B. N. Rai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. Dayal and Bhagwan Prasad, for the Respondents.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—Pattilal Chaudhuri and his sons, who are members of a joint family, were adjudged insolvent on an application presented on the 9th of September, 1926. The order of adjudication is dated the 8th of June, 1927. One of the creditors, Radhakishun, filed a petition before the Receiver appointed in the insolvency proceedings, stating that the insolvents had fraudulently concealed some of the properties belonging to them and that some other properties had been fraudulently transferred by them within two years of the presentation of the petition for insolvency, and he asked the Receiver to take proceedings to annul those transfers and to take possession of the properties sold. The Receiver made a report on the 25th of August, 1927, to the District Judge in which he dealt with no less than fifteen properties and he asked the Court to annul the transfers in respect of the properties which had been transferred within two years of the presentation of the petition in insolvency, and he further asked the Court to make a declaration to the effect that certain other properties belonged to the insolvents and that they had vested in the Receiver. On the same date he filed a regular petition before the District Judge for annulling some of the transfers and for declaring other transfers to be void so far as the Receiver was concerned. Objections were made by the persons claiming the properties set out in the Receiver's petition and the learned District Judge proceeded to act under s. 53 in respect of the transfers which were made within two years of the presentation of the petition and under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act in respect of the other properties which the Receiver alleged really belonged to the insolvents but in respect of which fictitious deeds of benami nature had been executed. The learned District Judge has, it appears, made an order annulling all the transfers made within two years of the petition of insolvency and, declaring the other transactions to be benami and fictitious transactions, declared that the properties covered by those transactions had vested in the Receiver.

Two of the claimants in respect of two of the properties have come up in appeal to this Court. Appeal No. 169 is by Bisesar Chaudhuri who claims the property which is serial No. 13 in the Receiver's petition to the District Judge. This property consists of 2 bighas 2 dhurs of occupancy kasht land in village Sharfuddinpur, bearing khata No. 3. The appellant in Appeal No. 193 claims the property No. 8 in the said Schedule and consists of 1-anna milkiat share in village Madhopur, tauzi No. 1774.

The facts relating to these two properties have to be dealt with separately; but there is one question which is common to both the appeals and may be disposed of in the beginning. As regards property No. 13 the allegation is that this property, viz, the 2 bighas 2 dhurs of occupancy kasht land in Sharfuddinpur was purchased by the insolvents under a deed of sale, dated the 2nd of March, 1909, in the farzi name of one Bhondu Lal Chaudhuri. The Receiver's case is that Bhondu Lal Chaudhuri was a mere benamidar for the insolvents and the purchase was really made by the insolvents and that they have continued in possession ever since the purchase. The case of the Receiver as regards property No. 8 is that the insolvents had executed a benami deed of sale in respect of this property on the 24th of July, 1923, in the name of one Jaikishun Chaudhuri, but as a matter of fact there was no transfer and that Pattilal Chaudhuri the insolvent has continued in possession of this property also. The question for consideration, therefore, is, whether the two properties forming the subject-matter of these appeals do really belong to the insolvents and whether the deed of sale taken in the name of Bhondu Lal and the deed of sale executed in favour of Jaikishun Chaudhuri were mere benami transactions. These two transactions took place more than two years before the presentation of the petition in insolvency, and it is contended by the learned Advocate for the appellants that having regard to the provisions of s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Court had no jurisdiction to annul these transactions and to make the declaration that these properties belonged to the insolvents and had vested in the Receiver. As I have already stated the learned District Judge proceeded in respect of these two properties under s. 4 of the Act. This section is comprehensive in its terms and gives power to the Court to decide all questions, whether of title or priority or of any nature whatsoever, and whether involving matters of law or of fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognisance of the Court, for which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such case. Prima facie therefore, the District Judge had under this section complete jurisdiction to decide the question whether the properties in dispute do really belong to the insolvents or to the persons who claim them. It is, however, contended that the opening words of this section:—

"Subject to the provision of this Act"

indicate that the Court in exercising jurisdiction under the section is bound by the limitations imposed by s. 53; in other words, that in every case in which a transaction is challenged such transaction must have taken place within two years of the presentation of the petition in insolvency in order to give jurisdiction to the Court to decide the question of title raised before it. In my opinion this contention is not sound. Section 4 is controlled by s. 53 only in respect of transfers made by the insolvents. Section 53 deals with a real transfer of the property made by the insolvent whereby title has passed from the insolvent to the transferee. In such cases the law gives power to the Court to annul such real transfers if made within two years of the presentation of the petition provided they are not transfers made before and in consideration of marriage or made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration. The transactions that we are now concerned with are alleged by the Receiver not to be transfers at all. It is alleged in one case that, although the property was purchased in the name of one Bhondu Lal, it was really a purchase made by the insolvents. In the other case it is alleged that although the insolvent purported to execute a deed of sale in favour of Jaikishun Chaudhuri, as a matter of fact there was no sale and the property still belongs to the insolvents. Section 53, therefore, has absolutely no application to the facts of the present case, and the jurisdiction of the Court in dealing with these two transactions under s. 4 is in no way controlled by the limitation imposed by s. 53.

Section 4 was introduced for the first time in the Act of 1920 and did not find a place in the Act of 1907. There was a difference of opinion between the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts on the question whether the Insolvency Court could or could not deal with the question of title to property. The Calcutta High Court had in the year 1918 held that the question of benami could not be determined by the Insolvency Court, and any claim made by the Receiver or the creditor that the property is really the property of the insolvent can only be enforced by a suit in the regular course [see Nilmoni Choudhury v. Durga Charan Choudhury (1).] The learned Judges, however, had observed even then that "where the benami character of the title is admitted or where the veil is transparent and the insolvent is in substantial beneficial possession, the Court may order the delivery of the property to the Receiver". The Allahabad High Court, however, had in 1914 come to the contrary conclusion in Bansidhar v. Kharagjit (2). There were thus two conflicting decisions on the same point under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907. The Legislature when enacting the Act of 1920 introduced s. 4 in the Act for the first time, whereby extensive powers have been given to the Court to decide all questions of title or priority or of any nature whatsoever which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognisance of the Court.

That the Court has jurisdiction to decide questions of benami under s. 4 and that its jurisdiction in this respect is not controlled by the limitations imposed by s. 53 has been held in various cases in the Allahabad, Lahore and Madras High Courts. In the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Anwar Khan v. Muhammad Khan (3) the majority of the Judges held that an Insolvency Court can try a question of title raised on the basis of a transfer which took place more than two years prior to the adjudication of the transferor as an insolvent, and they observed that s. 53 does not deal with the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court but only lays down certain rules of law affecting those transactions which fall within its scope and that it does not control or restrict the jurisdiction conferred upon a Court by s. 4 to decide on questions of title. Sen, J., no doubt took a different view, but the decision of the majority of the Judges was in favour of the view that s. 4 is not controlled by s. 53.

In Hari Chand Rai v. Moti Ram (4) Sulaiman, J., held that a transfer which is wholly fictitious from the very beginning is of no effect and does not require to be annulled, but all that the Court has to do in such a case is to decide that it is void and that such decision will bind the claimant of the property as if it were by an ordinary Civil Court; and he further held that the limitation of two years prescribed by s. 53 applied only to such cases where the transfers when originally made were good transfers of property and not to cases in which there was no real transfer at all. In this case also the other learned Judge, Mukharji, J., took a different view; but the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court referred to above must be held to have overruled the view expressed by Mukharji, J. In fact, one of the learned Judges, Dalal, J., observed that every Judge of the Allahabad High Court except one, who had to consider the point, had decided in favour of the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court.

In 92 Ind. Cas. 573 [Chittammal v. Ponnusami Naicker (5)] the Madras High Court held that it was open to the Court on a proper application being made under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to try the issue whether the insolvent is entitled to the property or not.

The same view was taken by the Lahore High Court in 97 Ind. Cas. 174 [Wazir Singh v. Janki Das (6).]

The learned Advocate for the appellants has referred to the decision of the Oudh Chief Court in 123 Ind. Cas. 217 [Sheikh Amjad Ali v. Nand Lal Tandon (7).] This case, however, does not support the appellants at all. In this case the transaction under consideration was a release by the insolvent made more than two years before the date of adjudication. In considering the transaction the learned Judges observed as follows: We cannot accede to the argument of Counsel that a deed of release accompanied by mutation and transfer of possession is not a transfer. It may have been a fraudulent transfer in order to defeat the creditors of the transferor, but it is none the less a transfer." It was, therefore, on a finding that there had been a transfer that the learned Judges held that s. 53 applied and that it could not be voided if made more than two years before the adjudication. They, however, distinguished the decision of the Calcutta High Court in 102 Ind. Cas. 115 in [Fool Kumari Dasi v. Khirod Chandra Das Gupta (8)] with the observation that that decision dealt with a case in which the transaction was held to be benami and that there had been no transfer in fact, nor was the Court required to annul the transfer. This decision, therefore, is in favour of the view that in benami transactions the limitation of two years imposed by s. 53 does not apply, and the Court can decide the question under s. 4 even if the transaction took place more than two years before the presentation of the petition in insolvency.

There is another fact which also deserves consideration. Under s. 28 (2) of the Act the effect of the making of an order of adjudication is that the whole of the property of the insolvent vests in the Court or in the Receiver and becomes divisible among the creditors. Section 56 provides that upon the appointment of the Receiver the property of the insolvent shall vest in him and s. 59 provides that subject to the provisions of the Act the Receiver shall with all convenient speed realize the property of the debtor and distribute dividends among the creditors entitled thereto. Therefore, all properties belonging to the insolvent vest in the Court or in the Receiver. When a question is raised whether a certain property is a property of the insolvent or not, it is clearly the duty of the Court to determine the question, and the determination of this question is in no way controlled by the provisions of s. 53. As I have already stated, s. 53 deals with cases where title to the property has passed from the insolvent to a third person. The cases we are now dealing with are cases in which the allegation is that the property is still the property of the insolvents and title has not passed to third persons. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the order made by the District Judge was with jurisdiction.

[His Lordship then dealt with the facts of the case and with reference to the property in dispute in Appeal No. 169 came to the following conclusion :—]

(8) 102 Ind. Cas. 115; 31 C. W. N 502; A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 474.

Having regard, therefore, to the evidence of the case, I am not prepared to hold that the view taken by the learned District Judge in this case was incorrect. I would, therefore, hold that the property is a property of the insolvent and that the Receiver may sell this property in order to pay off the creditors. Appeal No. 169 must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

[His Lordship then discussed the evidence with regard to the property in dispute in Appeal No. 193 and concluded as follows:]

I am, therefore, of opinion that the evidence adduced in the case is not sufficient to prove that the transaction was a benami transaction, or that Pattilal the insolvent continued in possession thereof. It is said that there was no reason why Jaikishun should stand surety for him. It appears that they were friends, and that subsequently they have become relations by marriage. There is the further fact that ultimately the property was mortgaged in order to pay off the debts of the insolvents; but these are circumstances which merely raise a suspicion of benami and they do not amount to legal evidence of the fact of benami. I would, therefore, hold that in the case of this property (No. 8 of the Receiver's Schedule) the view taken by the learned District Judge is not correct. I hold that it has not been established that the deed of sale of the 24th of July, 1923, was a benami transaction. I would set aside the order of the District Judge and decree Appeal No. 193 with costs.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, BIHAR AND ORISSA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 61, 66 (2)—Application for copy of Judgment of Assistant Commissioner—Proper Court-fee—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 11 (a)—Application by person not expressly authorised—Validity.

The words "judgments, decrees or orders passed by such Court, Board or Officer" in Sch. II, Art. 1-A, Court Fees Act, are wide enough to cover an application to an Assistant Commissioner of income-tax who has power to make the order and a copy of whose order is necessary for the purpose of preferring an appeal to the Commissioner under the Income Tax Act and such an application, therefore, requires a Court-fee stamp of two annas. [p. 304, col. 1.]

An application for copy of the judgment in an Income-tax appeal is properly within the meaning of the words 'attendance before an Income Tax officer' in s. 61, Income Tax Act, and can be made only by the assessee or a person expressly authorised in writing in that behalf. Further, it does not follow that because an agent is duly authorised to conduct the business of the appeal before the Assistant Commissioner, he is ipso facto authorised to obtain copies of the Assistant Commissioner's judgment. [p. 304, cols. 1 & 2.]

Messrs. K. P. Jayaswal and A. K. Mitra, for the Assessee.

Mr. C. M. Agarwala, for the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—The first and preliminary point which has to be decided in this case is one of limitation and it has been stated by the Commissioner for the opinion of the Court. The question is whether the application which was made under s. 65 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act by the assessee was in time reckoning the period of one month from the date of the passing of the appellate order made by the Assistant Commissioner. The appellate order was passed on the 31st March, 1929. The first application purporting to be under s. 65 (2) was received in the office of the Commissioner on the 16th May, 1929, that is to say, it was, if that date was to be taken as the correct date, 16 days out of time. The applicant purports on this basis to say that the 16 days was consumed in obtaining a copy of the appellate order.

On the 15th April the Pleader who had argued the case before the Assistant Commissioner sent a letter to the office of the Assistant Commissioner accompanied by a one anna stamp asking for a copy of the Assistant Commissioner's appellate order. He further asked to be informed of the estimate of cost for the certified copy and said that on receipt of that notification he would deposit the sum in the local treasury. Furthermore, his application was not accompanied by a vakalatnama from the assessee expressly authorising him to obtain a copy of the Assistant Commissioner's decision. The applicant was asked by postcard to file a Court-fee stamp of two annas as well as an express authorisation to enable the Pleader to obtain the copy. On the 21st April he did in fact file the authorisation and the Court-fee stamp of two annas and his application was then found to be in order and the copy was made ready on the 3rd May and was despatched by post to the address of the applicant and received by him, it must be presumed, on the 4th May. Such are the facts as found by the Commissioner.

The Department say that the application of the 15th April was not an application at all. It suffered from two defects which prevented it from being considered as such, the first defect being that it did not bear a stamp of two annas but one of one anna only, the second being that it did not contain an express authorisation in writing signed by the assessee himself. In answer to this objection by the Department the assessee contends that the fee of two annas cannot legally be exacted. If we turn to the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act we see set forth detailed provisions as to certain documents in the nature of applications or petitions which must bear the stamp-fee prescribed by the particular Local Government, the matter of the precise stamp fee being within their purview as independent finance authorities. Now the scale of so called fixed fees set forth in this Schedule is divided up into classes respectively marked (a) and (b). Taking the documents referred to in group (a) first, the first paragraph refers to applications or petitions which are made by any persons having dealings with the Government and relating to the subject-matter of these dealings when such application is presented to any officer of the Customs or Excise Department or to any Magistrate and a fee of two annas is leviable upon such applications. The second paragraph refers to applications or petitions by persons holding temporarily settled land under direct engagement with the Government and relating to such subject-matter. The third paragraph refers to applications which relate to conservancy or improvements of a municipal character. The fourth paragraph refers to applications to Civil Courts and Small Cause Courts and to Collectors of Revenue in cases where the amount of the value of the subject-matter is less than fifty rupees. The fifth paragraph, which is the one with which we are particularly concerned, refers to applications for obtaining copies or translations of judgments, decrees or orders which have been passed by Courts, Boards or Officers and in respect of those applications also a fee of two annas is required. That particular paragraph opens with the words

"or when presented to any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court or to any Board or Executive Officer" and it is argued by Mr. Jayswal on behalf of the assessee that in this matter the Assistant Commissioner cannot come under the head of Revenue Court and he is not, according to his argument, an Executive Officer and, therefore, that judgments, decrees or orders which are passed by him do not come within the purview of this paragraph. In my opinion that is giving in the first place undue weight to the first words of the paragraph which are not the most material words. The most material words of the paragraph are the words "judgments, decrees or order passed by such Court, Board or Officer" and they are intended to cover every case of every kind in which a judgment, decree or order has been passed by any Court, Board or officer capable of passing such judgment, decree or order and having regard to what I think is the proper meaning of the words it certainly covers an application to an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax who has power to make the order and a copy of whose order is necessary for the purpose of preferring an appeal to the Commissioner under the Income-tax Act.

The second defect in the notice of the 15th April was that it was not properly authorised by a vakalatnama. The justification for the demand of such express authorisation is to be found in two matters in the Income-tax Act. In the first place there is s. 61 which states as follows:—

"Any assessee, who is entitled or required to attend before any Income-tax authority in connection with any proceedings under this Act, may attend either in person or by any person authorised by him in writing in this behalf."

The next point to be considered in the Income-tax Act is that the proceedings are of a most secret character and heavy penalties are imposed upon any officer who makes disclosures of matters which under the Act are confidential and nothing can be considered more confidential than the actual assessment which is made. Now it does not follow that because an agent is duly authorised to conduct the business of the appeal before the Assistant Commissioner he is ipso facto authorised to obtain copies of the Assistant Commissioner's judgment or indeed to perform any act preparatory or incident to the conduct of an appeal. It is, as the learned Assistant Government Advocate points out, quite conceivable that whatever the merits of the gentleman who was employed in conducting the appeal before the Assistant Commissioner his services may be dispensed with after the matter had passed the Assistant Commissioner's hands and it is quite conceivable that circumstances might arise in which it was considered by the assessee highly undesirable that he should receive copies of the decision which had actually been given. In these circumstances it was reasonable and proper for the Department to require that any person asking for a copy of the judgment should be expressly authorised in writing in that behalf and the application for a copy of the judgment is properly within the meaning of s. 61—"attendance before an Income tax Officer" in connection with proceedings under the Act. Inasmuch as the application dated the 15th April cannot be considered to be a valid application and inasmuch as the authorities are not bound to take any notice of an application which is not in order, the time which the assessee was entitled to deduct would only run from the 21st April when he in fact put his application in order forwarding the proper stamp and the letter of authorisation and in these circumstances the time which he is allowed to deduct falls short by one day of the allowance which would bring him within the period of one month. In these circumstances the application before the Commissioner for the statement of the case was barred and we are not competent to go into the other matters which were raised by the Commissioner on the hypothesis that his view as to limitation might be unsound. I would, therefore, answer the question of the Commissioner as to whether the application before him was barred in the affirmative and would decline to go into the other points raised in the statement of the case. The application to state a case was made at the instance of the assessee who fails and he must pay Rs. 200 by way of costs.

Messrs. A. Viswanatha Ayyar and A. Ramaswami Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. C. Seshachala Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The 3rd defendant is the appellant. He held a mortgage dated the 26th May, 1919, over the suit property which consists of two items. A mortgage of the same property had been executed in favour of the plaintiffs on 10th July, 1919. On 23rd November, 1925, the first item of the suit property was sold to the 3rd defendant in discharge of the mortgage over the two items. The 3rd defendant thus became the owner of the 1st item and as a result of his purchase the 2nd item was freed from his mortgage. When he purchased item No 1, the 3rd defendant did not know about the existence of the mortgage in plaintiffs' favour. The suit property belonged to the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs to enforce their mortgage over the two items. The appellant contended that his prior mortgage-right over the first item should be regarded as still alive and that the plaintiffs should redeem it before they could succeed. This contention was rejected by the lower Courts and the only question argued in the second appeal is whether this contention should have been upheld.

It is common ground that the question should be decided with reference to the intention of the appellant as to when he purchased item No. 1, whether he had intended to keep his own mortgage over it alive as a shield against the other mortgagees. Section. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that if a mortgagee or a chargeholder of property acquires the interest of the mortgagor or the owner, his own charge or mortgage becomes extinguished unless he declares by express words or necessary implication that it shall continue to subsist or such continuance would be for his benefit. The section raises a presumption in favour of merger rebuttable by proof of an intention to the contrary. This is no evidence regarding the intention of the 3rd defendant either way. In Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Pemsukhdas (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that, where a man who pays off a mortgage has a right to extinguish it and a right to keep it alive, in the absence of express evidence of intention, he should be assumed to have acted according to his interest. See also Mohamed Ibrahim Hossain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (2). In Ayyareddi v. Gopala-krishnayya (3), the Privy Council has again remarked as follows:—

"It is now settled law that where in India there are several mortgages on a property, the owner of the property, subject to the mortgages may, if he pays off an earlier charge treat himself as buying it and stand in the same position as his vendor, or to put it in another way, he may keep the incumbrance alive for his benefit and thus come in before a later mortgagee."

As pointed out by Sir Gour in his Transfer of Property Act, Vol. II the Privy Council 'by laying emphasis on the proviso and the intention of the parties in s. 101' were inclined to minimise the force though without entirely ignoring the existence of the initial statutory presumption in s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act." In Thiruvengadam Pillai v. Sabapathi Pillai (4) Phillips, J., went to the extent of holding that "when a person purchasing property discharges a prior mortgage on the same and claims subrogation therefrom, the Court should start with the presumption that a person paying off a mortgage intends to keep it alive if it is for his benefit to do so." (See the head note). Effect to the decisions of the Privy Council has been given in the new s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act which replaces the old section. The new section runs as follows:

"Any mortgagee of, or person having a charge upon, immovable property, or any transferee from such mortgagee or charge-holder, may purchase or otherwise acquire the rights in the property of the mortgagor or owner, as the case may be, without thereby causing the mortgage or charge to be merged as between himself and any subsequent mortgagee of, or person having a subsequent charge upon the same property; and, no such subsequent mortgagee or charge-holder shall be entitled to foreclose or sell such property without redeeming the prior mortgage or charge, or otherwise than subject thereto."

If we give effect to the principle of the Privy Council decisions, in the present case, there being no intention either way, I think it should be assumed that the appellant intended to keep alive his mortgage since it was to his interest to do so, there being another mortgage on the same property. In Srinivasachari v. Gnanaprakasa Mudaliar (5) the decision relied on by the lower Court, it was held that "where a person paying off a prior mortgage, purchases a portion of the mortgaged property in consideration of the amount so paid by him, the lien acquired by such payment is extinguished and cannot be used by such purchaser as a shield against a subsequent mortgagee." This decision no doubt supports the respondents. This case has been referred to and distinguished in Govindasami Tevan v. Dorasamy Pillai (6) and Subramania Pillai v. Palaniappa Mudali (7). In Kutti Tevan v. Rayappa Goundan (8) the 8th defendant had bought the equity of redemption in 3/10 (that is, item No. 3 of the property over which he held a mortgage) and the learned Judges observed thus:—

"If the 8th defendant's mortgage was executed first, he must, on the facts found, be regarded as having intended to keep alive his mortgage rights when he purchased the equity of redemption in item No. 3."

This observation supports the appellant and in my opinion gives full effect to the spirit of the Privy Council decisions. No doubt the observation is in the nature of an obiter dictum and it does not refer to the decision in Srinivasachari v. Gnanaprakasa Mudaliar (5). The decisions of the other Courts in Madho Singh v. Pancham Singh (9), Jasodha Kumar Roy v. Kali Kumar Dey (10), and Kalimuddin Shaik v. Baidyanath Saha (11) brought to my notice by the learned Advocate for the appellant fully support him. Having regard to the decisions of the Privy Council, the general trend of the decisions of this Court and the new s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, I am not inclined to treat the authority of Srinivasachari v. Gnanaprakasa Mudaliar (5) on this particular point as going beyond the actual decision. I would, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for sale without paying the mortgage amount due to the 3rd defendant under his mortgage. The decree of the lower Court will be modified accordingly. The appellant will get his costs throughout.

Res judicata—Execution proceedings—Sale by judgment-debtor during execution proceedings—Decision in execution as to validity of attachment etc., whether binding on purchaser—Purchaser claiming title under judgment-debtor—Lis pendens, doctrine of.

Orders passed in the course of execution proceedings adjudicating on the rights of the parties are res judicata and cannot be called in question by the parties or their representatives. When once the said orders become final, that effect cannot be sought to be avoided by making allegations that the previous decisions were wrong on the merits because full facts were not placed before the Court or that all available evidence was not let in on the former occasion. Venkatachalapati Rao v. Komeswaramma (1), Sinnappan v. Arunachalam Pillai (2) and Ram Kirpal v. Rup Koori (3), referred to. [p. 310, col. 2.]

When proceedings by way of attachment of immoveable property in execution of a money decree have been taken by the executing Court in an execution application filed by the decree-holder, any question that might be raised whether the proceedings taken by the Court did amount to a valid attachment or not is one that falls to be decided by the Court in the execution department; any stranger purchasing the property from the judgment-debtor in those circumstances would only take the property subject to the Court's decision as to the effect of the proceedings actually taken before his purchase. Such purchaser would be bound by the Court's decision of the question in the execution department as a person claiming title under the judgment-debtor. [p. 309, col. 2.]

The principle of lis pendens would also apply to such sale. It is not open to a party to a proceeding to nullify the effect of the proceedings already properly taken with reference to that property by transferring the same to strangers. It does not really matter whether the actual decision of the Court as to the effect of past proceedings is given only after the purchase by the stranger, if the adjudication is really with reference to matters that happened before such purchase and regarding the effect of the legal proceedings that were taken prior to the same. To safeguard the purchasers' rights the purchasers should in such circumstances get themselves impleaded as parties. [ibid.]

Letters Patent Appeal against a decree of Mr Justice Devadoss dated the 20th August, 1926, and made in S. A. No. 1805 of 1923 on the file of the High Court preferred against that of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Narasapur, in A. S. No. 12 of 1922 (A. S. No. 416 of 1.21, Sub Court, Ellore) preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Narasapur, in O. S. No. 142 of 1920 (O. S. No. 508 of 1920 on the file of the Principal District Munsif's Court, Narasapur).

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and V. Viyyanna, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The first defendant in O. S. No. 142 of 1920 on the file of the Additional District Munsif's Court of Narasapur is the appellant before us. He was the plaintiff in O. S. No. 38 of 1912 on the file of the Principal District Munsif's Court, Narasapur, wherein he obtained a decree for money against M. Venkataramanayya on 30th September, 1913. He applied to execute his decree in O. S. No. 38 of 1912 by attachment and sale of certain immovable property and on the 14th of March, 1914, the District Munsif passed an order for attachment. In the meantime, M. Venkataramanayya, having filed an appeal against the District Munsif's decree, obtained ad interim order staying execution, from the Appellate Court on 13th March, 1914. The interim stay order was received in the District Munsif's Court on 16th March, 1914, and before the amin was informed of the order, the amin reported on the 17th March, 1914, that attachment was carried out on that very date (17th of March) by affixing a copy of the proclamation on the land. Subsequently ad interim order was vacated on the 15th of April 1914 as the judgment-debtor failed to furnish security as required by the Appellate Court. Venkataramanayya filed an application—M. P. No. 1950 of 1914—on 6th October, 1914, under s. 57 of the Code alleging that the attachment made on 17th March, 1914, after the Appellate Court ordered stay of execution was ultra vires and illegal, and that the application for sale made by the decree-holder on the strength of the said attachment was not maintainable, and he prayed that 'the Court may cancel the attachment and the sale application made by the decree holder.' The District Munsif overruled the contentions of the decree-holder and directed that 'the attachment in question be raised and all further proceedings following thereon quashed.' On appeal the said order was confirmed by the Subordinate Judge. When the appeal was pending, Venkataramanayya died and his widow—Kameswaramma—was brought in, as his legal representative by the Appellate Court. The decree-holder in O. S. No. 38 of 1912 preferred a Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal to the High Court. There was a reference to the Full Bench in that Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal. The Full Bench held, "Where subsequent to an ad interim order for stay of execution made by an Appellate Court without notice to the decree-holder, but before its communication to the Court of first instance, an order of attachment is made by the latter Court, the order of attachment is not void and ineffectual as having been made without jurisdiction, but is legally valid, and that the order is effective only from the time it is communicated to the first Court: Venkatachalapati Rao v. Kameswaramma (1). The case came on for final disposal before the referring Judges (Justice Abdur Rahim and Justice Bakewell), and they passed the following judgment in the case on 18th December, 1917.

"The appeal will be allowed, the respondent's petition dismissed, and the attachment restored. The appellant will recover his costs from the respondent throughout."

On the allegation that by a sale deed dated 27th May, 1914, Gadiraju Venkatappayya and others had purchased the property in question from Venkataramanayya, they (the vendees) filed a petition on 26th August, 1918, under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, to raise the attachment on the ground that there was no valid attachment on the properties on the date of their purchase. The decree-holder contested the position with the result that the petition was dismissed on 31st October, 1919. The vendees (Gadiraju people) filed O. S. No. 142 of 1920 purporting to be under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside the order passed on the 31st October, 1919, and they made the decree-holder in O. S. No. 38 of 1912 as the first defendant to their suit and Kameswaramma (the widow of the judgment-debtor in O. S. No. 38 of 1912) was made the second defendant. Various contentions were raised by the parties, such as, for example, whether there was a valid attachment of the properties, whether the question was res judicata by reason of the order passed by the High Court on 18th December, 1917, whether the plaintiffs were estopped from questioning the attachment, and whether the suit was barred by s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. Both the lower Courts having dismissed the suit, the plaintiffs (Gadiraju people) preferred a second appeal to the High Court. The learned Judge who heard the second appeal was of opinion that on the facts disclosed by evidence in the present case there was no legal and valid attachment on the properties, that the plaintiffs who were not parties to the proceedings that came before the High Court in connection with the execution of the decree in O. S. No. 38 of 1912 were not bound by the orders passed therein, and that it was open to the plaintiffs to show that there was no valid attachment on the property when they purchased the same on the 27th of May, 1914. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that after the ad interim stay order passed by the Appellate Court on the 13th of March, 1914, was received in the District Munsif's Court on the 16th of March, 1914, no proceedings in execution could be legally taken in the case, and that the attachment which was effected by affixing a notice on the properties on the 17th March, 1914, and on the Court-house and the Collector's Office on the 23rd March, was not merely irregular but illegal and void. Holding that the plaintiffs were not bound by the orders passed against their vendor—the judgment-debtor—after the judgment-debtor had sold the properties to them, the learned Judge reversed the judgments of both the lower Courts, and set aside the order passed in the claim petition on the 31st of October, 1919.

The first defendant has preferred this Letters Patent Appeal.

Though several points were sought to be raised before us by the learned Counsel on either side, we thought it advisable to restrict arguments in the first instance to the issue whether the main question has become res judicata by reason of the order passed by the High Court on the 18th December, 1917, and whether the plaintiffs are bound by the said order. After hearing full arguments on that question, we have come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are so bound, and that it is not necessary to consider the other points raised in the case.

Venkataramanayya—the judgment-debtor—in O. S. No. 38 of 1912 must be taken to have had full knowledge of all the proceedings that took place in execution of the decree in that suit, and pending the disposal of the appeal he got an ad interim order of stay of execution on the 13th March, 1914. The further proceedings that took place in the District Munsif's Court in connection with the attachment proceedings also must have been known to him, viz., that the amin reported on the 17th March, 1914, that he had in pursuance of the order passed by the District Munsif on 14th March, 1914, carried out attachment by affixing a copy of the proclamation on the lands on 17th March, 1914, and that similar copies were affixed to the notice board in the Court-house and in the Collector's Office on 23rd April, 1914, though the stay order passed by the Appellate Court was received in the District Munsif's Court on the 16th of March, 1914. All this is not denied. He also knew that the said ad interim stay order was vacated on 15th April, 1914, by the Appellate Court as he had failed to furnish security as directed by that Court. It is in these circumstances that he sold the property to the Gadiraju people on 27th May, 1914. What the exact effect of the proceedings that had taken place in the District Munsif's Court would be, in the circumstances, is a matter essentially relating to the execution of the decree in O. S. No. 38 of 1912. The judgment-debtor would be bound by the decision of the executing Court as regards the effect of these proceedings, and prima facie any person who claims title under the judgment-debtor after the happening of those events would also be bound by the decision of the executing Court as to the exact effect of those proceedings. The judgment-debtor could not, by transferring the property at that stage, render the decision that may be—and in ordinary circumstances would be—passed by the executing Court as regards the effect of those past events, nugatory as far as the decree-holder is concerned. On the other hand, the purchaser from the judgment-debtor in such circumstances would prima facie take the property only subject to the disabilities they were under when in the hands of the judgment-debtor. When, therefore, the decree-holder sought to proceed further with his execution application which he had already filed in March, 1914, and wanted to bring the property to sale in pursuance of the steps taken by him in March, 1914, the executing Court had to decide whether there was a valid attachment of the properties in March, 1914. The circumstance that the Court was called upon to decide that question formally only after the judgment-debtor had sold the properties to the plaintiffs should not alter the essential nature of the said proceedings, nor take away the jurisdiction of the Court in which the said execution proceedings were then pending to adjudicate on that question; nor is it material that the question came up for consideration on a petition filed by the judgment-debtor. It is clear from that petition (O. M. P. No. 1950 of 1914) that the decree-holder in O. S. No. 38 of 1912 had applied for sale in pursuance of the attachment effected in March, 1914. The Courts had accordingly to consider what exactly would be the effect of the proceedings that had taken place in March, 1914, and the High Court on 18th December, 1917, passed final orders on that question in the following terms:—

"The appeal will be allowed, the respondent's petition dismissed, and the attachment restored."

The judgment-debtor's widow was a party to the said proceedings in the High Court, and she could not, therefore, contest the binding nature of the said decision; but are the present plaintiffs (the vendees from the judgment-debtor under a sale-deed dated in May, 1914,) in a better position?

We were not referred to any reported decision directly bearing on the point

After consideration of the question, we have come to the conclusion that they are not.

In our opinion, when proceedings by way of attachment of immovable property in execution of a money decree have been taken by the executing Court in an execution application filed by the decree-holder, any question that might be raised whether the proceedings taken by the Court did amount to a valid attachment or not is one that falls to be decided by the Court in the execution department; any stranger purchasing the property from the judgment-debtor in those circumstances would only take the property subject to the Court's decision as to the effect of the proceedings actually taken before his purchase. Such purchaser would be bound by the Court's decision of the question in the execution department though he was not party to the same. To hold otherwise would be to impair the rights of the decree-holder and to enable the judgment-debtor to set at naught decisions of Courts competent to adjudicate on the rights of parties, and give the go-by to the principle of law giving finality to decisions of Courts in matters properly before them.

The present is not a case where the proceeding pending before the Court is only an execution application to attach property. Further proceedings by way of actual attachment had taken place; and the proceedings by way of attachment of the properties in dispute took place in a Court of competent jurisdiction; it was when those proceedings were pending that the present plaintiffs purchased those properties from the judgment-debtor; prima facie they must be taken to have purchased it subject to the result of those proceedings. The principle of the doctrine of lis pendens would apply to such a case. If for any reason the proceedings that were had relating to the properties in question prior to the plaintiff's purchase should prove abortive and infructuous, and the decree-holder had to take entirely fresh execution proceedings after the plaintiff's purchase, then there would be force in the respondents's contention that such fresh execution proceedings would not be binding on them unless they were made parties to the same. On the other hand, it is not open to a party to a proceeding to nullify the effect of proceedings already properly taken with reference to that property by transferring the same to strangers. As already remarked, it does not really matter whether the actual decision of the Courts as to the effect of the past proceedings is given only after the plaintiff's purchase, if the adjudication is really with reference to matters that happened before such purchase and regarding the effect of the legal proceedings that were had prior to the same. To safeguard the purchasers' rights, the purchasers should in such circumstances get themselves impleaded as parties.

To take an analogous case, in a suit to recover money, if questions should arise whether the plaint contained sufficient allegations claiming and justifying a charge, and whether the prayer claiming a charge on certain properties was specific or not, the trial Court would have to decide those questions by its final judgment and decree, and if the Court should decide the questions in favour of the plaintiff and give him a decree for money charged on the properties mentioned, it would seem that the decision would be binding on a purchaser from the defendant pending suit, though he be not actually a party to the decree. He would not be allowed to show in a subsequent suit that the prior decision was wrong in the absence of fraud or collusion. The case might be different if the plaint was subsequently amended so as to claim a charge on a particular property, after that property had been sold away by the defendant to a stranger.

In the case before us, it is not contended (not even suggested) that the proceedings conducted by the judgment-debtor were not conducted bona fide or that there was any fraud or collusion between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder in connection with the same. On the other hand, it is admitted by one of the present plaintiffs, when examined as a witness in the present suit, that he was really conducting those proceedings on behalf of the judgment debtor's representative—the widow. After the sale of the suit properties to the plaintiffs on 27th June, 1914, it is difficult to understand why the judgment debtor should have troubled himself, and why a petition—Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 150 of 1914—should have been filed on 6th October, 1914, to 'cancel the attachment and the sale application made by the decree holder.' As remarked by the lower Appellate Court, 'it seems difficult to avoid the inference that the plaintiffs having been worsted in their attempt to get the attachment set aside by proceedings in the name of Venkataramanayya have hit upon the expedient of a claim petition and the suit to achieve the same object.

It was further argued that the attachment made in March, 1914, should be taken to have been completed only on 23rd March, 1914, when copies of the proclamation were affixed in the Court-house and in the Collector's Office in accordance with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 54. Civil Procedure Code, and as the stay order was perused by the District Munsif on 17th March, 1914, the subsequent acts done on 23rd March, 1914 should be taken to the ultra vires, and that there was no complete and valid attachment in the eye of the law; and the decision of the Full Bench in Sinnappan v. Arunachalam Pillai (2) was relied on. Assuming the argument to be correct, that does not take away the binding nature of the decision passed by this Court on 18th December, 1917, that the attachment was valid and restoring the attachment.

Orders passed in the course of execution proceedings adjudicating on the rights of the parties are res judicata and could not be called in question by the parties or their representatives. When once the said orders became final, that effect could not be sought to be avoided by making allegations that the previous decisions were wrong on the merits because full facts were not placed before the Court or that all available evidence was not let in on the former occasion. See Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kaeri (3), Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (4) and Raja of Ramnad v. Velusami Tavar (5).

It, therefore, seems to us that the present plaintiffs are bound by the orders passed by the High Court restoring attachment.

It is a matter for satisfaction that we have been able to reach this result, since there is no doubt that the conduct of the judgment-debtor in getting an interim stay from the Appellate Court (which was finally dismissed as no security was furnished) and then transferring the properties to the plaintiffs—who had (there is no doubt) notice of all the proceedings—thus defeating the decree-holder—would surely be reprehensible from the moral point of view.

We accordingly hold that the present plaintiffs are bound by the final orders passed in execution proceedings in O. S. No. 38 of 1912 in which it was held by the High Court in effect that there was a valid attachment in March, 1914, of the properties in dispute, and that the said 'attachment should be restored.' The plaintiffs' purchase from the judgment-debtor in May, 1914, should be taken to be subject to that attachment. Allowing this Letters Patent Appeal, we restore the decision of the lower Appellate Court with costs here and in second appeal.

Contempt of Court—Essence of offence.

The essence of the offence of contempt of Court is conduct calculated to produce an atmosphere of prejudice in the midst of which the proceedings must go on, even where the proceedings do not involve trial by Jury and no one would imagine that the mind of the Magistrates or Judges charged with the case would or could not be induced thereby to swerve from the straight course. King v. Tibbits and Windust (1) followed [p. 312, col. 2.]

Petition praying that the High Court will be pleased to commit the respondent herein for contempt of Court and otherwise deal with him according to law for his having published in his paper 'Tamil Nadu' in extenso the complaint in O. C. No. 124 of 1931 on the file of the Court of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Coimbatore with the head lines and comments thereon as alleged in the said affidavit.

Messrs. Nugent Grant and T. M. Kasturi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. Rajagopalan, for the Respondent.

Order.—The respondent here is the Editor and Publisher of the "Tamil Nadu" newspaper whose place of business is in Broadway, Madras; and he is here to-day to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Court or otherwise dealt with.

The facts of the case can be stated quite briefly and they are as follows: One Sathappa Chettiar at whose instance these proceedings have been put before the Court is an accused person. He stands charged in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Coimbatore with the offence of criminal breach of trust. He is the Secretary and Banker of the Kaleswarar Mills Ltd., and amongst other things he has two mills viz., the Sree Krishna Ginning Factory and the Soma Vilas Ginning Factory under his management. A complaint was presented against him charging him with criminal breach of trust on the 1st September in the Court before mentioned. There were three heads of charge—so we gather from the opening of Mr. Nugent Grant—and they were that a certain sum which had been set apart for the payment of bonuses was received wrongly by Sathappa Chettiar, that out of a sum of money which lay in suspense account he set apart Rs. 75,000 in order to misappropriate that sum at some future date and that he was guilty of receiving secret commissions from vendors of cotton. Immediately after this complaint had been presented in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's Court of Coimbatore a search warrant was moved for and obtained and certain mills were searched by the Police. Two of them were the Sree Krishna Ginning Factory and the Soma Vilas Ginning Factory which, as before stated, were under his management. On the 4th September in the issue of that date of the respondent's newspaper there appeared a report of the criminal charges against Sathappa Chettiar in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's Court of Coimbatore. We understand that the report contained an accurate statement of the complaint which was set out in extenso. Had the matter ended there, no proceedings for contempt of Court could have been taken against the respondent, and Mr. Nugent Grant does not here rely upon what appeared with regard to that complaint in the respondent's newspaper. He, however, complains of something which was done by the newspaper on the same date. In the poster or 'Contents Bill' relating to this issue and in the head lines the matter was dealt with in Tamil in four lines, the official translation of which is as follows: 'Sathappa Chettiar in trouble; Police search at Tiruppur;

Thousands of rupees missing; Cotton Mills in danger." Mr. Rajagopalan who appears for the respondent argues that the correct rendering of that passage is as follows: "Sathappa Chettiar put to trouble; Police search at Tiruppur; Thousands of rupees missing; Cotton Mills plight" and argues that read in that way the conduct of the respondent does not amount to contempt of Court in so far as what he has done is not likely in any way to prejudice the fair trial of Sathappa Chettiar. With regard to the first line, in our view, there is not much difference between the official translation and the interpretation put upon it by the respondent. It called the attention of the public who were invited to read the newspaper to the fact that some trouble or worry had fallen upon Sathappa Chettiar. That by itself of course would not amount to anything but it is linked up with the next line which, in our opinion, clearly shows what those words were intended in the first line to convey to the public. As a result of this criminal complaint Sathappa Chettiar was certainly in trouble and of course those people who read the "Contents Bill" but had not then read the newspaper would find some indication of the sort of trouble that had been put upon him by the words "Police search at Tiruppur". Tiruppur was the place where these two factories which were under the management of Sathappa Chettiar were and there was a search and as a result of the search—that is the conclusion to be drawn from the third line—thousands of rupees were found to be missing. As a result of that you get the fourth line that cotton mills were either in danger or in trouble or in a plight, it does not matter which construction is put upon the Tamil words. Taking these four lines together, we are of the opinion that readers of the poster and the head lines would gather that Sathappa Chettiar was in trouble, that the Police were connected with the trouble, that the trouble he was in occasioned a search of the mills under his management at Tiruppur and that as a result of that search thousands of rupees were found to be missing which was a disastrous matter for the cotton mills. It is argued here that in the third line which after all is the most important one, one Tamil letter "ma" meaning "alleged" was accidentally omitted by the compositor and that the line should read "Thousands of rupees alleged to be missing." Had the words "alleged" been there, then this matter probably would never have come up before this Court. It is an important omission and we are not going to assume that it was an accidental omission. Even if it were an accidental omission, we have got to ask ourselves whether that omission, accidental or otherwise, does not convey to the public that as a fact thousands of rupees were missing as a result of the Police search at Tiruppur and that Sathappa Chettiar was in trouble with regard to it and in consequence of it. That being so, we have got to consider whether the conduct of the respondent in publishing those lines so worded constitutes a contempt of Court, and we can do no better than to refer to the observations of Lord Alverstone, C. J., in the case of King v. Tibbits and Windust (1), where he says as follows:—"It would, indeed, be far-fetched to infer that the articles would in fact have any effect upon the mind of either Magistrate or Judge,"—we may pause here and say that it is not in the least likely that the words complained of would have any effect on the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Coimbatore and indeed it is extremely doubtful whether he would ever have seen these words at all—"but the essence of the offence is conduct calculated to produce, so to speak, an atmosphere of prejudice in the midst of which the proceedings must go on. Publications of that character have been punished over and over again as contempts of Courts, where the legal proceedings pending did not involve trial by Jury and where no one would imagine that the mind of the Magistrates or Judges charged with the case would or could be induced thereby to swerve from the straight course."

It seems to us that these words are singularly appropriate to this case and it is impossible to say that the conduct complained of is not calculated to produce, so to speak, an atmosphere of prejudice in the midst of which the proceedings must go on. That being so, the respondent is guilty of contempt of Court and the only other matter to be considered is, how is he to be dealt with by us. Whilst we think that it is a serious thing to have omitted the word "alleged" thereby stating it as a fact, when it possibly is not, that thousands of rupees were missing in the factories, it is a case which does not amount to serious contempt of Court. We think that under the circumstances justice will be done by ordering the respondent to pay Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 203, 476—Application to make complaint—Dismissal—Second application—Competency of.

The dismissal of an application for making a complaint under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, does not preclude the Magistrate from entertaining a second application for the same purpose. Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Goundan (1), Emperor v. Maheshwara Kondaya (2) and Harekrishna Perida v. Emperor (3), referred to.

Petition under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, Salem, dated the 21st November, 1930 and made in O. P. No. 28 of 1930.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, R. Sundaralingam and V. Sankaran, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner seeks to revise the order of the District Judge, Salem, complaining against him under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for offences under ss. 467 and 471, Indian Penal Code.

On 15th November 1929, a private party applied to the District Munsif, Salem, praying that he would lodge a complaint under s. 476. This was dismissed on 27th February, 1930 and there has been no appeal.

Then on the same day 27th February, 1930, another petition was put in, and ultimately dismissed. On appeal from that dismissal the District Judge, Salem, has complained under s. 476.

The question is whether the petition of 27th February and the consequent appeal were competent after the petition of November was dismissed.

This opens up a field which is occupied by two schools of thought. There are those who hold that apart from his statutory powers and limitations a Magistrate is circumscribed by the maxim "nemo bis vexari" and he cannot expose an accused person to jeopardy twice; and those who hold that if not expressly forbidden a Magistrate can act within the powers given by Statute, as often as he likes irrespective of his previous action. The two views are fully expressed in Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Goundan (1), when the latter view prevailed by a bare majority of 3 to 2. Since then it has always been the law in this presidency at least that a Magistrate can dismiss a complaint under s. 203, and re-hear it on the following day. It would seem to follow that he is equally competent to dismiss an application to complain and to re-entertain it.

As the Chief Justice points out on page 133 of Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Goundan (1), if a discharge does not operate so as to prevent a revival, a fortiori the dismissal of a complaint will not. Subramania Aiyar, J., argues that it is unjust that a discharged man should be again put upon his trial, which may be unexceptionable as an abstract principle of law (page 137*), but the Code allows it, and a Bench of this Court in Emperor v. Maheshwara Kondaya (2), clearly lays down that a Magistrate may himself re-open a prosecution although he has discharged the accused. It is argued that when the Code expressly provides an appeal, it cannot be assumed that the Magistrate can proceed in contravention of his previous order. The same argument is not inapplicable to discharges on complaints. Why should s. 436, provide special machinery by way of revision, if the Magistrate can himself override his order? The answer would seem to be that the Magistrate is left free to change his mind, and at the same time the party, if the Magistrate will not change his mind, may have recourse to superior authority.

Limitation will run from the order on the second application; and it cannot be said that the appeal to the District Judge was time-barred. There is no need, therefore, to discuss the applicability of s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act as though the appeal were against the first order of dismissal.

That applications under s. 476 can be re-heard in spite of previous dismissal has Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 300, Excep. 1, s. 304—Grave and sudden provocation—Tests—Social morality, how far a guiding factor.

The question of provocation is a psychological question and one cannot apply considerations of social morality to such a question.

Where a man sees a woman in the arms of another, and loses control over himself, the circumstance that she was his mistress and not wife does not make any real difference for the purposes of s. 304, Penal Code.

Criminal Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Kistna Division, in Case No. 4 of 1931.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown

Judgment.—Two questions arise in this appeal. The first is what offence has been committed; the second, what the sentence should be. The appellant does not deny that he killed his mistress a woman called Mahalakshmi, but he pleads that he did so in consequence of grave and sudden provocation. The Judge has found that he discovered the woman in the arms of a former lover (P. W. No. 17), lost control of himself and stabbed her. The finding is probably correct. Prosecution Witness No. 17 admitted to the Police that he was seated on Mahalakshmi's cot when the appellant entered the hut but not that she was in his arms. As he admitted further that she had solicited him, it is difficult to believe his pretence that he had refused her advances. On this finding, the Judge came to the conclusion that the offence committed was one under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. He was of opinion that though the provocation was sudden it was not so grave as to justify him in convicting of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. This opinion he based on the fact that Mahalakshmi was the appellant's mistress. Had she been his wife, his conclusion would have been different and more favourable to the appellant. We find it impossible to agree that the fact that Mahalakshmi was the appellant's mistress and not his wife makes any real difference. One cannot apply considerations of social morality to a purely psychological problem. The question is not whether the appellant ought to have exercised, but whether he lost control over himself. When a man sees a woman be she his wife or his mistress, in the arms of another man, he does not stop to consider whether he has or has not the right to insist on exclusive possession of her person as the case cited by the Judge puts it. She is a woman, of whose person he desires to be in exclusive possession and that is for the moment, enough for him, he thinks of nothing else. The question in each particular case is whether the circumstances are such as to justify the Court in giving the accused the benefit of the exception. In the present instance we should have altered the conviction to one under s. 304, Indian Penal Code but for two circumstances. It is in evidence that after P. W. No. 17 had escaped the appellant fastened the door of the hut and he admits himself that having no knife in his hands he removed some baskets from the top of his box, opened it and took out the knife with which he committed the murder. All this must have taken some time and indicates a certain amount of preparation for an intended murder. Had he taken a knife from his belt and used it at once, it would have been a different matter. As it is, we think that he has been rightly convicted and sentenced. The conviction and sentence are confirmed and the appeal is dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 8—Suit against representative defendant, when competent—Debt incurred by managers of community—Suit against managers—Permission for defendants to be sued as representatives.

As a general rule a suit against representative defendants cannot be brought upon a debt, as it is not possible to proceed against the common property unless all those who possess an interest in the property are actually made parties to the suit. But this rule does not apply to a case in which managers or trustees or some other persons whom the plaintiff alleges have power to bind the property of the association or community are before the Court. Thus, where a promissory-note is executed by five persons and the holder of the note sues them alleging that they are managers appointed by their community with powers of borrowing and dealing with common property and that the common property is bound by the debt, an order under O. I, r. 8 permitting the defendants to be sued as representative of the community is competent. Walker v. Sur (1), Sahib Thambi v. Hamid (2) and Ideal Films Ltd. v. Richards (3), referred to. [p. 315, col. 2; p. 316, col. 1.]

Petition under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the Order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Devakottah, dated the 16th December, 1930, and made in I. A. No. 569 of 1930, in O. S. No. 80 of 1930.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and K. S. Venkatarama Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This revision petition has been brought against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Devakottah passed under O. I, r. 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure allowing the defendants in O. S. No. 80 of 1930, on his file to be sued as representative of a community known as the Karsikkudi Nattars which comprises, I understand, some 300 pattadars. The plaintiff in that suit, now respondent, holds a promissory note for Rs. 25,000 executed by five persons who, he alleges, were managers appointed by the community and invested with such powers as borrowing and dealing with the common property, etc. Four of these five executants he has impleaded as defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The 5th defendant is said to be the adopted son of the remaining manager and the 6th defendant is the 5th defendant's natural father, while the 7th defendant is a Receiver in a suit which is simultaneously proceeding for the partition of common properties. The petitioners before me are the 8th and 9th defendants, members of the Nattar community, who say that they got themselves impleaded in the suit in the interests of the community and who resist the order now under consideration.

The principal argument employed before me is that a suit against representative defendants cannot be brought upon a debt, as it is not possible to proceed against the common property unless all those who possess an interest in the property are actually made parties to the suit. This no doubt as a general proposition, is true enough and may be accepted on the authority of an English case, Walker v. Sur (1). In that case an action was brought for fees for professional services rendered to an unincorporated religious society, and as representatives of that society four persons were impleaded as defendants. It was not contended that these four persons were chosen for any special fitness to represent the society, and partly for that reason and partly because the society's property could not be proceeded against otherwise than in the presence of all the members of the society, the application was disallowed. I think it is clear that the decision does not necessarily apply to a case in which managers or trustees or some other persons whom plaintiff alleges had power to bind the property of the association or community are before the Court. In fact, Vaughan Williams, L. J., expressly bases his decision upon grounds of that nature, and I gather from what the learned Lord Justice says that if managers of the body had been before the Court he might have taken a different view as to the application of the corresponding English provision for constituting a representative suit. Buckley, L. J., approaches the question from the point of view of the accessibility of the property and there again I think that if persons had been before the Court who were competent to represent the property, the objections which he took would lose their force. It has been said in Sahib Thambi v. Hamid (2), that "the general rule of law, undoubtedly, is, that in suits where one person is allowed to represent others as defendant in a representative capacity any decree passed can bind those others only with respect to the property of those others which he can in law represent." Accordingly, I think that the circumstances that the managers or the representatives are sued in the present case may get over the difficulty with regard to proceeding against the property. The circumstances of the case more closely resemble those which arose in Ideal Films Ltd. v. Richards (3). That was a suit brought against an un-registered association for articles supplied, and the Committee of the association were made defendants on behalf of all the members and the trustees were also impleaded as representing the property. The suit accordingly was a representative one so far as the Committee was concerned and it also comprised parties whose presence enabled the property to be proceeded against. The argument used in the present case is that the managers were competent to contract the debt on behalf of the community and were also competent in so doing to bind the property. That has been made the subject of issues in the suit and it is unnecessary and indeed, undesirable for me to express any opinion upon it. It may be that if the managers were so competent there was no need to go further than to sue them. But at the worst, it can only be said that it may not have been necessary to resort to O. I, r. 8. That is not the same as to say that in the circumstances it could not be applied. I think that the main objection which is raised by Mr. Patanjali Sastri on behalf of the petitioners, namely the question of the liability of the common property, is one which can only be decided in the suit, and issues have been framed for a complete enquiry in that respect. No substantive rights have been lost by defendants or those whom they represent in allowing a suit to be brought in this form. It is merely a matter of processual expediency. I can accordingly find no sufficient ground to interfere with the lower Court's order and I dismiss the revision petition with costs.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Ayyangar for Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswamy Ayyar and K. Ramamurthi Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Judgment. It is not now disputed that the discharge of the mortgage-debt represented by Ex. A by the payment and receipt of a smaller amount than was due can be proved as a fact if it is separable from any oral agreement to vary the terms of the mortgage contract and can be proved without evidence of such an agreement—Balasundara Naicker v. Ranganatha Ayyar (1). In this case the plaintiff pleaded such an oral agreement of 25th June, 1919. But the learned Subordinate Judge found that the discharge of the mortgage by payment of Rs. 1,500 on 5th July, 1919, was true without referring to the alleged agreement to vary the terms of the mortgage and without using any evidence regarding that agreement. It is objected that he used the endorsement of discharge on Ex. A, which it is contended was inadmissible in evidence because it was unregistered. But that endorsement in our opinion comes within s. 17 (2) (xi) of the Registration Act and need not have been registered. Without discussing on this occasion the question whether all endorsements of payment on mortgage-deeds are exempt from registration or only those which do not purport to extinguish the mortgage, we find in this case that the endorsement does not on its face purport to extinguish the mortgage. The return of the mortgage-deed by the mortgagee is certainly not conclusive in such cases nor even of itself any indication that the mortgage is extinguished—Hari Narain Banerji v. Kusum Kumari Dasi (2), Piari Lal v. Makhan (3) and Seshayya v. Subbamma (4). It was also suggested for the defendants that, if the oral agreement of 25th June, 1919, to vary the mortgage contract cannot be proved, the agreement made on the same occasion to assign the decree against his father-in-law to the plaintiff, on which the plaintiff sues, also cannot be proved, as they were really parts of one agreement. But, because the plaintiff—iff cannot prove any such agreement to vary the mortgage contract by taking less than what was due on it in full discharge, he is not necessarily shut out from proving the actual discharge of the mortgage by the payment and acceptance of a lesser amount and the payment of the balance, for which he now sues, in accordance with a separable agreement that defendant No. 1 should assign the decree to him.

In our opinion, this appeal must be allowed and the Subordinate Judge's decree restored with costs throughout.

The suit being decreed the security was withdrawn. On appeal the suit was dismissed and the defendant applied to the trial Court for an order directing the surety to bring into Court his costs of the suit. The surety resisted the application on three grounds, namely (1) that he had undertaken no personal liability, (2) that his liability came to an end with the decree of the first Court and did not extend to the decree passed in appeal and (3) that the order permitting him to withdraw the money operated as res judicata:

Held, that the surety was personally liable and the bare fact that he deposited Rs. 1,000 did not exclude his personal liability.

Held, further, that liability of the surety did not cease with the decree of the trial Court but extended to decree passed in appeal.

Held, also, that the order permitting withdrawal of the money did not operate as res judicata.

Mr. K. S. Venkatarama Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. S. Sankara Ayyar, for the Respondent.

Judgment—In this case the appellant stood surety for the costs payable by the plaintiff in O. S. No. 67 of 1919. This suit was originally dismissed for default. On appeal it was restored and the High Court made it a condition precedent to the restoration of the suit that the plaintiff should furnish security for Rs. 1,000 for costs of the suit. The appellant deposited Rs. 1,000 as security. In the first Court a decree was given for the plaintiff. Then the appellant withdrew the amount deposited into Court. On appeal that decree was set aside. An application was made by 1st defendant to the lower Court for an order directing the appellant to bring into Court his costs of the suit on the ground that he has stood surety for costs and the lower Court made an order in terms of the application. The appeal is against this order.

Three points have been argued before us. The first point is that the appellant has not undertaken any personal liability for the costs and so under s. 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure no proceedings can be instituted against him. It is argued that the fact that the appellant deposited Rs. 1,000 as security would show that no personal liability was contemplated between the parties. The decision in Brajendra Lal Das v. Lakhmi Narain Khanna (1) is relied on in support of the contention. But in that case the facts clearly show that, when the promissory notes were deposited as security, it was distinctly understood that there was to be no personal liability so far as the surety was concerned. It is admitted that the appellant is a surety, and from the bare fact that he deposited Rs. 1,000 it cannot be inferred that personal liability, which attaches to every surety, is excluded. We think that the lower Court is right in holding that the appellant is personally liable for the costs.

The second point urged is that the obligation of the surety came to an end with the decree of the first Court and that it did not extend to the decree passed by the High Court. The question is one of some difficulty in this case as no security bond has been executed by the appellant; we have to infer from the order passed by the High Court the scope of the liability of the appellant. The decisions relied on by his Counsel do not give us very much help. In Subbarama Aiyar v. Subba Aiyar (2) the facts show that the security was given in connection with O XXXVIII, r. 5. The learned Judges held that as soon as the suit was dismissed the security ceased to exist. That case does not apply; and so we have to decide the case on the wording of the order passed by the High Court. The order is in general terms, "For the costs of the suit." The learned Judges have not restricted the security to be given to the costs of the defendants which might be ordered by the decree of the first Court. We think on a construction of the order of the High Court it cannot be said that the obligation of the surety is limited to the decree of the first Court.

(1) 29 Ind. Cas. 149; 19 C. W. N. 961.

(2) 82 Ind. Cas. 461; 47. M. L. J. 523; (1924) M. W. N. 495; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 114.

The next point argued is that the order permitting the appellant to withdraw the money operates as res judicata and that none of the questions argued can be raised now. Having regard to the order, it is difficult to see how the respondent is precluded from raising these questions. His counter-affidavit filed in connection with the petitions says that he had then no objection to the withdrawal of the money. That is all. It cannot be held that all the questions now raised between the parties can be constructively said to have been decided in the course of that proceeding.

In these circumstances we uphold the order of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mr. S. Jagadisa Ayyar, for the Petitioners

BEASLEY, C. J.—This is an application for a writ of certiorari upon the Revising Authority of the Saidapet Municipality commanding them to send up to this Court the records relating to certain objections to the preparation of the Electoral Roll and quash the proceedings of the Revising Authority of the 25th September, 1931. What happened was that when the Election Officer was preparing the Electoral Roll objection was put in to the inclusion therein of certain names by the petitioner and those interested with him. The objection was that the names of some persons which were included ought not to be included because although they were assessed to taxes, they were not properly so assessed. This means of course that the Election Officer was called upon to embark upon an enquiry into the correctness or otherwise of the assessment of these persons by the Municipal Authorities. Despite this objection of the petitioner, the names were included in the Electoral Roll. Objection was then preferred to the Revising Authority under the Act and the following order was passed by that authority: "In these cases objection has been taken to the inclusion in the Electoral Roll of the voters concerned on the ground that they had been improperly and illegally assessed to profession tax. We have heard arguments on both sides and are of opinion that having regard to s. 45 (1) (c) of the District Municipalities Act, 1920, as it stands at present it is enough that the voters concerned were assessed in the preceding year."

That concluded the matter so far as the Revising Authority was concerned. We have before us the affidavit of the petitioner and we notice amongst other things that in para. 12 the allegations are that the names of these persons have been fraudulently inserted or caused to be inserted at the instance of the Chairman with a view to secure as many votes as possible for himself or his nominees in the coming elections, that those persons were not getting the incomes allotted to them nor were they in a position to pay the rates, that they were not even made aware of their assessments, that the taxes were paid by some unknown persons and without the authority or knowledge of those alleged to have been made so liable, that the payments did not appear to have been the assessee's own acts and that an earlier stage when these matters were represented to the Election Authority some enquiry was made and it was elicited that the said assessments were behind the back of the assessee. In my view, the Revising Authority took the proper view and were quite right in saying that as the names of these persons appeared on the Assessment Rolls of the Municipality, it was not competent for them, or indeed the Election Officer, to question the legality of such assessment. Were it otherwise, it would lead to this very strange position. A person is assessed by the Chairman or the Assessing Officer of a Municipality to profession tax and has to pay the tax. According to the argument addressed to us for the petitioner it would be open to the person, notwithstanding that he has been assessed by the proper authority, to go before the Election Officer when the Electoral Roll is being prepared and contend that he has been improperly assessed and to get from the Election Officer, who after all is not the Assessing Officer, a decision to the effect that he has been wrongly assessed, so that we have this remarkable position, if that argument is right, that the person is both assessed and not assessed. Which authority he is to be guided by has not been stated by the learned Counsel who supports his petition. Obviously that would lead to a chaotic state of affairs. In my view, it is not open to the Election Officer or the Revising Authority to go into that question at all. The Act is perfectly definite with regard to persons who are entitled to have their names included in the Electoral Roll. To be included in the Electoral Roll a person must have attained the age of 21 in the year preceding such application, he must be a British subject or a subject of a State in India, he must have been assessed for the preceding year to any tax payable to the Government of India or the local Government or to any local authority in the Presidency of Madras and he should have resided in the Municipality for 120 days in the year preceding. Directly he satisfies the Election Officer on those points, the Election Officer is bound to put his name in the Electoral Roll. In this case it is quite clear from the affidavit supporting the petition that it is alleged that it was not due to any mistake that the persons objected to were assessed but due to deliberate fraud on the part of the Chairman of the Municipality and those interested with him. If that is so, then clearly any subsequent election at which these allegations are proved and in which it is shown that the person who was elected colluded with those who brought about such things and so secured election can be set aside. There is this distinct remedy given to the petitioner here. That being so, he cannot come by way of certiorari here. This is yet another instance of how the process of the Court is abused by persons. This petition must be rejected.

Cornish, J.—I entirely agree. I think it is clear from the rules that under r. 8 all that the Revising Authority can enquire into are claims or objections relating to inclusion in the Electoral Roll. Among the qualifications for inclusion in the Electoral Roll set out in s. 45 (1) (c) of the Act is the qualification that a person shall have been assessed in the preceding year to any tax. If a person claims that he has been assessed and that his name should appear on the Electoral Roll, then it is for the Revising Authority to enquire into that claim, and, if satisfied that the claimant has been assessed, to put his name on the Roll. On the other hand if an objection is made that a person whose name is included in the Roll is not an assessee, then all that the Revising Authority can enquire into is the fact whether he has been assessed. The question whether the assessee has been illegally or improperly assessed is a matter which does not lie within the scope of the Revising Authority's enquiry.

ODDH CHIEF COURT.

Criminal Appeal No. 168 of 1931.

Nature of corroboration required—Criminal Procedure
Code (Act V of 1898), s. 167 (3)—Detention in

The effect of s. 133, Evidence Act, is that in very exceptional cases if the Court is satisfied that the presumption of untrustworthiness attaching to accomplices in general is rebutted by special circumstances, the Court can accept the uncorroborated testimony of the accomplice. But the established practice of all the Courts in England as well as in India is ordinarily to require corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice in regard to material particulars. Manna Lal v. Emperor (1), referred to. [p. 325, col. 1.]

There is a general consensus of judicial opinion that the corroboration must be with regard to circumstances showing that the particular accused was connected with the crime. Durga v. Emperor (2), referred to. [p. 325, col. 2.]

The policy of the Legislature as disclosed by the provisions of s. 167 cl. (3), Criminal Procedure Code, is that detention in police custody should be allowed only in special cases and for such limited periods as the necessities of the case might require. Such remands are not to be granted without sufficient cause being shown for it. [p. 326, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order, of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated the 22nd May 1931.

Messrs J. Jackson, Avadh Behari Lal and Jagannath Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by three persons Jai Singh, Anandi Din and Mata Din, who have been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Hardoi under ss. 302, 457 and 436 of the Indian Penal Code. The person first named, namely, Jai Singh has been sentenced to death and the other two to transportation for life under s. 302 Indian Penal Code. Each of them has also been sentenced to two and five years' rigorous imprisonment under ss. 457 and 436 Indian Penal Code respectively. The reference made by the learned Additional Sessions Judge for confirmation of the sentence of death passed against Jai Singh is also before us.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has not disputed the facts relating to the occurrence which gave rise to this prosecution. The prosecution and the defence are also at one up to a certain point as regards the antecedent facts concerning the history of the family of the principal appellant, Jai Singh. These facts so far as they constitute the common ground between the prosecution and the defence may be briefly stated :—

One Nirmal Singh was possessed of considerable zemindari property paying land revenue of about Rs. 5,000 per annum. He died about 10 years ago leaving four sons, namely, Jai Singh appellant, the eldest, and Narbir Singh the second son, by his first wife, and Bijai Bahadur and Suraj Bakhsh minor, by the second wife, Musammatt Kirpal Kuar. Narbir Singh married Musammatt Deo Kumari alias Maiyan Sahib, a near relation of the Raja of Powayan, District Shabjahanpur. He died on the 7th of January 1923 leaving him surviving his widow Musammatt Deo Kumari and two minor daughters Musammatt Baba and Bibo Rani. The latter died soon after. Deo Kumari, Kirpal Kuar and Jai Singh lived in separate houses in village Raigaon. The house of Deo Kumari is on the north; Kirpal Kuar's house adjoins it on the south-east. Jai Singh's old house is on the south of Deo Kumari's house but Jai Singh has for some years been living in a new house a little removed from his old house and situate on the east of it.

On the death of Narbir Singh, applications for mutation of names in place of the deceased were made by Jai Singh as well as by Musammatt Deo Kumari, Kunwar Bijai Varma son of the Raja of Powayan intervened and the parties settled their differences by means of a compromise (Ex. 33), which was filed in the Mutation Court. The material terms of this compromise were, that mutation in respect of the entire property standing in the name of Narbir Singh should be effected in favour of Jai Singh and that the latter should pay Rs. 125 per month as maintenance allowance to Musammatt Deo Kumari and give her two hundred bighas kham land in village Raigaon to be held by her as sir. In addition to this Musammatt Deo Kumari was also to get twenty five maunds of grain annually from Jai Singh and to appropriate the standing rabi crop sown by Narbir Singh. It further provided that Musammatt Deo Kumari should remain the proprietor and owner of all the assets of a cloth shop run by Narbir Singh. At the same time she was made liable for all the debts and liabilities relating to this cloth shop. Jai Singh also undertook to perform the marriages of the two daughters of Narbir Singh and to bear all expenses in connection therewith.

The wife of Bijai Bahadur having died, his mother Kirpal Kuar arranged his second marriage with the daughter of one Ohhota Singh of Ohachrapur. Jai Singh did not approve of this union but *Musamm*at Kirpal Kuar paid no heed to Jai Singh's opposition. The marriage took place on the 4th of May 1928. Jai Singh did not join it.

On the night between the 20th and 21st May 1928 *Musamm*at Deo Kumari went to sleep in her house with her daughter *Musamm*at Baba. There were six other persons in the house that night, namely, *Musamm*at Pampa wife of Sofley a servant of *Musamm*at Deo Kumari together with her two sons Babua a boy aged five years and Arjun a babe of about eleven months, *Musamm*at Kausila the cook and her daughter *Musamm*at Puni aged about thirteen or fourteen years, and one Pearey, another servant of Deo Kumari. Thus it will be seen that amongst the inmates of the house that night, there was only one adult male person, namely, Pearey and of the remaining seven, three were women and the remaining four young children. Sometime during the night all the inmates of the house, with the exception of Pearey and Sofley's son, Babua, were massacred in cold blood. The dead body of Arjun the younger son of Sofley with its throat cut was left lying on a cot. The corpses of the remaining five were stacked in a room of the house and pieces of household furniture and everything else, which the assailants could get hold of, were heaped on them. Having poured kerosine oil over this heap, they set fire to it and locked the door of the room from outside. In the early morning of the 21st of May 1928 Pearey was found missing.

Mata Din appellant who is a karinda of Jai Singh accompanied by Dhani Ram chaukidar went to the Police Station of Pihani, a distance of ten miles from village Raigaon and lodged the first information report at 9 A. M. the same morning. In this report he stated that he had been sent to make the report by Jai Singh who had returned that very morning from Mohiuddinpur where he had gone to join a marriage party. He added that he suspected that the offence was committed by Ohachrapur people along with the servants of Bijai Bahadur as they felt aggrieved by Jai Singh not joining the marriage of Bijai Bahadur. The Sub-Inspector Nurul Hasan started for village Raigaon immediately after the recording of the report and reached the scene of occurrence at about 1 P. M. the same day. He found that the roof of some of the rooms of Deo Kumari's house had collapsed and after he had succeeded in putting out the fire, he got the corpses dug out from under the debris of the roof and all the articles piled upon them. He sent the dead bodies to the mortuary at Hardoi for post mortem examination and started investigation of the case.

Unfortunately the Police were unable to trace out Pearey or any of the other culprits. No doubt Nurul Hasan Sub-Inspector had some suspicions about Jai Singh being concerned in the crime but for want of evidence he could not be prosecuted. The Police however started proceedings under s. 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against Jai Singh and three of his servants including Mata Din and they were bound down to be of good behaviour by the Magistrate for a period of three years. The order of the Magistrate was confirmed by the Sessions Judge but was set aside by a Bench of this Court (Ex. 55-A).

In 1930 Sofley whose wife *Musamm*at Pampa and infant son Arjun had been killed, happened to go to his brother at Ranka, District Palamau in Behar. Garhwa, District Daltonganj, is the Railway Station nearest to Ranka. On the morning of the 10th of July 1930 when he was looking out for an ekka in Garhwa to take him to the Railway Station he happened to come across Pearey at a confectioner's shop. He informed the Police authorities that Pearey was an absconder, with the result that the Police arrested him. He was kept in custody in Daltonganj Jail from 10th to 24th July. After necessary inquiries made from Hardoi, Pearey was brought to Hardoi on the night of the 25th of July. The Hardoi Police assisted by Nurul Hassan Khan who was specially deputed for the purpose, took up the investigation. After several remands to which reference will be made later, Pearey was produced before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 15th of August 1930, for the purpose of getting his confession recorded. The Magistrate recorded the confession in Jail on the 16th August 1930. On the basis of this confession the three appellants before us and six other persons namely, Hira Lal, Ohunni, Balwa, Baji Lal, Kalaktar Singh and Murli, were arrested on the 17th of August. On the 9th of October 1930, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the application of the Prosecuting Inspector, granted pardon to Pearey under s.337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. According to the statement of Pearey, Jai Singh, Anandi Din, Mata Din, Hira Lal, Chunni, Balwa, Baji Lal Kalaktar Singh, Murli and four others belonging to Lucknow District, whose names were Bhaya Singh, Surajbali Singh, Ohet Singh and Chandrika Singh together with seven or eight Pasis who were not known to him, had rushed into the house on the fatal night of the 20th of May 1928 and participated in the commission of the crime. The identification proceedings in respect of the last named four persons belonging to Lucknow District were held in Jail on the 10th of September, 1930. Pearey was unable to identify any one of them. These four persons were accordingly let off and the remaining nine persons were prosecuted for offences under ss. 302, 436, 457 and 148 of the Indian Penal Code. Ultimately they were all committed to take their trial in the Court of Sessions on the said charges.

The learned Sessions Judge held that the complicity of Hira Lal, Chunni, Balwa, Baji Lal, Kalaktar Singh and Murli had not been legally established. They were therefore acquitted. The remaining three accused were convicted and sentenced as stated in the beginning.

As mentioned before, the facts and circumstances attending the crime are not in controversy. The only question requiring determination is whether the three appellants Jai Singh, Anandi Din and Mata Din did or did not commit the crime. Admittedly Pearey approver is the only eye-witness of the occurrence. The story told by him is briefly as follows:—

For some time after the compromise arrived at in the mutation case, Jai Singh continued to pay the guzara to Deo Kumari. Thereafter the guzara was stopped with the result that she began to suffer much trouble. Sometimes she sent for money from Powayan and sometimes she met her expenses by pawning her ornaments. In connection with Bijai Bahadur's marriage at Chachrapur, Jai Singh prohibited the sweeper, the barber, the kahars and other people from doing any work for Bijai Bahadur. He also directed Deo Kumari not to join the marriage. Jai Singh also closed the main gate and the marriage party had to pass through a back door. Deo Kumari in spite of the orders of Jai Singh joined the wedding stealthily at night. On the 20th of May, 1928, at about 12 noon or 1 p. m. Deo Kumari sent Pearey to demand her maintenance allowance from

Jai Singh. When he went to make the demand Jai Singh was supervising the taking out of the grain by his servants from the store godown. When he made the demand, Jai Singh got angry and said that "The demand should be made from Bijai Bahadur under whom she (Deo Kumari) lies with opened legs."
